The reasons I prefer gas coke for fuel is that it is pure carbon and it takes 3,400 pounds of gas coal to make 2,000 pounds of genuine gas house coke and in the process of making, you remove the coal gas, smoke, tar, ammonia, soot and sulphur from it, so that the consumers of coke have no smoke to blacken the exterior or interior of their homes and small amount of ashes to be carried out, as coke contains less than five per cent. ashes and no slate.

Crushed coke can be used in any stove or grate in which coal or wood is used and at a great saving and comfort over both coal and wood, providing you adhere to the following rules:

Keep the fire box as full as possible at all times.

Keep the ash pan empty at all times.

Keep the drafts closed as much as possible at all times.

Keep the check drafts open whenever possible.

Keep a layer of ashes on top of grates at all times.

Genuine gas house coke is the cleanest and most pleasant fuel to handle and burn and if burned according to the above instructions, one ton of coke will produce a great deal more heat than a ton of hard coal and at less expense. Coke once properly tried is always used.

Hoping you will increase the sales of coke also my pocketbook to the amount of five dollars ($5.00), I am Very truly yours,

B. F. HARTNETT.

WHAT SUFFRAGE LEADERS SAY ABOUT THE TIMES

Miss Tarbell Says:

1. It is very hard to say if suffrage would improve the condition of women in industry.

2. Probably the best laws we have in regard to women and children have been made in States where there is no woman suffrage.

3. I do not like to see our women get mixed up in politics because, of course, our public life is merely partisan politics.

4. I would rather see women doing less self-interested things (i. e., than voting).

5. The working woman is not worth very much. She has had no training. I believe people ought not to be allowed to work until they know their job.

6. It is not the men that are keeping woman suffrage away from the women; it is the women.

Mrs. Whitehouse Says:

1. Woman suffrage has in four States shortened the working day of women to eight hours. Five suffrage States have voted a minimum wage law for women.

2. All of the woman suffrage States have excellent child labor laws compulsory education laws, equal guardianship laws.

3. Where women have voted they have done away with the vicious partisan note.

4. What may seem selfishness to Miss Tarbell is, in the case of many working women, no more than the instinct of selfpreservation.

5. There is no understanding, no sympathy here; no view of the bitter necessity that drives thousands of women and chilrren into the dismal drudgeries.

6. There has never in the world's history been so large a proportion of any class asking to be enfranchised.

From her sickbed—she recently underwent an operation for appendictic—Mrs. Norman de R. Whitehouse, society leader and suffragist, has written especially for the Buffalo World the following reply to certain testimony by Miss Ida Tarbell, the writer, before the Industrial Relations Committee. Called by Mrs. William Astor "the most beautiful woman of the Four Hundred," Mrs. Whitehouse has marched in a suffrage parade, spoken from a soapbox at the City Hall ,opened a suffrage shop on Fifth Avenue and in many other ways proved her devotion to "The Cause." In the following article she analyses and answers each one of the six "anti" points made by Miss Tarbell.

By Vira Boarman Whitehouse

Have anything to say in answer to Miss Ida M. Tarbell's comments about woman suffrage before the Industrial Relations Committee? I have, indeed! All that Miss Tarbell said shows that she knows nothing of the woman suffrage movement either in principle or in its practical workings.

For instance, when Commissioner Harriman asked "Do you feel that suffrage would improve, or the reverse, the condition of women in industry?" Miss Tarbell answered that "It is very hard to say, I think sometimes it might improve it * * * it would depend on the condition."

Woman suffrage has in four States improved the condition of women in industry to the extent of shortening their working day to eight hours Isn't that a very definite improvement? No non-suffrage State has any such law. In fact, some of them—as Alabama and South Carolina—have no laws whatever for the protection of working women, although in the latter State thousands of women labor in the cotton mills.

Even in Massachusetts the laws protecting workingwomen are inadequately administered. There are 24 inspectors for 50,000 manufacturing plants; and four women inspectors only, although there are 40,000 women and children workers.

Five of the suffrage States have voted a minimum wage law for women, while only four of the 37 non-suffrage States have adopted it. I can't, of course, go into the many seperate instances of such protective legislation, but take, for example, the question of equal pay for equal work in government positions. Women stenographers, school teachers, etc., are commonly paid less than men who do precisely the same work. When women vote there will soon be an end to such discriminations.

The Good Things Woman Suffrage Had Done

Miss Tarbell again showed her ignorance of the facts when asked, "Has woman suffrage as far as you know helped to secure and enforce laws minimizing vice?" She said. "No, I don't know, I don't think that suffrage on that ground has had a fair enought test. Probably the best laws we have in regard to women and children have been made in States where there is no woman suffrage."

Miss Tarbell does not seem to know that where women have the vote the age of consent has been as a rule promptly raised. In many of the woman suffrage States it is now 18. Delaware in 1871 lowered its age of consent to seven years, where I believe it now remains. Surely, such a thing could never happen in a State where women vote. Kansas, Utah, Washington, Oregon and California have most excellent injunction and abatement laws, while on the other hand seven non-suffrage States have no State law whatever against disorderly houses.

All the equal suffrage States have also excellent child labor laws, while in the Southern States the conditions of child labor are notorious. Maryland recently lowered from 12 to 10 the age at which children may work in the canneries.

All the equal suffrage States have compulsory education laws. The States with the highest percentage of illiteracy are non-suffrage States. Some of them have no compulsory education laws, or very defective ones.

All of the woman suffrage States have equal guardianship laws. This is true of only seventeen of our forty-eight States. In six non-suffrage States the father is not only sole guardian of his children, but has the power to will them away from the mother, if he wishes. Even in New York the equal guardianship of law proves itself not really to be equal. In case of the separation of a couple the father may secretly apply to the court to have himself made guardian. The mother must give her husband ten days' notice, with full opportunity to defend the claim to the children.

Mothers' Pension Laws in Suffrage States

Seven of the Woman Suffrage States have adopted mothers' pensions, while a comparatively small proportion of the other States have done so.

Miss Tarbell evidently ignores much of this, But she is not rock-bound. She did admit that suffrage MIGHT improve the condition of women in industry. She followed this admission at once, however, by saying "I do not like to see women get mixed up in politics, because, of course, our public life is merely partisan politics as it goes now. And I would rather see them doing less self-interested things." This statement has an echo of the anti-suffrage speeches recently made in Congress, where it was repeatedly lamented that women should "drag their skirts through the mire of partisan politics."

How absurd it is to assume that self-government is, in itself, a grimy thing. To a believer in democracy such assertions are very irritating. If there is mire, it should be cleaned away, and not the whole vital field of politics deserted by all self-respecting men and women.

We hear it claimed that where women have voted they have succeeded in removing the grime of which Miss Tarbell complains—they have done away with the vicious partisans vote. There are, for instance, the non-partisan movements in Denver, engineered by women, that destroyed the gangs there and also the Seattle and San Francisco revolts and recalls.

But Miss Tarbell would see women "doing less self-interested things" than protecting their own conditions and the welfare of their homes and children. It is hard to be patient with such a view when one thinks of the tenement workers, the scrubbers in office buildings, the women in steam laundries, in cranberry bogs, and the factory workers upon whom doors are locked. What may seem selfishness to Miss Tarbell is, in their case, no more than the instinct of self-preservation.

When intelligent women like Miss Tarbell can see no particular reason why women should vote, an explanation can generally be found in the characters or the interests of such women. Vain, selfish women who have achieved success sometimes like to think they have done it in spite of their sex and all the difficulties it implies. They do not want to make the path easier for other women Then, too, when a successful woman's interests have never brought her in contact with her own sex she is likely to know nothing of their needs.

Miss Tarbell's Ignorance of Her Own Sex

Neither Miss Tarbell's interest nor her work has ever been among women. The whole nation respects her for her achievements, but her work has always been in connection with men and their money making problems. On this ground she is right. She knows and she is interested. She says: "Industrial unrest is a wonderful expression of the desire of men for more life. Men are going to get it, and they have a right to struggle to get it, and in that struggle they should have the help of the best of brains."

Of the working woman she says "She is not worth very much. Poor thing, how can she be? She has had no training. I believe people ought not to be allowed to go to work until they know the job."

There is no understanding, no sympathy here; no view of the bitter necessity that drives thousands of women and children into the dismal drurgeries.

When Commissioner Lehnen said to her; "Do you remember the time when in the coke fields of Pennsylvania women were to be seen firing the ovens practically stripped to the waists?"

"All she had to say was, "Yes, I have seen them doing that." She wasn't interested. Miss Tarbell is not intereated in women or their problems. She knows nothing of the suffrage situation upon which she comments so freely.

She says: 'Most of the men I know believe in suffrage It is not the men that are keeping suffrage away from the women; it is the women."

Of course it is the men to whom we must turn for the passage of our amendment. Does Miss Tarbell mean that women are keeping it away by their indifference? There she is wrong. There has never in the world's history been so large a proportion of any class asking to be enfranchised with such patience, persistency and courage.

If Miss Tarbell refers to the active opposition of the little bands of ladies who have formed themselves into anti-suffrage socities, then again she is wrong. The effective opposition to women voting does not come from these ladies, sincere and able as they may be. The opposition against which we must contend is that of every evil interests, corrupt machine politicians and the employers and exploiters of woman and child labor.

Let us pay all honor to Miss Tarbell when she talks or writes upon her own ground of men of business, but let us resent it when she attempts to speak as a representative of women and their interests.

CHEAPER MEAT AND SHOES PREDICTED.

Washington, Jan. 30 — The department of agriculture sees cheaper meat and shoes for people of the country in figures gathered by its agents showing that the number of live stock in the United States is on the increase.

In a statement issued yesterday the department discounted reports that prices were bound to rise and said that on January 1st there were 7,712,000 more live stock in the United States than on the same date a year ago. This was the first time in many years, the statement said, that an increase had been shown.

The number of beef cattle increased 3.4 per cent. over the number a year ago, or an actual increase of 1,212,000 head. Hitherto the number of beef cattle has declined steadily since 1910. Swine showed the greatest increase of all classes—9.6 per cent. On January 1st, 1914, there were only 58,933,000 swine in the country; on January 1st last, 64,618.000.

The Cause of Drafts.

Why is it that windows and doors are frequently ill fitting? There is, says a woodworker, nothing wrong with the wood itself, nor with the workmanship, as a rule, nor with the fit, at the outset at least, but the whole trouble is due to the wood being unseasoned, or, rather, only partially seasoned, at the time it is made up.

Canadian Proposes Project That Might Keep Open the St. Lawrence all Year

In yesterday's Oswego Times there was set forth a plan to make the St. Lawrence river navigable the year around as just been proposed by M. J. Butler, the retiring president of the Canadian Society of Civil Engineers. Mr. Butler plans to eliminate ice jams by means of dams and locks and keep navigation open with ice breakers.

"The greatest problem before the country at the present time," said Mr. Butler, "is the transportation question. We have, as a nation, undertaken the task of forcing our outlets against the line of least resistance. The Atlantic seaboard is the outlet for the products of the prairies, situated some 1,500 miles inland. Our efforts in building railways with easy curves and grades, the enlargement of our canal system and the improvement of rivers, and particularly of the St. Lawrence route, have but the one object of putting a few more cents a bushel into the pockets of our farmers. The enlargement of the Welland canal will allow the larger type of ship of 300,000 bushels capacity to pass down Lake Ontario and the river St. Lawrence to within 120 miles of Montreal. Great storage elevators will be erected at or near Prescott, and 1,000-ton barges will be towed through the present canal system to Montreal. Each incoming ship is known for days ahead, and the exact cargo of grain required can be in waiting for transfer by floating elevators.

"Ultimately, however, the larger lake ship will come through to Montreal, as it is quite practicable, and within the resources of the country, to convert the St. Lawrence river into slack water navigation by the building of eight dams, with duplicate locks, and as an incident thereof develop the greatest water power in the world, aggregating over 4,000,000 horse power, eliminate the ice jams, and make practicable the navigation of the river in winter by the aid of powerful icebreakers.

"It is a duty which our government may well undertake at the earliest possible moment to secure a hydrographic and topographic survey of the St. Lawrence, so that accurate estimates of cost may be made, and proper regulations may be drawn to so regulate proposed power developments owned by private corporations that each may be brought into a component part of the completed whole."

Life Lease to Property.

A life lease of the property at Erie and Singleton streets, Oswego, given by Edward and Mary T. Welch to Mary Ann Welch, was filed in the County Clerk's office yesterday. The lease provides that the parties shall occupy the house jointly and that no other person shall reside there without the consent of both. Furthermore, it is provided that the party of the second part shall pay taxes, and that if any money is advanced by the party of the first part, for such purpose, it shall be considered a gift.

The report of Floyd L. Carlisle, as committee of the estate of Addie H. Mann, an incompetent person filed today, shows that $782 04 was disbursed last year, leaving a balance of $2,039.42.

Translating by Ear.

Two schoolgirls were busily occupied with their lessons, when the younger spoke abruptly:

"What does 'avoirdupois' mean?"

"Well, I couldn't say just what it means in English," replied her friend, doubtfully, "but in French it means 'Have some peas.'"—Youth's Companion.

EXQUISITE EVENING FROCK WITH FULL GAUGED SKIRT.

The gown shown is uniquely constructed, being an overdress of taffeta over lace instead of the usual lace over silk. The bodice is cut in stripe and gathered in knots as is the bottom of the skirt. The bodice and skirt are joined with gauging, which is very popular at present.

George Johnston is directed by Judge Ray to deposit in court the sum of $598.35 on or before Monday, Feb. 1 or be adjudged a bankrupt. This order was secured yesterday by Attorney A. T. Jennings who represents unsecuted creditors of Mr. Johnston. The action is the result of a report made by Mr. Johnston to the court in which it was claimed that he could pay the amount due his unsecured creditors, with the proper consents and that the bankruptcy would be set aside and all prior orders vacated.

Johnston deposited certain money with the court, estimated at about $10,000, but Judge Ray, after totalling the costs and disbursements of the proceeding with the allowances to attorneys, discovered a shortage of $598.35 in the amount paid into court.

Unless the payment is made into court by the first of next month, Monday, or Mr. Johnston shows sufficient cause why he should not be adjudicated a bankrupt, it is claimed the matter will be referred to Referee Avery S. Wright of Oswego and then at the first meeting of creditors a trustee will be elected and certain of the assets ordered sold to satisfy claims of creditors.

"SANITO" COOKING UTENSILS

are a necessity for housekeepers who wish to excel in domestic science. They are the only American-made cooking ware which absolutely reproduces the high priced, imported German utensils, so universally used abroad. SANITO utensils have an acid proof lining which cannot crack or scale off and retains nothing to taint or discolor the food. When cooked in SANITO the food cooks evenly, retains all its juices and flavors and never scorches or burns. SANITO is a nonconductor of heat and after being heated to the cooking point—212 degrees—it requires but a very small gas flame to complete the cooking process. With proper care SANITO will last a life time.

PRESIDENT OF BARACAS WILL MEET WORKERS.

Syracuse, Jan. 30.—James C. Johnson of Buffalo, new president of the New York State Baraca and Philathea Bible class union spent today in Syracuse. There are 1,300 classes in New York, and Mr. Johnson is to visit all of them as early in his administration as possible.

Today he conferred with M. A. Hudson, national president, and other workers in view of getting familiar with such details as require his attention, and at 2.30 o'clock tomorrow afternoon all of the classes of the city will hold a conference at the First Baptist church with Mr. Johnson. There are fifty Baraca and Philathea classes in Syracuse. As many members as possible are urged to meet Mr. Johnson in the Sunday school assembly room. Luncheon will be served.

At night Mr. Johnson will assist Rev. Dr. W. W. Dawley in a mass meeting the church auditorium, when he will speak on "Turning a City Upside Down." M. Hawley Hudson is president of the First aptist union. There will be special music under the auspices of W. G. Monk, and Charles M. Courboin will play the organ.

300 PERSONS DRIVEN INTO STREETS BY FLAMES.

New York, Jan. 30.—A seven year old bay was killed and ten persons were injured in a fire of mysterious origin which gutted the three four-story frameb uildings at 4716-4720 3d ave., Brooklyn, early today. Three hundred persons, scantily clad, were driven to the streets, most of them by way of fire escapes.

The dead boy was William Schleenbecker. His father and sister were carried to the street in a semi-conscious condition. The boy had missed his father and ran into a back room to search for him. He was overcome and was dead when found.

An early report stated that six persons were missing, but these later were accounted for.

CORNELL LEADS.

Washington, Jan. 30.—The Massachusetts "Aggies" and the Michigan "Aggies" were tied today with scores of 971 as a result of the third match shoot this week in the intercollegiate rifle shooting competition for the National championship.

Ten more teams entered the shoot this week. The other scores: Cornell university 964.

BURLEIGH NAMES SIBER GATETENDER AT PHOENIX.

Syracuse, Jan. 30.—David S. Burleigh, assistant superintendent of public works in charge of the middle division of the canals, announced yesterday the appointment of Orvil Siber of Phoenix as gatetender on the Phoenix dam. He succeeds Patrick Murphy of West Phoenix.

Although the position pays only $50 a month, the announcement of the appointment is important because it is certain others will follow. Mr. Burleigh arranged for two other appointments yesterday afternoon, but he was not prepared to announce either because the resignations of the men to be displaced have not yet reached him, although they have been requested.

The appointment of Elmer J. Clark of this city as superintendent of section 6 of the Erie canal was announced yesterday from the office of General W. W. Wotherspoon at Albany. Mr. Clark held the same position under the last Republican administration and his reappointment was expected. The salary is $1,762.

M. W. A. MEMBERSHIP CONTEST GOING ON.

The members of the Modern Woodmen of America have divided themselves into two divisions for the purpose of securing new members, and the team securing the lesser number will "treat" the winners. The contest started last Wednesday and thus far it has proved an exciting one.

Beginning next Wednesday night, a pool tournament is to be played between the members. Captains have been chosen who will select the players. The game will continue until all the members have played.

It is expected that a lot of humor will be derived from the tournament, as many of the members have not in all their lives played a game of pool.

News Oddities

New York—Miss Mary Meaz fainted when Michael Benecky, a rejected suitor, drew a revolver and fired at her. She dropped just in time to avoid being struck. Thinking he had killed her, Benecky turned the weapon on himself, dying instantly.

New York—Thomas H. Lovejoy, an Englishman, who was accused of shooting a Russian storekeeper during a war argument, but acquitted by a jury on which Six Germans served, sailed for England today to Enlist in the British army to fight the Kaiser's troops.

Paris—Sergeant Paul Marchand, of the French army, has returned from the front bearing 197 wounds.

Bayonne, N. J.—Isaac Kohnisky, who declares that a Pennsylvania agent pulled his beard five times, has sued the Pennsylvania railroad for $5,000 or $1,000 per yank.

COMMITTEE FAVORABLE TO OPEN AIR SCHOOL.

The special committee to consider the plan for an open-air school for this city reported favorably at a meeting of the Fulton branch of the State Charities Aid Society in the Citizens Club last night.

The next step to be taken is to secure a capable teacher. It is thought that no difficulty will be experienced in securing rooms in the old Falley Seminary Building, and the opinion prevailed after tonight's meeting that the school will be in full operation in two weeks.

GERMANS NOT BLOCKING RUSSIAN'S NEW ARMY.

Petrograd, Jan. 30.—The northern column of the new Russian army of invasion is marching on Tiflis, meeting with but feeble resistance from the Germans, it is officially announced today. Only 300 of the 6,000 inhabitants of Tillkallen remained when the Russians entered that town.

Hudson County Man Accused of Cruelty

Jersey City, Jan. 30. — Charging cruelty, inhuman treatment and improper conduct, Mrs. Sarah G. Schellhorn of Weehawken, today filed a suit for absolute divorce against Joseph Schellhorn, a wealthy real estate operator, who has been more or less prominent in Hudson county politics for a number of years. She is 62 years old; he is 64. They have two sons.

In her complaint Mrs. Schellhorn sets forth a remarkable series of unhappy domestic incidents. Her alleged persecutions are climaxed by a night raid made on a cottage in Allendale one cold night this month when her husband and another woman made their escape by means of a back door and a swift automobile.

The couple was married in 1881 in St. Louis. They went to Little Rock where Mr. Schellhorn rose to be one of the vice presidents of the Iron Mountain railroad. They came east in 1891. In 1900 the complaint alleges he began his cruel treatment. The complaint charges. He rhusband wished her to die so that he could marry again. Determined to shun his wife he kept two rooms to himself and gave orders that neither his wife nor his sons were to enter them. He ordered the water and gas companies to remove the meters of their Weehawken home so his wife would suffer. He also had the steam pipes disconnected.

GERMANS MAKE GAINS IN ARGONNE DISTRICTS.

Berlin, by wireless, Jan. 30.—Gains near the Las Bassee canal and in the west of the Argonne district are claimed for the Germans in an official statement issued by the General Staff this afternoon. THE TIMID WOMAN

One of Billy Sunday's Latest Sermons

Philadelphia, Jan. 29.—Billy Sunday's sermon last night was on the topic, "The Timid Woman." He said: The scene of this story is in Capernaum. Our Lord has but recently returned from the country of the Gadarenes, on the other side of the Sea of Galilee. On the way over He had stilled the tempest, and while there He had healed the wild man who was filled with a legion of demons, and the people there had besought Him to leave the country as quick as he could, for in saving a man 2,000 hogs had been lost, and they didn't want any more work done for them at that price.

I can see some of those old hog raisers wringing their hands and declaring that the whole country is going to be ruined, unless the Man who sent their swine galloping headlong into the sea can be persuaded to depart from their coast, and not cast out any more devils in their pigworshiping land.

What did it matter if homes were unhappy, if women and children were having to live in want, fear and wretchedness?

What did it matter if men were being robbed of their manhood by the demons that possessed them and made like wild beasts so savage that they would break their chains, and ragged and wounded and bloody, would become a terror to all who came near them in the place of the dead?

What did it matter if people were sometimes killed, and houses were sometimes burned down and much property destroyed by these wild men?

What did it matter if taxes were made higher by the ravages caused by them? Hogs had been raised in untold numbers. Their madness had never done the hog business any harm and the swine trade was a great thing among the Gadarenes.

Didn't it give employment to a lot of men who looked after them and fed them, and took better care of them than they did of their own wives and children?

"Destroy this blessed hog business and down goes everything," they said.

So they wiped their eyes on their hogskin coat sleeves, threw up their hands imploringly, and besought Jesus to turn His back on them as quick as possible, for every minute He tarried more and more hogs were rushed into the sea.

Hog Business Like Whiskey Business

Isn't that just like the whiskey business at this time?

Oh, it is a blessed business! Don't it give employment to a multitude of folks? Don't lawyers and sheriffs, and jail keepers and contractors who supply penitentiaries get a rich living from the stream of dollars it turns their way?

Don't it bring men to town to trade?

Don't it promote sociability and good feeling among the people?

Don't they shake hands more in the saloons than they do in the churches?

Don't the license fees pave the streets and make a lot of public improvements.

Don't it do this, and doesn't it do that?

You might have heard a good eal of that same kind of talk about the untold benefits of the hog business that day in Gadara, as delegation after delegation came up to Jesus and besought Him to depart out of their coasts.

It makes a lot of difference in this world as to whether we look at things from a hog standpoint or from a manhood or a womanhood and childhood basis.

The man who thinks more of his pigs than he does of his wife and babies is the devil's idea of what a husband and father should be.

You can bring heaven and hell together when you can bring whiskey and Jesus Christ together. Holding a dollar within an inch of a man's nose will make him stone blind to everything that is good.

So when the Gadarenes declared in such unmistakable terms that they preferred their hogs to decent men, Jesus took them at their word, as He always does, and returned with His disciple across the sea, telling the man for whom he had done so much to go back to his home and tell what great things had been done for him.

It would make mighty good reading if we could only know how much that man's testimony hurt the hog business."

Jesus Never Refused Plea for Childhood.

Early the next morning, as Jesus was taking His morning walk with His disciples, Jairus came to Him with great trouble in his heart and said:

"My little daughter lieth at the point of death. I pray Thee come and lay Thy hand on her, that she may be healed, and she shall live."

And Jesus, followed by a great crowd of people, started at once to go with him, for there is no case on record of His turning a deaf ear to any father or mother who went to Him in trouble on account of a child, and this ought to give parents confidence, for He is just the same today as He was that morning, when He started so promptly for the home of Jairus.

How many little children in Gadara were at the point of death when Jesus was there, and who might have been saved from death had not their hog-raising fathers besought Him to depart out of their coasts, but these who would rather keep hogs than Christ cannot expect to see their children raised from the dead.

The man who is engaged in the business of damning other people's children has nobody to blame but himself if his own are lost, for a curse that is willfully turned loose on others is sure to return on him who sent it.

As Jesus and the great crowd led by Jairus is passing along the street suddenly the Master stops and says:

"Who touched me?"

And like children at school when some wrong is discovered everybody says, "Not I, not I," and Peter, in his usual brusque and impulsive way, says: "Why, Master, with all this crowd so close around you, how can you ask, 'Who touched Me?'?"

And the next moment a timid woman comes forward and falls trembling at His feet and declares with sobs of joy before them all how she had reached out and touched the hem of His garment and was healed of a trouble that had been eating away her life for years.

Jesus Never Lingers Long to Help.

Perhaps Jairus may have chafed somewhat at the delay by the woman who thought to get a blessing without anybody knowing it, and perhaps he may have said to himself, "We shall be too late, and my daughter will die. Why couldn't she have waited a little longer? If she had waited twelve years another hour wouldn't have made much difference."

But nobody ever loses anything by waiting on Jesus. If He undertakes your case He will always see it through. Don't be anxious about His part of the work for you. He may seem to linger sometimes, as He did in the case of Lazarus, but He never gets there too late.

And now that the scene is before us in its proper setting, let us see what lesson there is for us in the story of the timid woman.

I believe it may be taken for granted that her case is a typical one. Just such things are always going on, and I believe that Jesus halted the throng about Him that morning for the purpose of giving encouragement to His disciples and to show them that they could always count on results when they did their best in His name, even when none could be seen.

It is necessary that the disciples of Christ should learn to live by faith, for it will not do to judge from appearances as to what God is doing. A life-long impression was made upon the disciples that morning by the halting of the crowd there in the street, to show them that a great work had been done when they had not been expecting anything at all. Peter, James and John and the others were probably thinking of what was going to happen when they reached the house of Jairus, but they had no thought of anything being done before they got there.

We look for great things when we have the revival meeting next winter, but we are not looking for anything before then. Something may happen on Sunday, the preacher thinks, when the church is filled with people, but nothing is expected in the little prayer meeting, where only a few old standbys are gathered.

Parable of Sower Is Always True.

By Jesus stopping that crowd in the street we have the right to expect something now, whether we ever learn what it is this side of heaven or not. Something is going to happen ow. You can depend on it, as sure as God is God.

Wherever good seed is sown He will see to it that it grows, for the parable of the sower is always true.

The preacher never knows what the full result of his message has been, and it is a good thing that he cannot, for if he did he would sometimes be so puffed up with pride that his wife couldn't live with him, and at other times he would be so discouraged that he would stop preaching and go into the life insurance business.

Halted the Throng as Lesson in Faith

All power comes from God, we are told, and no man, no matter how great he may be, judged by our standards, can do anything of himself. His power to do must come from God and we must get in the habit of looking at things in this way.

And so I believe the Lord halted the throng that morning to help His disciples to take al ong step in faith, that they in turn might pass the lesson down to us; that wherever He is, and wherever His faithful servant is, something that God is satisfied with is being done, and that away down in the eternities heaven will ring again and again with the music of our rejoicing over infinite surprises.

Away beyond the time when some of the brightest stars have grown dim we shall meet souls in the eternal world who felt the touch of Christ as unmistakably as the timid woman, through effort of ours when we didn't dream when we had done a thing."

Even our failures are sometimes the very thing God needs to bring about certain results.

George Washington when a boy had his heart set on being a midshipman in the British navy, and the arrangement was all made for him to go, but his mother weakened at the last moment and would not give her consent.

Had that 16-year-old boy had his way, perhaps the Revolutionary War might never have been fought.

A preacher was once preaching a written sermon, when right at the beginning of the most important part of it, as he thought, some of his pages were blown out of the window and lost, and he had to stop right there in mortification.

Years afterward he met a man who had been converted as the result of the very meeting, through the awakening that came from the last thought given before the sermon took wings through the window.

t ought to help our faith a great deal to find out that God can even use a written sermon. If He can do that I don't see why any kind of a preacher should ever have the blues.

In every congregation there is somebody like the timid woman—somebody who has been going to other doctors for years, without getting any help, but rather growing worse, and now they have come to the conclusion that they will as a last resort try Jesus.

It was a desperate resolve the woman made, but here was a desperate case and so was mine and yours. It was the only thing she could do.

Had she only had one more dollar to try one more doctor, that procession toward the sorrowing home of Jairus would not have halted in the street of Capernaum that morning. She couldn't do anything else and she couldn't be any worse off if she failed, so she made the venture.

Venturing on Christ is the best day's work anybody can ever do. She ventured, though with great timidity.

God Sees Plan and Lets it go at That.

Many a poor soul has said: "If I can be baptized by immersion I shall be saved," and they tried it and it worked. Something was done, and they were saved, just as they believed they would be.

Another has said: "I will join this church or that, and I believe that if I do I will be saved," and they tried it, and it worked, just as they believed it would, and they didn't have to go under the water at all.

They made their own little plan and od looked into their hearts, and saw they were walking in all the light they had, and He let it go at that.

Another said: "If I can only get up out of bed, and get down on my knees and pray I believe I will be saved," and he tried it and it worked.

And another said: "If I can only take the communion I shall be saved," and he tried it and it worked, and some of these who made their own plans the best they could, and tried them anu found salvation by doing it, were our fathers and our mothers, and they are in heaven now, because Jesus knew what they meant as He looked into their poor hungry hearts and He blessed them because they did the best they knew, and He will do it with you, my brother, and with you, my sister, if you will only take the step you believe in your souls you ought to take, and will take it now.

Yes, all the little plans of which I have been telling you, and a great many more, worked, and yet every theologian knows they were all wrong; and you say so yourself when you take them all to pieces and look into them, like a botanist looks at a flower; but thank God, He can and does save people, and He does it in a hurry, in spite of wrong theology.

Men Find Salvation in Spite of Theology.

Theology may stand up and tell you until it is black in the face that all the water in the world can't save a sinner, by his being baptized in it; for water has nothing to do with it; it is the blood of Christ that saves, and yet everybody who has got into the kingdom in that way knows that theology is talking through its hat, for they tried it and it worked.

Theology will tell you that joining the church won't lift you toward heaven an inch—and I say it too, if there is no faith in Christ behind it—they know they must do something or be lost, and so they blunder toward God the best they know now, and in their doing it they get a touch from Christ that saves them through and through.

It is a thousand times better to blunder toward God in the worst kind of a way than it is to do nothing at all.

Theology will also tell you that there is nothing in a mourners' bench, and that you may pray to your dying day; for prayer alone cannot save, and that you may take the communion without getting any help, or whatever else you will, and yet never get rid of your sins, because these things are all nothing in themselves, and it is true, every word of it, just as theology says, but poor sinful souls have tried them, some one, and some another, and they worked with them, and they were saved because they just stepped out and blundered toward God the best they could, as the poor timid woman did.

Thank God that Jesus wasn't a hair-splitter, that He wasn't hide-bound, and dead set on having everything done in an iron-clad and legal way, as was the case with the men with broad philacteries who nailed Him to the cross, just because He wouldn't do their way.

I thank God tonight Philadelphia has the same kind of a heart that a mother has when she sees her little child fall down flat when it is doing its best to come to her when she calls

About Sports Generally

By FRANK G. MENKE.

New York, Jan. 30.—Jim Flynn, the "old war horse" of the ring game has the two essentials that about 99 per cent of our hope-less "white hopes" lack—the fighting heart and bulldog courage.

If Flynn had the height and the bulk of Jess Willard there wouldn't be a fighter in the world white or black who could last four rounds with him. But Flynn unfortunately for the white race, is skimpy in size, and therefore, never was nor never can be a champion-ship possibility.

Flynn is nearing the end of his pugilistic career. He has been fighting for 14 years—and fighting every time he got the chance. But when Flynn disappears from the pugilistic horizon he won't be forgotten. The public doesn't forget the man who tries—even if he fails.

Flynn knows but little about the science of the ring game. Perhaps he has showed up a bit because of his advanced years but his courage and fighting spirit shall remain. Flynn is the rushing type of a fighter—as was Tom Sharkey—and, like Sharkey, he always has given the public the best he had.

Flynn tackled Jack Johnson in 1912 when Johnson was near the height of his career and at a time when all other white fighters were cowering themselves in cyclone cellars. Flynn wasn't afraid of any fighter in the world at any time during his 14 years as a fighter—and Flynn isn't afraid now. Flynn has fought Jack Johnson, Sam Langford and Jack (Twin) Sullivan twice each.

The public fireman has tackled the best men in the ring game. He has met Jack Root, Tommy Burns, Luther McCarty, "Philadelphia Jack" O'Brien, Jim Barry, Al Kaufman, Gunboat Smith, Jim Coffey, and Morris, who was nine inches and about sixty pounds heavier than Flynn and not once could the great Morris score a decisive victory.

Flynn has mingled in about ninety important ring battles since he began his career in 1901. The result follows: Won by knockout 33; won by decision, 16; won on fouls, 3; draws, 24; lost by knock-out 10; lost by decision, 4; lost on fouls, 1.

Flynn, whose real name is Andrew Chariglione (which is not an Irish name by any means) was born in Brooklyn, New York, in 1879. That makes Flynn 36 years old at the present time. Flynn began fighting in 1901 and so hasn't been doing much else since.

Flynn is 5 feet 9 inches tall an d weighs around 170 pounds.

Flynn has fought more battles than any man in the ring today and that includes Jack Johnson who began his ring career in the same year as Flynn. Yet Flynn hasn't made a fortune out of the ring game as have many others who have not fought less. That is because Flynn never haggled over terms when a fight was offered him. He accepted the first offer, because the acceptance meant that he was going to fight. The love of fighting always has been stronger with Flynn than the love of money, a strange, almost weird fact concerning a present day pugilist. Flynn always has been a pretty good drawing card. Why? Simply because when he gets into the ring he fights from the tap of the first gong until the tap of the last.

An exchange says: "There are 100,000,000 persons in the United States and of that number 99,999,999 hope to see Jack Johnson beaten in Juarez." If that's true, the promoters will have to enlarge the arena a bit.

Maybe the exchange meant that 99,999,999 of our 100,000,000 want to hear about Johnson being knocked out. If so, who is that person who doesn't? Johnson isn't numbered among our population any more.

JANUARY TERM CLOSES. A MOST ACTIVE TERM.

Oswego, Jan. 28.—The January term of Supreme Court came to a close today, after four weeks' session. The last case tried was that of Lena B. Hengerer vs. Louis Levi and Josie Levi, to recover damages for alleged breach of contract involving property at Fulton. The amount involved was $500. This case was tried without a jury and the principal witness was Hunter L. Betts of Phoenix, brother of the plaintiff, and who drew the papers in the transaction. O. M. Kelly of Phoenix appeared for the plaintiff and W. S. Hillick of Fulton represented the defendants.

Justice Crouch ordered a non-suit in the action of Nellie Waters vs. Anna Frazier Cunningham, as executrix of the estate of Richard Frazier, deceased. The parties lived in Granby. The plaintiff sued to recover $1,000, which she claimed Mr. Frazier had promised to bequeath her if she lived in his family until she was sixteen years old. An agreement to this effect drawn up between Mr. Frazier and Mr. Hall, father of the plaintiff, was produced in court, and was confirmed by Mr. Hall. The courts have held, however, that there must be evidence outside of interested parties to prove such agreements and none was offered on the trial. The decision was reached by Justice Crouch this morning only after a long and spirited argument between Mr. Reilly against the motion and Judge Bulger in favor. The case had previously been tried and a non-suit granted.

The term now closing has not been active, although a number of cases were disposed of. The remarkable feature of the court has been the small verdicts given. The largest was one of $2,500 in favor of Miss Ella Rowbothan against the city of Oswego for a fall on a defective sidewalk. The others have averaged $200 in negligence cases. In all thirty-three cases were disposed of, sixteen being settled.

YOUNG MEN SEEK WORK ON FARMS

Places Desired by Students of the State College of Agriculture

Ithaca, Jan. 29.—When the winter courses close, about February 13th, at the New York state college of agriculture, it is announced that there will be a considerable number of young men seeking work on farms. According to the college authorities most of these young men have always lived and worked on farms.

Some of them are from 25 to 35 years of age and have enough practical experience to warrant their seeking places as farm superintendents or frm managers. Many of them have had sufficient experience to fit them to assume considerable responsibility and to act as farm foremen. Some expect to work as farmhands. Practically none of these men are married and none are prepared to work farms on shares.

There are also listed at the college a number of former students who are seeking places. Some of these are married. Some were regular students and have had four years of college training. Others were special or winter-course students.

The college would like to correspond with persons desiring to secure farm help—especially with those who are willing to pay something above ordinary farm wages in order to secure help competent to carry considerable responsibility. At times, of course, there are many inexperienced students seeking places, but the college states that at this period of the year most of the men leaving the winter courses have had considerable practical experience.

It is requested that persons who write to the college about such help should state with considerable detail kind of farming, and the terms prosor J. L. Stone, College of Agriculture, posed. They should address Profes-the location and size of the farm the Ithaca, N. Y.

FOUR KINDS OF LOVE; SAYS SCHOOL GIRL.

Chicago, Jan. 30.—There are four kinds of love—self-sacrificing selfish, infatuation and mere affection.

Miss Carol Cody, a university of Chicago co-ed says so. She's "sweet and twenty" and engaged and is confident she knows all about what poets philosophers, and writers of romance have tried to define.

Here are her conclusions:

"True love or self-sacrificing is the highest type of expression of which a woman is capable. It is the only approach to happiness.

"Selfish love is the kind that makes a brute of a man in a panic; that causes a woman to forget her baby when her house is afire.

"Infatuation is the kind of a 'crush' that makes the girl forget every one else except the object of the 'crush.'

"The affection kind is that which practices love but does not understand it."

Shoveling Better Than Plowing.

The village of Lacona has discontinued the practice of plowing the walks and during the past week has benn shoveling them with excellent results. Provision is made for those who cannot shovel their own walks. There is a growing interest in the shoveling of the walks in Sandy Creek, and many of them are kept free of snow. The plowing which was done during the thaw of last week has made it possible for the walks to be kept in much better shape, and when the sun gets in its work they will be free from snow and ice much earlier than would otherwise be the case.—News, Sandy Creek.

K. of C. Card Party

The Oswego Times says:

A card party for the benefit of the St. Vincent de Paul society will be held Monday night at the K. of C. rooms. The funds realized will be used for the alleviation of distress among the poor of the city, without regard to creed or other condition. The organization is in charge of the Fourth Degree assembly, Knights of Columbus. It was founded here about twelve years ago by the late Very Rev. Dean Barry and has been active in relieving the poor of the city ever since.

War: Pathos and Humor

Berlin, Jan. 30.—The greatest pleasure German soldiers enjoy while doing duty at the front is a bath. A. H. Zeiz, a private, sent a letter to relatives living here, in which he tells how he and his comrades had to walk seven miles, ride in a train for an hour and to march again, in order to have the privilege of enjoying a shower bath lasting exactly 10 minutes. He writes:

"The army corps to which I belong has given the boys the finest Christmas present one can imagine out here, a bathing establishment. The cooling room of a large brewery has been transformed into a bathing place. The pipes that carried warm beer in times of peace are now charged with warm water.

"We were quartered in Thielt, seven miles from Lichterfellde in West Flanders, doing reserve duty. We had plenty to eat and our cheeks, that had become thin and haggard, were filling out again. But one thing was missing to make our pleasure complete, a chance to stand under a shower of clear water.

"One day an order came from division hearquarters telling us our regiment would be permitted to bathe. For each company a certain time was fixed. We had to march seven miles to Lichterfelde, where we boarded a train. It took us one hour to reach Roulers. There we had to march again. Then we had to wait two hours before our turn came.

"Twenty minutes were allotted to each company. Taking five minutes for undressing and five minutes more for dressing again we had just ten minutes for bathing. I never enjoyed a bath like this one. Members of the sanitary company acted as bath attendants. They had furnished a barber shop where we wild men were transformed into civilized human beings for the small sum of four cents.

"After bathing and shaving we took part in a Christmas celebration. A tree was lit up with candles and all the men received hot coffee and cakes. We sang several Christmas songs and our captain then distributed packages containing presents, such as pipes, shirts, socks and other warm wearing apparel.

"But the most highly appreciated present was the bath. All the boys are idolizing the commander of our corps for giving us a chance to wash the outer man and everybody is going to fight so much the harder for him."

Motor Car Registrations

Secretary of State Hugo has issued a report of the automobile registration for the different counties of the State. In 1913 Oswego county registered with the department 881 cars, the fees exacted for that number being 6,829. In 1914 there was a substantial increase, or a total of 1,290 vehicle licenses issued, the fees for which amounted to 9,869.

BIG MOTOR BOAT SHOW

New York, Jan. 30.—The exhibition of motor boats was opened for a week in Madison Square Garden today. There is a wonderful advance in design and speed over anything shown heretofore. There is also considerable improvement in motors and silencers. The government has taken not only part in the exhibition, but great interest. The cheapest of crude oils will be used as fuel in some of the fastest types.

Amos Spriggs' Valentine

A Missive Long Delayed Held a Message of Love

By CLARISSA MACKIE

Mr. Amos Spriggs dusted the shelves and counters of his stationery shop, and as he flicked the frazzled feather duster he whistled a vague tune which now and then came to an abrupt halt when the door opened to admit a customer.

"I want to see your valentines, Mr. Spriggs," was the customer's invariable greeting, and although Amos had discarded sentiment for dollars and cents these many years past, he bustled to and fro, displaying many airy, delicate confections of gilt and lace paper, hearts and cupids, flying ribbons and poetical pleas, until at last the boxes were empty.

valentines while Amos Spriggs telephoned to Whitehall, the nearest town, to see if the shopkeeper there could spare some of the tender missives.

"Seems as if folks was possessed this year," complained the man in Whitehall. "I'm all sold out myself; sorry I can't accommodate you."

Amos hung up the receiver.

"It's only 4 o'clock now," he murmured. "Folks will be coming all the evening asking for something I haven't got."

Amos lighted the swinging lamps about the store and ate his supper in the lonely sitting room in the rear.

He had inherited the business from his father and at his mother's death had moved out of the comfortable homestead to the snug rooms behind the shop.

The shop bell rang, and Amos went out in his leisurely, dignified way to wait upon the customer.

"Oh, good evening, Jerry," said Amos, when Miss Evalina Terry's coachman turned his black, shining face toward him. Jerry was sixty odd years and a picturesque character with his white, woolly head protected by one of old Judge Terry's ancient high hats, and his erect form clad in an equally antiquated fur lined ulster.

"What can I do for you, Jerry?" asked Amos across the counter.

"Miss Evalina sent me after valumtimes, sah. Seems like she ordered some from de city, and dey ain't never camed. Shucks! It am a pity, and her habin' so many nieces and nephyews and Sunday school chillen to 'member. She asked me to stop in Miss Sue Bruce's and ask Miss Sue to come heah an' pick out de valumtimes, but Miss Sue's gone over to Whitehall, and so I came on my own 'sponsibility."

Evalina Terry had been a sweetheart of his, and the rupture between them had never been healed.

"It will be a hard matter for you to make a choice, Jerry, unless you have a list of what Miss Terry needs."

The old man fumbled in his pockets. "Heah's de list she sent Miss Sue," he said, producing a folded paper.

"Dear me, Jerry," cried Amos suddenly, aghast. "I haven't got a valentine in the shop. I'm all sold out!"

"No valumtimes, Mr. Spriggs. Lordy, but Miss Evaline will be all ter pieces. If it wasn't fo' de rheumatis in her feet I declar' she'd soon's go over to Whitehall as not in de snow and all. She did it once twenty yeahs ago, sah."

"Yes?" asked Amos absently. He could not imagine the sparkling Evaline of twenty years ago crippled.

"Yo'r pa always had valumtimes a-plenty," went on Jerry reminiscently. "He kept 'em in dat old green box on de highest shelf next to de inkstands. Lawsy, Mr. Spriggs, 'scuse me, but you ain't no housekeeper no ways. I declare if you've cleaned off dat top shelf."

"I never have, Jerry," he explained. "You see, my father had just finished arranging that top shelf when he fell to the floor and was killed. I never could bear to touch it."

"I understand, sah," said Jerry soberly. Then, with animation, he added, "Like as not there's valumtimes left in de green box."

Amos brought a stepladder and mounted to the top shelf. The green box was dusty, and he brushed it carefully before he removed the cover and displayed to Jerry's delight a heap of valentines of twenty years back.

"Well, well!" murmured Amos as he sorted out the valentines. "Now, who would have believed these were waiting here all the time?"

Jerry put on a pair of silver bowed spectacles and examined the valentines.

"Some of dese here are pretty scrumptious," chpckled Jerry. "Valumtimes is all very well, Mr. Spriggs, but of co'se dey's mostly for white folks. And dat reminds me of erbout twenty yeahs ago, sah, when Miss Evalina was only eighteen. She was sot on buying a most 'ticular valumtime. But she wouldn't buy it offen yo'r pa, Mr. Spriggs. Miss Evalina was most 'ticular. She bought a lot of fancy ones from yo'r pa, but dis one 'ticular she wouldn't buy here no ways. So she got on her black pony and rid him to Whitehall and buyed the valumtime there."

"Yes?" asked Amos absently.

He was looking at one especially handsome valentine, a delicate lacy thing of roses and forgetmenots and gilded hearts.

He had picked out a valentine just like this one twenty years ago. He had sent it to Evalina Terry. And from that moment Evalina had grown cool toward him.

Was there anything about that verse to anger quick tempered Evalina?

"Dis am a hansum one, sah," said Jerry, laying a finger on the one in Amos' hand.

"Yes."

I might take dat one, sah."

Amos replaced the cover on the box and wrapped it in paper.

"Take the box up to Miss Terry and tell her to choose the ones she wants. She can send the others back in the morning," said Amos.

After Jerry had departed with the box Amos sat down before the stove and picked up the evening paper. But it was strangely uninteresting.

Valentines danced before his eyes—hearts and cupids and foolishly tender verses.

"I never received a valentine in my life," said Amos regretfully, and he blushed at the thought.

"I am getting old!" he declared, and to distract his thoughts he got out the duster and attacked the shelves once more.

About 9 o'clock there came the sound of sleigh bells, and presently Jerry came in stamping the snow from his boots.

"Miss Evalina, she insisted I should bring dese back tonight," he said regretfully. "Seems laik she took most all of 'em, Mr. Spriggs."

"Yes?"

Amos took the box and looked down at the half dozen valentines which were left. He looked them over.

The pretty one was missing! She had kept the one whose duplicate had reached her one morning twenty years ago.

Did that mean she had forgotten his other valentine—that sentiment was quite dead?

"Miss Evalina made a terribul fuss about dat rosy valentine," remarked Jerry. "She cried."

"Cried?" repeated Amos in horror. "Why should she do that?"

"Lawsy, Mr. Spriggs, I don't know de ways of wimmen folks, white or black," declared the old servant. "All I know is she got terribul white and then she cried and said she hated that valumtime; it was always ha'nting her, and it had spoiled her life. When she saw me thar she got mad's a hornet and sent me flying. You know Miss Evalina always was spunky, sah."

Amos made no reply. His thoughts were in a turmoil.

Why should Evalina care after all these years? What was there about that valentine to awaken her anger at this late day?

As if in answer to his questions, Jerry uttered a startled cry.

"Fo' de lin's sake, if de bottom ain't dropped outer dis yere pocket!"

He fumbled in the skirts of the fur lined overcoat which had once belonged to Judge Terry. "Looky at dese letters, Mr. Spriggs! I cain't read."

Amos took three crumpled envelopes, addressed and stamped in Evalina's Terry's graceful, girlish handwriting.

One was addressed to her cousin in Dorchester, another to Milly Bown and the third, in an embossed envelope, was for himself!

"I reckon de jedge took dose letters to mail and jest natchurally forgot 'em," was Jerry's explanation. "He was powerful forgetful, Mr. Spriggs."

"Jerry," said Amos, with sudden decision, "I'm going home with you. Wait until I close the shop."

"Yes, sah," gasped Jerry, for he had heard rumors of the old love affair between his mistress and Amos Spriggs.

Half an hour later Amos Spriggs got out of the sleigh and went up the front steps of the Terry house. Jerry's wife answered the door and admitted Amos to the cold splendor of the north parlor.

"It am rather late, Mr. Spriggs. I'll see if Miss Evalina has gone to bed."

Amos waited in the familiar room, wondering at the perversity of fate which had brought him back to Evalina's house after many years.

Martha's voice broke his reverie.

Evalina Terry sat in a high backed chair before a fire of glowing coals. Against the crimson damask of the chair her face looked out, dark, sparkling as of old. Her black hair, unchanged by time, was guiltless of cap, and in her crimson house gown she looked like a girl again.

Her crippled little feet were propped on a footstool and in her lap was a heap of old valentines.

"How do you do, Amos?" she asked in her old vivacious manner.

Amos came forward and put his hand in hers. "I am sorry you are not very well," he said awkwardly.

"Well—Amos, I am well tonight!" Her eyes sparkled. "I have a story to tell you. Sit down—here, beside me!"

Amos drew a chair to Evalina's side and sat down, his wondering eyes fixed on her transfigured face.

"Twenty years ago, Amos," said Evalina softly, "I set out to buy a valentine. It had to be a very special valentine—for one I loved.

"There was a reason why I could not purchase this particular valentine at your father's shop."

Amos turned and looked steadily at her downcast face.

"So I took Jerry and went over to Whitehall and bought one. That night I inclosed it in an envelope and gave it to my father, with other letters, to mail.

"The next day, St. Valentine's day, Amos, I received a valentine from you. I opened it—to find, as I thought, my valentine returned to me."

"Evalina!" cried Amos in a shocked tone.

"Yes, Amos; I have believed that about you all these years. Tonight my eyes have been opened.

"In the green box I found a duplicate of that valentine, and now Jerry brings me the three letters which have lain in the lining of father's coat for twenty years.

"Open your letter, Amos!"

With trembling fingers Amos Spriggs opened his letter—the missive which had slipped through a hole in Judge Terry's coat pocket and laid there for many years to be brought to light by old Jerry's clumsy fingers.

Amos drew out his long delayed valentine. Then he understood.

This was another "rosy" valentine. Heart for heart, flower for flower, it was a replica of the one he had sent to Evalina Terry. And she, receiving his, had believed that he had returned the one she had sent to him.

Three valentines, all alike. Amos and Evalina sat hand in hand studying them in sweet silence.

There was one which had grown dusty in the box on the top shelf and which had revealed to Evalina that

AMOS DREW A CHAIR TO EVALINA'S SIDE.

Mr. Spriggs had possessed duplicates of the one she had bought in Whitehall.

The second valentine was the one she had sent to Amos and only now delivered to him. It was yellowed with age, but its sentiment was undimmed.

The third valentine was the one which had come to Evalina. It was blistered with tears and limp with much handling.

Amos reached out and took the three valentines and laid them on the couch. When they had flared up and vanished Amos knelt beside his sweetheart and took her hands in his.

"Come, Evalina; let us begin all over again," he said.

"Oh, Amos, I am too old," she quavered, womanlike.

And as he took her in his arms Jerry poked his head into the room. "Lawsy," he ejaculated, dodging back into the hall, "dis yere valentine business is contrapted embarrassful, Marthy!"

SKIN OF THE FRUIT.

It Is Wise Not to Eat Apples or Pears Without Peeling Them.

Some people say that an apple does not taste right when the skin is removed. Some even go so far as to say there is danger in eating fruit that has come in contact with the steel of the paring knife, as the acid in the fruit is apt to produce some poison when it comes in contact with the metal. But whether these things are true or not, there is still greater danger in eating apples without peeling them.

The skin of the apple has always been more or less infested with germs of different types, and now our modern methods of fighting insects by spraying the trees are liable to leave poisonous deposits on it which will do our stomachs serious harm.

Arsenate of lead, lime and sulphur wash and a number of other spraying compounds used by fruit growers have been found to remain in considerable quantities on the skin of apples and pears until ripe and placed on the market. The action of such chemicals upon the tissues of the human body is very injurious.

Spraying the trees is giving us more perfect fruit and getting the grower better prices, but if you value your health you should never eat apples or pears without first removing the peels. —New York American.

NAPOLEON VALUED TIME.

He Might Have to Lose Battles, but He Would Not Lose Minutes.

After forcing the army of Sardinia back toward Turin, Napoleon had scarcely taken possession of the beautiful Palace Salmatori, at Cherasco, thirty-five miles from the Piedmontese capital, when an aged marshal from the Sardinian side came and informed the little general of the French that the king was about to propose terms of peace.

"Terms!" shouted the young commander, in chief in startling tones, as he pounded the desk, "it is I who name terms. If you don't accept them at once Turin is mine tomorrow!"

Although the directory, sitting in far away Paris, had reserved the right for themselves and their trained diplomats to accept or reject terms, the young general could not delay operations for weeks while messengers were sent back and forth between the camp and the capital, so Bonaparte took it upon himself to arrange an armistice. He called a halt to all sparring for time by drawing out his watch and, tapping the dial with his forefinger, ordered them to sign immediately, remarking:

"I may lose battles, but I will not lose minutes." —Condensed From "In the Path of Napoleon," by James Mangan.

CONSCRIPT ARMIES.

Military Rules in Force in the Various States of Europe.

Napoleon in 1798 first brought conscription into force, then it was adopted by Prussia after her defeat by the French at Jena in 1806. In most countries where conscription is in vogue every man on reaching a certain age—from nineteen to twenty-one—has to undergo a period of military training. This prevails in France and Germany, but in Russia a certain number of men is required only, and if this is exceeded the authorities decide from whom full service shall be exacted. Of course certain men are excused, such as the only sons or eldest sons of clergymen, etc.

In Spain and Portugal every man is not directly called upon, but each locality is obliged to furnish a certain number, the men being chosen by ballot. There is no standing army in Switzerland, but all ablebodied citizens serve in the militia, which is called upon to train a few weeks every year. Although compulsory service is the law of the land, the army in the Netherlands is mainly composed of volunteers.

It is considered by some people that conscription is unpopular, but in the rural districts of the countries where conscription is in force the inhabitants look forward to the time when they will be called upon as the only exciting change in their lives.

The best conscriptive countries have so legislated that when the conscript leaves the army suitable employment is found for him; also, another point in his favor, his period of service is not so long as that of the volunteer.—London Chronicle.

A BOTANICAL PARADISE.

Juan Fernandez Islands Have More Than One Claim to Fame.

In the Juan Fernandez group of islands, 360 miles from Valparaiso, the Chilean government has a wireless station. Three islands comprise the group, but the name is usually applied to the largest, Mas a Tierra, closest to the mainland. Here it was that Defoe pictured Alexander Selkirk (Robinson Crusoe) in exile.

Mas a Tierra is of irregular form, about twelve miles in length, but hardly four miles across in its widest part. When seen from a distance the peak of El Yunque—the anvil—appears conspicuously in a range of precipitous mountains and attaining a height of 3,000 feet. From the summit to the base the mountain is wooded, with a wonderfully fertile valley at the foot.

Dr. Carl Skottsberg of the Swedish Magellanic expedition landed on the island in 1908, and the eminent geographer wrote subsequently that "from a botanical point of view Juan Fernandez is one of the world's most famous places. So many wonderful plants are brought together here on a small area that one must touch them to realise that one does not dream." Colonization of Juan Fernandez began some years ago, and a considerable fishing settlement is now in evidence.

In the finer restaurants of Valparaiso and Santiago the lobsters of Juan Fernandez are considered delicacies for which fancy prices are paid.—Argonaut.

[illegible] OPPOSES OSBORNE IDEAS

Yet He Is in Sympathy With the Warden's General Plans

Albany, Jan. 9.—Down in Sing Sing prison, spending his life among convicts, through necessity and not because of the salary which woes with the office, Thomas Mott Osborne, millionaire, musician, former member of the public service commission, conservat, fish and game commissioner, and at present Warden of Sing Sing, is working out a moral, educational and industrial code which he believes will result in fewer criminals.

The legislature, to which the recommendations, already published, may be submitted, is likely to take kindly to Warden Osborne's idea that the various officers, boards and commissions which now divide the administration of prison affairs, be consolidated. Consolidation is the slogan of the present lawmaking body.

Kinder treatment and confidence in the honesty of felons who have promised to reform. These are the two fundamental pegs for the platform of prison reformation that Warden Osborne hopes to see erected and become state-wide in scope before he has relinquished his office.

Since June, 1913, the millionaire sponsor for over a thousand criminals and of every type has been studying criminology. Since the fall of the present year he has watched the result of his recommendations as put into effect by himself.

State Superintendent Riley of the department, while not wholly in accord with a number of the reforms suggested, or rather recommended, by Warden Osborne, takes the position that some of them might bring about excellent results. Superintendent Riley looks with more suspicion upon the evil tendencies of those who have broken the laws than his wealthy subordinate, yet his kindly nature is in a large measure in general sympathy with the plan Warden Osborne has evolving.

In a word, Warden Osborne would change the rigid discipline now in practice at state prisons to kind and considerate treatment.

"Trifling breaches of the rules should be overlooked or dealt with by friendly caution against the repitition of the offense. Punishment should be employed only as the last resort," he says.

An appeal to the state superintendent of prisons against punishment such as confinement in a cell or degradation, is advocated by Warden Osborne.

The abolition of Sing Sing prison and a prison to be constructed by prison labor in its stead, is another recommendation. Warden Osborne would also have receiving station established at Sing Sing for the observation and study of all persons sentenced to imprisonment in a state prison; for medical examination and the treatment of those afflicted with disease; and for the weeding out of those found to be mentally defective.

Another reform recommended is that the penal law of the state be so amended as to make it incumbent upon all judges sentencing prisoners to confinement in a state prison, to impose an indeterminate sentence without minimum or maximum limit.

The rapid application of the "honor system" to all the penal institutions of the state, together with a considerable and increasing measure of self-government, is still another recommendation, while an additional one is that the libraries for the prisoners be improved and that the administration of such improved libraries be placed in the state library officials.

There are two more recommendations that Warden Osborne would like to see put into effect; an employment bureau in the office of the state superintendent of prisons at Albany to aid paroled and discharged convicts and that there also be established a bureau of criminal statistics in that office.

"THE NEWLYWEDS AND THEIR BABY."

"He's a great kid!" This is the enthusiastic assertion of all audiences where the latest offering the line of musical entertainment "The Newlyweds and Their Baby" has been given and the precious youngster has "da'd" into the most popular favor. It was George McManus who discovered the Newlyweds and little Napoleon and placed them before the public in the shape of cartoons. Two gorgeous sets, four scenes and sixteen musical numbers are required to adjust the complications that arise from the kidnaping of Napoleon Newlywed and the substitution of Major Knott Much, both parts of which, or the dual role rather, are played by Harold West, a clever Lilliputian. In either role the little chap is a sure cure for the blues.

Assisting are Chas. Morgan, and Beattie Evans in the respective role of Mr. and Mrs. Newlywed. Both are made up to approach as closely as possible the picture presentments of the couple who have provided amusement for the newspaper readers for a long time; both are capable players, entertaining singers and fine dancers. Then there is the baby's nurse, Gwendolyn, played by a capital comedienne, Collie Van Vlivet, good to look at, pleasant of voice, a capital character song singers; his aunt, Dolly Jolly another entertaining singer and dancer in the person of Mabel Jauot, Tom Travers in love with Dolly, played danced and sung by Lloyd Montgomery, Professor August Nichol, proprietor of the infant incubator, and who is responsible for the kidnaping of Napoleon played by Eric Van Dyck, Adolph Nichol, brother of the Professor played by Milton Dawson, a tremendous hit.

The chorus is handsomely and attractively gowned, can and does sing and includes a number of the best dancers that have bid for public approval. Particularly is this true of an octette of dolls called the "Eight Pouter Pigeons," the big song hits are "Boogie Boo" "Cant' You See I Love You" "Every Baby is a Sweet Bouquet" "Down Red Rose Lane," and "Minstrels on Parade."

The scenic environment in both acts is magnificent. The play will be seen at the Quirk, Monday, Feb. 1, matinee and night. Matinee, balcony, 25c; Main Floor 50c; Night 25c, 35c, 50c, 75c and $1.00.

DRIVEN BY FIRE INTO ZERO TEMPERATURE.

Lowell, Mass., Jan. 30.—Three hundred persons in a state infirmary six miles from here were driven out into the zero air today by a fire. Five hundred other men and women inmates of the adjoining dormitories panic stricken by the flames, overpowered their attendants and fled into the big quadrangle in which the guards are stationed. There were 2,900 inmates at the infirmary and those who remained in their quarters were badly frightened.

EVENING PAPERS POPULAR.

Detroit, Mich., Jan. 30.—The Detroit Tribune—one of the oldest newspapers in Michigan founded forty years ago by James Scripps, announced in today's issue that it would discontinue its week day editions after Sunday, but would publish the Sunday edition as the Detroit News-Tribune, merging its interests with the Daily News. The paper gives as its reason for this action that the morning paper is growing of secondary importance with the reading public and the afternoon field is the most popular.

it. If He sees us coming to Him heart foremost He don't care how much we slip and slide with our feet.

Make Your Own Plan for Reaching Christ.

Some of you who profess to be Christians are just as bad off as was that poor woman. You have been more dead than alive in the church, just as she was. You have had no strength to do anything for anybody else.

There has been no joy in your religion and no sunshine. You have been so near dead all the time that you haven't been any account at anything.

You have never counted one in the prayer meeting. You have done nothing in the Sunday-school. Your voice has never been heard in prayer. Everybody who knows you says: "Well, if that woman has religion I want something else." Or, "If that man is on his woy to heaven, I believe I'll take to the woods."

You have been so dissatisfied with yourself that you have prayed and you have fasted, and you have read the Bible, and you have made the children stay in the house and keep still on Sunday, and you have gone to church through wet and ry; but you never got any benefit from anything, and now you are so discouraged you don't know what to do.

You don't want to give up and you don't see how you can go on. What shall you do? You have nobody to advise you; there is no one to help you make a plan. No one to show you the way.

Don't you see there is only one thing you can do? Do as the woman did. Determine to get back to Jesus somehow.

Put out your hand and resolve to touch Him with it, if it withers and falls dead at your side. Earnestness is a great thing with God. Make the best plan you can for getting to Christ and then act on it without delay.

VAUDEVILLE CAPTURED A CROWDED HOUSE.

Despite the heavy fall of snow, and the prevailing cold weather a large crowd appeared at the Quirk to see the best vaudeville show that has visited this city in many a day, if indeed its equal has been seen even outside of big cities.

The acrobatic work of Bell and Eva was equal to any act shown by Ringling's foremost gymnasts. The back and forward sommersaults of Miss Eva and the twisters of Mr. Bell were as startling as they were amazing.

Venza Nobelette's rag-time singing was good; and her lightning changes, between songs were rapidly executed.

Miller and Shelby proved to be musicians of merit, and the comedian's entrance resembled a one-man band.

Van and Davis, boy and girl, in society and wooden shoe dancing, were excellent. It is seldom one sees a girl able to mark correct time and keep step with her partner. Miss Davis had no difficulty in doing it.

Manager Darleigh is to congratulated upon the many good shows he has given of late to Fulton theatergoers.

The same vaudeville show that was on last night will be continued tonight at the Quirk.

THE QUIRK TONIGHT.

Your last opportunity to see that bill of splendid vaudeville in conjunction with the 5-reel Vitagraph comedy feature, "The Man Behind the Door," with Wally Van ("Cutey") and Cissy Fitzgerald in the head. One big laugh. Tomorrow (Sunday) Charles Dickens' famous story "The Chimes" in photo-play from with Tom Terris in the lead will be shown in 5 acts of intense interest. Admission 5c and 10c.

ENGLAND FEARS HER SUPPLIES MAY BE CUT OFF

As a Result of Destruction of Four Merchantmen the Admiralty Will Extend its Ocean Patrol

By HERBERT TEMPLE.

London, Feb. 1.—That Germany has finally launched her threatened submarine war against British mercantile shipping, in order to isolate the British isles and cut off their war and food supplies, was the universal conclusion today following the sinking of four British merchant ships in the Irish sea and the English Channel during the past forty-eight hours. Consternation prevails in shipping circles; marine insurance rates are soaring.

Following a conference at the admiralty today it was learned that the naval patrol all around England, Scotland and Ireland will be extended. British warships will probably be sent out to sea to escort big incoming liners into port. Fears are felt from the safety of the Lusitania, which is on the Atlantic, bound from New York for Liverpool.

It is believed that England will lodge vigorous protests with the American government against Germany's attacks upon harmless merchant ships.

The two British merchant ships attacked yesterday, the Tokomaru and the Ikaria, were off the French coast within a short distance of the warships which were patrolling the Channel.

Members of the crew of the Tokomaru who arrived here today, said that the ship was stationary, waiting for her pilot, when an explosion occurred. The vessel was about twenty miles off Havre. The crew immediately disembarked as the ship began to sink rapidly. No submarines were seen and no warning was given, but it is taken for granted that the ship was torpedoed by a German underwater craft.

The Ikaria, bound from Brazil, was twenty miles north of Cape Le Heve when a violent explosion occurred in the starboard side under the water line. She began to settle at once and became unmanagable.

Another steamship, the Kilcoan, is reported to have been attacked but at the time this dispatch was written no news had been received relative to her fate.

British newspapers are bitter against the latest phase of German warfare, which is called a breach of the recognized code of hostilities. It is charged that the Germans have also violated the international laws by displaying the British flag on their submarines.

It is evident from the number of underwater craft at work that the German admiralty is using many of its available eighteen submarines.

The Royal Mail Packet Leinster reported at Dublin that she had been chased into port by a hostile submarine.

Naval experts declare that Germany's eighteen powerful submarines can easily paralyze British shipping, despite the guards of war ships. These submarines are new craft, equipped with the latest devices of destruction, and each has a radius of 2,500 miles.

CANADIAN TROOPS BEAT BACK GERMANS

By FRANKLIN P. MERRICK.

Paris, Feb. 1.—Numerous artillery duels from the North sea to Upper Alsace, are reported in official dispatches to the war office. Near Arras German artillery destoryed the belfry of the Catholic church at Fonquevillers, because the Germans thought it was being used as an observation post by the French.

Along the center the French guns were predominant and several German batteries were completely silenced. It is believed however, that the fire ceased to save th guns and that none of the cannon were destroyed.

On the North sea coast the Germans are keeping up a continuous bombardment against the Belgian and French trenches.

The French war official claim of the German general staff that the French have lost Angomont.

"German landsturn regiments attempted to take the trenches of the Canadian troops by storm, but the Canadians were ready for them. The German charge suddenly came to a halt in front of the trenches and the Canadians leaped over the paraphet and began a counter charge. Then they found that the German soldiers had become mired in the deep, stick mud and were crawling painfully back to their own lines. Four Canadians were killed, but the German loss was much heavier. The next day Lieut. Price of the Canadians was killed while leading a relief company to the trenches. Another officer, named Pearson, is reported to have been killed in the way way by a German sniper. The Canadian troops were bombarded by a German aeroplane at breakfast, but despite their newness to the war game they behaved like veterans."

Sofia, Bulgaria, Feb. 1.—Heavy firing was heard all day Sunday in the Danube valley, east of the Iron Gate, indicating a renewal of hostilities in eastern Servia. It is believed that the Austrians, reinforced by German troops, are preparing to begin a new invasion of Servia.

UNIVERSAL PROGRAM FOR ANNIVERSARY DAY

SCOUTS THROUGHOUT COUNTRY TO FOLLOW SAME SCHEDULE AT NATION-WIDE CELEBRATION.

The programme for Anniversary Week of the Boy Scouts, which will be followed by the scouts throughout the country, is as follows:

SUNDAY, February 7th—Church exercises. Scoutmasters should arrange with their pastors for special sermons on the work of the Boy Scout movement. Church troops or other groups of scouts should attend their churches in groups.

MONDAY, February 8th—4.30 to 6 p. m. Scout Birthday Good Turn. Troops will visit the sick in the hospitals and private homes, taking with them flowers and best wishes from the scout movement. At 7.30 o'clock, anniversary day meeting and annual report of troop activities. At 8 o'clock, reading of greetings from the chief scout. At 8.15 o'clock every scout in the United States will stand at attention with his hand at salute and repeat the scout oath.

FRIDAY, February 12th—Participation wherever practicable in Lincoln memorial services.

SATURDAY, February 13th—At 9 o'clock, delivery of report on scout work, and of scout greetings to city officials, Chamber of Commerce, commercial club ojcials, newspaper offices and members of local councils. Troop Good Turn. At 2 o'clock, inter-patrol or inter-troop contests for possession of Anniversary pennant or banner. At 7.30 p. m., Boy Scout entertainment exhibition reception or banquet, followed by the awarding of prizes and honors.

RUSSIANS RETAKE TRENCHES HELD BY THE GERMANS

Czar's Artillery Effective Against Troops Supported by Big German Guns

By FRANCIS LAVELLE MURRAY.

Petrograd, Feb. 1.—Four German regiments took part in the assault upon the Russian lines near Berjimow on Saturday, all of which lost heavily, it was officially announced here today. The Russians captured three officers and more than 60 men.

The following communication was given out by the war office:

"The Russians continue to advance in the forest north of Gumbinnen and Pilkallen, in East Prussia, where stubborn fighting is still in progress. There was a bayonet fight on Saturday in the region of Berjimow where the Germans occupied Russian trenches which we have now reoccupied ourselves. We captured three officers and more than 60 men as well as a Maxim gun. On the same day the enemy attempted to repel an attack by Russian outposts on their trenches, but were repulsed. Only a small part of the enemy's forces succeeded in retaining their positions.

Russian artillery has been most successful on the whole front. Left of the Vistula our guns seriously damaged the enemy's positions, causing serious losses. In the Carpathians the Russian situation is satisfactory. On the front from Dukla Pass to Wyshkow we are advancing."

The Russian forces invading Hungary through Dukla Pass have been heavily reinforced. It is reported unofficially that the Austro German forces massed in the eastern Carpathians, have been outflanked and that the Russian army which crossed the Dukpa Pass is moving forward swiftly without situation.

In Bukowina small combats are in progress.

LATE WAR BULLETINS

Berlin, via Amsterdam, Feb. 1.—German troops sent to reinforce the Austrians in the Carpathians have driven the Russians from Uzsok Pass after violent fighting it was officially announced in a statement issued by the war office on Sunday.

"After repeated violent fighting in the Carpathian passes," says the statement, "the Germans have driven the Russians from Uzsok Pass. The Russians made a number of desperate counter attacks but all were repulsed."

Havre, France Feb. 1.—The British steamship Ikaria, which was reported in London dispatches to have been sunk by a German submarine in the English Channel, arrived here today in a sinking condition. She had a big hole in her bow, under the water line and would have foundered but for the help given by tugs. It is believed that she was torpedoed, although she might have struck a mine. The Ikaria carries a cargo of sugar and coffee.

Paris, Feb. 1.—The destruction of German trenches along the Aisne river by French artillery is reported in an official statement issued by the War Office this afternoon. It is stated that the Germans have lost heavily in the heavy fighting which has been in progress in the Argonne. Artillery duels are reported from a number of districts particularly west of Flanders.

FILIBUSTERING COSTS NATION NEARLY $1,000,000

Smoot's Speech Alone Costs $225,000; Senators Refreshed and Ready to Continue Work of Blocking Bill

Washington, Jan. 1.—Refreshed by a rest of nearly 35 hours Senators returned to the trenches this mornin gand again waged the fight over the ship purchase bill. The Republicans were confident that they would be able to keep up the filibuster indefinitely. Senators William Alden Smith, Jones of Washington, and Burton of Ohio, were ready to talk at length in their efforts to defeat the measure.

The Republicans have held their lines intact throughout a thirty-seven hour session which marked the close of a week of hard fighting and appear to be far from having exhausted their resources of verbal ammunition. Many who have talked already on the bill may discuss amendments without coming within the rule forbidding a senator from speaking twice on the same subject.

The Democrats were equally confident of being able to wear down their opponents by the end of the week. The Democrats have the advantage in numbers and age of members. The average age of the Democratic senators is 54.6 years, while that of the Republicans is a trifle more than 60, so if the idea that "youth will be served" in a test of endurance apply, the odds would seem to favor the administration forces.

A score of Senators appeared when the Senate met for the usual call of the roll to obtain a quorum. After a quorum had been obtained Senator Smith spoke on the subject of unemployment. Senator Fletcher of Florida in charge of the bill brought with him a bulging suitcase. "I brought my camping outfit," he said, "and the other Democratic Senators have been warned to do the same. We are going to stay here until we pass this bill. That means running all night and all day until we are through.

Senator Williams of Mississippi today estimated that the cost of the filibuster already has exceeded $800,000. He figured that Senator Smoot's speech cost $225,000 in printing bills and stenographers fees. Senator Smoot spoke for eleven-hours and thirty-five minutes. Senator Burton's speech which extended over thirteen hours, cost $250,000; that of Senator Lodge $150,000, and Senator Gallinger's, $250,000.

TURKS AND KURDS FLEE BEFORE RUSSIANS

By FRANCIS LAVELLE MURRAY.

Petrograd, Feb. 1.—Official announcement was made here today of the occupation of Tabriz, Persia, by Russian troops. The following details were given:

"After the battle at Sofia the Turks, who had suffered heavily retired toward Tabriz, which the Russians reoccupied about midday on Saturday. The Turks and their Kurd allies fled in the direction of Maragha. The Russian consul general at Tabriz, who fled from that city when the Turks entered it, is returning. Among the spoils seized by the Russians in Sofian was a holy war flag."

It is reported from Isfipain that the Turkish army of invasion in Persian looted Shiah sanctuaries at Kerbels, seizing $10,000,000 worth of treasure.

Twothousand Turkish troops have crossed Persian territory en route to Asuez where rich British oil fields are located.

GERMANS REINFORCE TROOPS IN MOUNTAINS

By STEVEN BURNETT.

Vienna, Feb. 1.—It is officially announced that the battle for the possession of northern passes in the Carpathian Mountains continues without serious results. The Austrian forces in the Carpathians have been reinforced by part of Field Marshal Von Hindenburg's German army. Artillery duels are reported from Galicia and skirmishes from Bukowina.

(Unofficial dispatches printed in Rome, London and Paris today stated that the Russians were in complete possession of the Dukla Pass, having outflanked the Teutonic allies at that point, and were pressing forward toward interior of Hungary.)

GERMAN TROOPS UNFIT TO MEET RUSSIAN MASSES

London, Feb. 1.—Germany is hard up for troops to meet the fresh Russian masses in the eastern theater of war, says a news agency dispatch from Petrograd. The dispatch says: "Prisoners taken by the Russians during the severe fighting at Dorjimaw state that the German losses there were enormous. Several German companies were reduced to forty men. Some prisoners are over forty years old and were sent to the front after only two weeks training. The Germans lack troops to offset the attacks of the new Russian army."

Opinions

Brandeis on Suffrage.

Louis D. Brandeis said at the legislative hearing on woman suffrage in Boston on January 25:

"The question of women's voting has appealed to me rather from the point of view of duty than of right. It is the duty of women to vote, in order that they may get the full development to which every American citizen is entitled, in order that they may protect themselves, and in order that through their larger development they may aid in protecting society.

"We cannot solve our present problems without the help of all classes and of both sexes. They are very grave problems, which government never undertook to deal with before. When the policy was one of laissez faire, and government was devoted mainly to keeping order, it might be well enough to let men keep order. But now it is recognized that government must also look out for human welfare. The finest fruit of democracy is social justice.

"It has been my privilege to work with many women, in many fields, and in dealing with many different problems; and I have become impressed with their power to contribute important elements which men could not furnish. Whether women want the ballot or not, we cannot afford to exempt them from the obligation of voting. For this reason and for many others, we must enlarge the suffrage to include them."Woman's Journal.

Fires in Public Schools.

Every year we Americans spend for new schoolhouses a dollar for every person in the country, and then let the schoolhouses burn down at the rate of more than one for every school day in the year.

A schoolhouse should be of fireproof construction, inside as well as out; and moreover should be so planned and administered as to prevent the panics in which victims are crushed to death. But even in an old, combustible schoolhouse the danger from fire can be reduced to a minimum if the authorities will do away with the things that usually cause fire to spread, and the things that start panic, and will also insist that janitors, pupils, and teachers observe certain rules.

To prevent fire from spreading rapidly, it is necessary to have stairs of fireproof construction inclosed in fireproof partitions—for outside fire escapes have proved inadequate; a fireproof ceiling to the basement; an automatic fire alarm, and a complete system of fire signals inside the building connected with fire headquarters.

Ot prevent panic, there should be a direct connection between the stairs and outdoors; staircases at least four feet wide, provided with handrails and adequate in number to empty the building in three minutes; and single doors everywhere, side by side, and swinging outward.

As a preventive measures, waste paper, ashes, and other rubbish should be separately placed in metal, self-closing receivers and removed from the building at the close of each day. Outside doors should never be locked during school hours; the halls should be free from lockers, tables, chairs, clothing, and all other obstructions; and there should be a fire drill [illegible] without warning, and varied to meet every possible emergency.

A report issued by the Russell Sage Foundation concerning legislation on this matter in the United States contains a map from which it appears that two states have passed good laws fifteen have passed poor ones, and the rest none at all. It is the duty of every citizen to open the eyes of legislators of his state to the dangerous conditions, but no town or city needs to wait for state law before it makes its schoolhouses safe for its children and their teachers. If a community cannot have a new schoolhouse, it can and should make its existing buildings fire-retarding and panic-proof, and insist on their being administered with a constant eye to the danger of fire.

UNDEVELOPED RESOURCES

Anniversary week for the Boy Scouts of America will be observed throughout the country during the week beginning February 7th. The different troops of each locality will at that time give special attention to the various churches, hospitals and Chamber of Commerce, the observance of the week will end with a procession of the united scouts for the awarding of the pennant and other honors, to be followed by a banquet.

While the local council of Boy Scouts has not announced any plans for this important week, it is to be hoped that the occasion may not be passed by without a demonstration of some kind to mark its importance.

Perhaps no other organization in our city is of greater importance than that of the Boy Scouts. The Fulton of the future will be just what the desires of our citizens in embryo, our Boy Scouts, will make it. It is within the teaching and precepts of this organization to develop those qualities which make for clean, honest, loyal citizenship. These qualities are the rocks of the foundation which make a city "builded well."

Fulton's little army of Scouts should grow constantly. With the proper incentives, and these incentives made known, Scout membership would be a privilege and a pleasure.

The local order of Scouts should develop a fife and drum corps, and occasionally show themselves upon the streets in parade. To kindle enthusiasm a parade is quite the most natural means, both for the ones in parade and for the spectator.

We need the Scouts' approval and the Scouts needs the public's interest.

FORWARD MARCH!

Cure For Sorehead

A correspondent asks for a cure for sorehead. This is a complaint which is found in many neighborhoods. The victim is practically worthless for community purposes, and the ailment is mildly contagious. Sometimes a bad case will spread rather rapidly. It passes from case to case—through contact in conversation, business dealings, school meetings, and otherwise.

The cure is easy. If the victim will seek out some neighbor and do him a good turn it always helps. If the favor can be done in a whole-hearted way to another victim of sorehead, and especially to a person who harbors a feeling of sore-headedness toward the doer of the good and neighborly deed, so much the better—two cases will be benefited instead of one.

The best remedy is to take a systematic course of helping to make the neighborhood a better place in which to live. Giving up something selfishly desired, like special favors from the road district, the disputed strip of land along the line fence, or one's own way in building or repairing the same, is very good in allaying the irritation of the cranium.

A man who will put himself in the place of his hired man and try to follow the Golden Rule is almost always benefited. Putting in a water system for the wife has been known to cure the worst case, and a washing machine or a dish-washer often helps. One bad case which was constantly irritated by friction between the head of the family—the head which was sore—was completely cured by giving each of the boys a start in live stock and making them partners in the farm operations on a small scale.

Another was restored to health by attendance at meetings of farmers in the neighborhood and serving on one or two committees for the purpose of accomplishing some public good. A bad case of sorehead often comes from defective brooding in solitude—brooding over the victim's own grievances. Association in a broad-minded way with one's fellows, and brooding over ways to make life better for everyone, is the sovereign remedy, with the Golden Rule as the manual and guidebook of life.—Farm and Fireside.

There will be three grand conventions,
Such a gathering of the clan.
There will be the old time victors
And the ones who also ran.
There will be planks in those platforms,
Both of timbers old and new.
There will be vast pledges given
That will protect all good and true.
There will be just claimants proper
Who would work with all their might.
There will be famed future hall men
Who would fill the niche just right.
There will be the man in office
Who came from o'er the Jersey side—
And the man from Doubtful River,
Who would take another glide,
And the man now out of office
Who would revise the printed list,
And the ways and means own leader
Who is looking through the mist
And the man who wields the gavel
In the lower house just now.
And the man of newly ear marks
Of the toga on his brow.
And the man that's ever ready
Who now guides the ship of State.
And the man from old Eureka
Again would be a running mate.
And the dark horse of old legends
Who would start a little row,
And the man that talked for hours.
But who is very quiet now,
They will then be up and doing
"With a heart for any fate"
Some achieving; some pursuing,
Some to labor—and to wait.

AGNES DESCHAMPS MILLER.
Oswego, N. Y.

IT CAN'T BE DONE.

(By Mrs. I. E. Hyde, Fulton)

The sun is shining. It's too hot.
The rain is falling; that is rot.
A rainbow beams, gold in the pot
Would give too long a run.

The scribe he scribbles with a zeal;
He compounds verse that makes you feel
Your every sin; and then you squeal,
Quite true—it can't be done.

The doctor measures out his dope,
He thumps your chest and gives you hope;
Yet still you say, "He needs the rope"
You see—it can't be done.

The preacher preaches from a text;
Some folks are pleased some folks are vexed,
His parish fails, He tries the next
To please—It can't be done.

The teacher tries to please her school,
Some students say she is a fool;
She sits and ponders on her stool.
It surely can't be done.

We reach the summit, fall again.
To please, we try our might and main;
We really work until we strain,
And then it can't be done

I wonder if 'twas in the plan,
For one to please a mortal man.
I hope 'twas not; I never can;
I know it can't be done.

I'll give up trying chalk the score
And hang this sign above my door—
I'll please myself and nothing more—
Perhaps—that can't be done.

THE TREES OF NEW YORK STATE

High School Students to Assist College of Forestry In Study of Distribution

The results of studies of local distribution of forest trees which the New York State College of Forestry at Syracuse is making in cooperation with High School students throughout the State will aid greatly in carrying out the reforestation of cut-over lands within the Forest Reserve counties in the State and of idle lands in the farms in every county. New York has a very large number of native forest trees and yet no complete studies have been made of local distribution and it is very essential in deciding as to what kinds of trees to use for reforestation in the State to know just where the various native trees occur. In almost every community in the State there are from 40 to 50 native trees and yet there are seldom but one or two people in that Community who know more than a dozen to twenty thoroughly.

Students in science courses in High School throughout the State are asked to collect specimens of native trees in the vicinity of the School and from the identification fo these by the College obtain a complete list of all of the native trees of their region. The specimens which are sent in by High School pupils will be named by the Dendrologist of the College of Forestry and the name of the specimen returned to the pupils. The information given will not only be of great help to the High Schols in their science work but will aid the College in its survey of the forest resources of the State and in the preparation of manuals of forest distribution for the various counties.

The study of native trees and the obtaining of samples of leaves, flowers and fruit will greatly increase the powers of observation of High School students. The student in his work with the trees is given a list of suggestive questions which will aid in the determination of the common trees. With the list of suggestive questions are sent instructions for making permanent collections either by the pupil himself or by the school. This directed form of study will be followed through the various seasons by lists of questions and suggestive outlines calling attention to the characteristics of the trees in those seasons; during the winter the pupils attention will be called to the form of the trunk, the crown, the branching system and the buds; in the spring he will be urged to watch the opening buds and the first leaves and the flowers and in the fall and early winter his attention will be called to fruits and seeds. This cooperative work between the College and the High Schools of the State will be very helpful to science teachers in developing within pupils the power of observation and a love for trees and nature generally.

Clearing of land in many farming sections through the State has progressed so far sa to have practically exterminated some of our rarer tree species. The time is rapidly passing in which accurate information of the natural range of tree species may be studied. The pupils of the State can be of great service not only to the State College but to students of nature everywhere by observing and reporting upon forest trees. The work of pupils will it is believed interest older people in not only knowing the native trees but in the planting of the right kind of trees in villages and cities and taking better care of the great forest resources of the State.

ON DUTY AGAIN.

Patrolman Lafayette Norton, reported for duty this morning after an illness of four weeks. Officer Frank Smith, who was on duty during Norton's absence, is on reserve until later notice.

YOUR TROUBLES ARE MADE IN YOUR OWN WORKSHOP

Has it ever occurred to you that more than 50 per cent of the money you spend is exchanged not only for things that you do not need, but for things that do you actual harm.

Do you know that the average individual can increase his efficiency 50 per cent by reducing his food supply at least 30 per cent. And do you know that we should, in reality, eat, breathe and live for the purpose of individual efficiency. Do you know that our appetites are perverted and unnatural; that our ideas as a usual thing are groggy, foggy and gloomy.

Has it ever occurred to you that there is but one thing that stands between you and happiness, between you and success, between you and character and health, between you and the finer ideas and ideals that make life worth while, and that this one thing is your own individual self.

Ninety per cent of our troubles are imaginary. When you contemplate or expect trouble, what else do you imagine you will find. Look for sorrow and misery, and—lo! the world is filled with it. Ninety per cent of the troubles of the average man are will-o'-the-wisps, hob-goblins and jack-o'-lanterns. The real trouble is, we manufacture our misery and then peddle it around among our friends; give it away to our customers, to the people we meet; pass it along among our associates—forgetting all the time that the fact that we have indigestion is in reality no reason why it should be injected into the lives of others.

The fact that you have made your breakfast of fried pancakes, doughnuts and coffee, is not any reason why the day may not be beautiful to other men. The man who calls you on the 'phone to tell you about his backache or rheumatism is in reality not your friend. He is a selfish miser who thinks the world of work, energy, life and the beauty of things should be stopped to share his misery, aches and pains.

People are not interested in your headaches, your indigestion—and why should they be. What we need is happiness, sunshine, smiles and plenty of work. Forget it! It is not half so bad as you thought it was—and to tell your troubles to another man is to increase his sorrow without having lessened your own.

Listen to no man's tale of hard luck. The world was made for progress. The individual was made to grow; not to inject misery and sorrow—the result of wrong methods of living; ignorance and incompetency—into the world.

Throw open your windows! Exercise! Get out into the open air! Eat less, ventilate your place of business, keep a current of air running through your room or office. Smile, work and keep your grouch out of the lives of your friends, playmates and co-workers.

This is just a simple plea for fresh air, sunshine and happiness, and a sort of exposition of the folly of telling your troubles to your friends. If you feel bad, if you have dissipated or have foolishly filled your system with the wrong kind of food—in the name of common sense, don't say anything about it. The more you tell these things, the more you feel them and the more miserable you make the individual to whom they are told.

When an employee has a grievance, imagined or otherwise, he usually discusses it freely with the driver, the stableman, the janitor or delivery boy—after which it all goes to the ears of the manager. The only one who is in a position to actually say a word of wisdom, the only one with power to right a wrong or to correct a mistake, is the last one to hear what should be repeated or told to no one else.

There is too much selfishness and lack of respect for the feelings of others, when we consider that we are continuously relating our ills and petty sorrows and troubles to our friends, and injecting our aches and pains into the lives of those who prefer to enjoy happiness and peace of mind.

This world is all right; it is a fine place to live, and the great majority of your troubles are modeled and manufactured in your own work-shop.

"SANITO"
COOKING UTENSILS
are a necessity for housekeepers who wish to excel in domestic science. They are the only American-made cooking ware which absolutely reproduces the high priced, imported German utensils, so universally used abroad. SANITO utensils have an acid proof lining which cannot crack or scale off and retains nothing to taint or discolor the food. When cooked in SANITO the food cooks evenly, retains all its juices and flavors and never scorches or burns. SANITO is a nonconductor of heat and after being heated to the cooking point—212 degrees—it requires but a very small gas flame to complete the cooking process. With proper care SANITO will last a life time.
A 5-piece Set of SANTO for $1.00

Has stored in its First st. building about 60 sets of this ware, to be sold at $1.00 a set, 2 sets, $1.50. Buy one set for yourself and one for a friend.

SCALES FOOL THE WOMEN

Wonderful Savings Effected by Correct Weights and Measures

Philadelphia, Pa., Feb. 1.—Philadelphia housewives have been robbed of approximately $4,000,000 each year by dishonest butchers, fishmen, produce dealers, milkmen and others handling food products.

This stupendous figure, said to be a most conservative estimate, is given by the bureau of weights and measures, which, since its organization ten months ago, has been conducting a systematic investigation in every section of the city. The bureau has made 200,000 inspections and has confiscated 56,000 inaccurate scales and measures, enough to fill twenty freight cars.

Tomorrow the bureau will open an exhibit in city hall courtyard.

An array of fraudulent scales, measures and weights will be exhibited, and at 3 o'clock and 8 o'clock, lectures will be given to enlighten the buying public and show how for more than thirty years it has been cheated out of millions of dollars by the dishonest tradesmen.

John Virdin, chief of the bureau, epitomized the work and purposes of the department yesterday, by saying: "The public has simply been robbed, but if it is alert the dishonest merchant will be driven out of business.

'Hundreds of grocers and produce dealers are unknowingly cheating their customers through carelessness. They failed to have their scales tested. Hundreds of others were using measures with false partitions; milk was being sold in bottles that failed to meet the requirements; coal merchants were selling 1700 and 1800 pounds for the ton, and the loss to the consuming public in dollars and cents was appalling."

Since last March a force of inspectors has made a general round-up of crooked scales and measures, not so much with a view of prosecuting the merchants, but to correct the evil. The inspectors have selected as typical specimens for the exhibit, several thousand milk bottles, meat scales, combination dry measures used for potatoes and other vegetables, liquid measures and various other articles.

"This evil did not exist in any one section," asserted Virdin. "It was a general condition, and no worse in South Philadelphia than it was in Germantown or North Philadelphia. The city, in other words, had failed to protect the public, but in the last ten months we have reduced the evil to a minimum. With the co-operation of the public, it is believed the Philadelphia housewife will get what she pays for."

Provide your household with a good scale and a set of dry and liquid measures.

You are entitled to 2240 pounds of coal. Obtain from the driver of the coal wagon a delivery ticket showing the net weight and name and address of the dealer.

Don't purchase goods and pay for the wrappings at the price of the commodity.

See that capacity is plainly marked on all measures used by your dealer and watch the scales when meat or fish is being weighed.

See that the milk bottle is filled to the cap or stopper, and that the capacity is blown in the bottle.

4000 Quarts Milk Short Daily.

Some idea of what Philadelphia has been paying into the coffers of dishonest merchants is obtained from the reports of C. B. Graham, the bureau's milk inspector. He says: "Four hundred thousand quarts of milk are consumed daily in the city, but until eight months ago each quart was approximately two drams short. This meant a loss to the public of 4000 quarts daily, or an overcharge of $320 a day."

Briefly the 56,000 inaccurate scales and measures registered an average shortage of one ounce to the pound, and according to the statiscians of the bureau, this meant a loss to the purchasing public of $10,500 a day, or $3,185,000 each year.

The most common violation was found in shops where combination dry measures were used. Thousands were confiscated and the merchants were forced to use the single measure for each subdivision of the bushel. Thousands of the old double end measures so commonly used in measuring potatoes and other vegetables were so constructed with false bottoms that housewives buying in small quantities obtained on an average 30 per cent less than what they paid for.

If the confiscated combination measures piled one on top of the other they would make a stack three times higher than the Washington monument. In thousands of the measures the end supposed to hold a quarter peck would in reality measure just half that amount. Several hucksters more ingenious than their competitors not only used the false measures, but nailed a large potato or tomato in the bottom and the purchaser of a quarter peck would be shy six potatoes, or one half the number paid for.

Explains Lack of Arrests.

Asked why the dishonest tradesmen were not arrested, Virdin said: "I could have done that, but my purpose was to correct the evil. The great majority of dealers said they were unaware that they were cheating the public, so I gave them the benefit of the doubt and allowed them another chance. They threw away their old scales and measures, and with the exception of a very few, they obeyed the law."

Among the butcher scales, the inspectors found one with a pound of lead under the scoop. Another was set so carefully that each customer lost two ounces on a purchase. A third, used in a fruit store, was set to register a pound and was used in selling grapes. The scoop weighed one pound, and the South st. dealer would throw in a bunch and the scale would register. Scores of dealers were selling cranberries and small plums by the liquid measure instead of by dry measure.

Theodore Seraphin, assigned to inspect the pumps used by gasoline dealers, found that the dealers measured the fluid by the stroke, and that each gallon was one and one-fifths gill short. Taking the number of automobiles in the city and computing the consumption of gasoline the bureau estimated that auto owners were losing $492,000 a year.

An interesting feature of the exhibit is the basket section. The farmers sell their products to commission merchants in baskets, each measuring five-eighths of a bushel. The commission merchants in turn sold the same baskets to the retailers but the inspectors found that the retailers took the produce and sold it in baskets measuring only four-eights of a bushel. Under the new system each basket must be properly marked, showing its capacity.

Seize 2394 Dry Measures.

A huckster was caught selling potatoes by the barrel at a ridiculously low price. Poor women taking advantage of the offer bought on the club plan. The barrel which was used for measuring purposes contained a peach basket which was nailed to the bottom. Through this system the huckster was saving two bushels to every five barrels sold.

Illustrating the extent of the dry measure fraud, W. F. Sinclair, who will lecture at the exhibition, said that in six months 2394 combination dry measures were confiscated.

The exhibit will open at 10 o'clock tomorrow morning, and at 3 o'clock Sinclair will give an illustrated lecture during which he will explain how the dealers doctored their scales and weights. Here are a few hints for the housekeeper which the bureau is anxious that all should know:

Protect yourself against fraud by doing your own marketing.

Don't buy from a merchant who uses dented measures.

Don't buy over scales unless the pointer is at zero, then see that the scale comes to a rest when the weight is taken.

If you patronize a merchant understanding all of his neighbors, be on your guard and watchful.

Don't gossip with your merchant while he is weighing your purchases, unless you have tested your purchases and found him honest.

If you have suspicions concerning the honesty of a merchant, notify the bureau and his scales and measures will be inspected immediately.

Practical Town Promotion

The question is often asked, what practical things can be done to advertise our town.

In some places the citizens wear "booster buttons"—except when they go out of town where the advertising might do some good.

Some towns take write-ups in trade papers. If these periodicals have a real circulation, this should have value. Frequently the circulation is confined to people who buy the write-ups.

In some cities business men print cuts of local scenes on their correspondence envelopes. But you can't make a town seem attractive merely by a photograph of the brick walls of some factory. You need to show pleasant streets, attractive buildings, trees and other foliage, to give some impression of taste and civic self respect.

Statements of a town's advantages are often circulated on letter heads and envelopes. These are so detailed that few people read them. Still they help the citizens of a town to respect their own achievements.

Many towns display a town slogan at the railroad station.

These mottoes are often boastful and impossible. If they concentrate in a phrase some real service the town is rendering the idea is excellent.

Campaigns for new industries are common. These are hopeful where the citizens are willing to devote time and money to the effort.

All these ideas are good if well handled. But the most effective method is the cultivation of town spirit. Some places are full of people who always disparage their home place. They think this shows that they are persons of fine discrimination. This attitude repels would-be residents, and discourages home enterprise.

In other towns the citizens take all possible occasions to speak well of their own community. They commend its schools, churches, social life, and business push. They send away programs of entertainments, pictures of attractive scenes, newspapers containing reports of notable events. Where a town has that spirit it becomes widely known. It can't help growing.—Star, Elmira.

Salvation Army Weekly Report Shows Excellent Work Done.

That the people of this city may know what a mighty charity work the Salvation Army is doing Ensign Fitzgerald has upon request submitted a duplicate of a weekly report made to the home office.

The report is for the week ending Jan. 24.

It reads as follows:

Ten people converted, 64 garments, 18 pair of shoes given to the poor, 6 men have been given lodging, 26 meals have been given to men, 5 bushels of potatoes have been sent into homes, also 17 cabbages, ½ bushel carrots, 3 bushels apples, 1 bushel onions, 40 loaves bread, 400 fried cakes, 5 pounds sugar, 2 pounds sugar, 2 lbs tea, 8 packages rolled oats, 5 pounds rice, and many other things too numerous to mention.

Advertising Pays.

Advertise. Let people know what you have to sell—$750,000,000 a year is spent for advertising, and it pays. If people don't know what you have to sell, how can you expect them to buy? Teachers are more progressive than business men. Lord & Taylor of Chicago pay six men to write advertisements $10,000 a year, and that pays or they would not do it.

Adopt some of the plans of Rears & Sawbuck, get next and get trade. In the last ten years 1,136 of the smaller towns in Ohio have lost in population, and the same thing has occurred in the other states. There are several reasons for this. One is the growth of the mail order houses. There are five reasons for this:

1. Lack of proper business organization among business men.
2. Lack of community co-operation.
3. Lack of community loyalty.
4. Lack of business salesmanship and business efficiency on the part of the employes.
5. The success of the mail order business is owing to maximum of business ability and skilful advertising and salesmanship.

The unsuccessful merchant, and 95 per cent. of them fail and go out of business, has minimum ability, don't advertise, and is a poor salesman.

Square Deal.

Another demand is for honesty—"the square deal." Courage is wanted to follow up conviction. It is the chief attribute of manliness. Fear produces paralysis. Cultivate will power, for it is essential to success. In all things preserve in yourselves the godlike quality of self respect. Cultivate community spirit and you will preserve community life.

Do Not Try to Have a Sale Without the Help of The Fulton Evening Times

These Are the Reasons Why:

The Poster reaches at most only a few hundred people: The Evening Times is read each evening by approximately, 10,000 people.

The Poster is seen only by people when they are away from home. The Times goes into people's homes and finds them.

The Poster must be tacked up and distributed—a day or two of hard work for a man with a rig. The Times distributes the same information at every house in the city.

The Poster is not seen in bad weather, because people stay at home. That is just the time The Evening Times is read most carefully.

Under some circumstances it is advisable to have bills, but under all circumstances you should have advertising in The Evening Times. It is the advertising that does the business—every merchant will tell you so.

Friday's issue of this paper gave an account of how a little girl narrowly escaped sliding to her death.

Today the hero, in the case, John Smith met the little girl and sure enough each recognized the other immediately, just as Mr. Smith said would be the case. The little girl who confided her name is Libbie Phillips and her home in Highland st.

Libbie is grateful for the rescue to such an extent that she has promised never again to slide near the railroad tracks.

The following statistics are of interest concerning fatalities resultant from railroad track walking being an unrestricted right.

Since then the following statistics have come to our notice. From 1901 to 1910 inclusive 50,025 persons were killed in this country and as many more injured while walking over railroad property.

In most of these cases the killed and injured resulted from the negligence of those who put themselves in the way of danger.

The New York Central is trying to obtain a law that will keep pedestrians off the entire tracks. New York state places a fine of $500 for anyone trespassing on railroad property, but there is no law to keep people from crossing the tracks at a crossing. Therefor it behooves our Common Council to frame an ordinance that will mean safety first to both children and grown-up folks.

Europe and Canada have laws that protect the railroads to the extent that fewer people meet with accidents in foreign countries than they do in the United States.

UNION SERVICES POSTPONED.

The extension of the union evangelistic services conducted by the city's Methodist Episcopal churches precludes the carrying out of the original program for other services of the same nature. CONSUMER'S LEAGUE EXHIBIT

The splendid exhibit of the work of the Consumers' League shown at the library Saturday evening and Sunday received the attention of but a handful of Fulton people. Miss Frankenstein who had charge of the exhibit graciously replied when asked if the exhibit was met as indifferently, or with as much laxity of interest, in the many places throughout the state as was shown here; she stated the belief that "the bad weather and the delayed exhibit" were direct causes for the general non-attendance.

Saturday evening Miss Frankenstein gave a short talk before the grange. She explained the work of the Consumers' League in lessening the horrors of the [illegible] in the big cities where the lives of the working girls are literally ground out. She told of the improvement in factory conditions and of the advantages derived both by the employers and the employes through the work of the League.

Under the supervision of this League the factories which do their work under humane, cleanly, and sanitary conditions are allowed the privilege of placing on their manufactured articles the Consumers' League label. The intelligent shopper who has an interest in reducing the sweatshop horrors buys the garments with these labels.

FUNERAL HELD.

The funeral of Newton E. Dingman, was held from the family home, 113 Rochester st., this afternoon at 2 o'clock. The Rev. H. D. Holmes of the State st. Methodist church officiated. Many firemen from Oswego attended the funeral. Fine floral pieces testified to the esteem of his friends.

The pall bearers were members of the local Fire department, their names follow:

Chief Waugh, Assistant Chief Rude, Geo. Allen, John Young, John Dyer, James Fredenburg, Clinton Marshall, Reymond Davenport.

Interment was made at Mt. Adnah.

PHOENIX WAS BOWLED DOWN

Murphy Did His Best to Drag Along the Other Fellows

A long story could be written of how Hill's bowlers trimmed a Phoenix aggregation on the Onyx alleys Saturday night, but it is sufficient to add merely that the villagers left for home with a few feathers laid and every comb in a wilted condition.

P. Murphy of the Phoenix team bowled the best single game, making a score of 208; he also bowled the best three-game total of 552, and it's too bad his comrades couldn't see the pins as did Murphy.

Perkins, Mrs. Jennie Sullivan, Mrs. Campbell, and Mr. and Mrs. Lester Druse all of Fulton.

A pleasing musical program was rendered by Wm. Miller, Mrs. Druse, Mrs. Pilch, and Mrs. Anna Van Buren, during the afternoon and evening.

A SANE INTERPRETATION.

The Scriptural Attributes of God Contrasted with Those Men Would Give Him.

That the philosophy or preference of the individual as to the characteristics of the duty and his judgment toward men are no avail and really of no effect was the underlying thought in the sermon of Rev. George E. Stockwell at the Sunday morning service in the First M. E. church yesterday.

While taking a well known theme and clearly outlining the truths from the statement that "whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap," the speaker stated his belief in God's justice and righteousness.

That the tendency of dwell upon, and perhaps trust too much to the wonderful mercy of a God or a Savior Dr. Stockwell stated is not "according to Scripture nor common sense reasoning—and a measure to beware of.

If the Almighty being is not just, and not able or likely to punish, would be to put aside the irrefutable fact of the harvest being of like nature to the sowing.

People of all degrees of religious faith and earnestness are so apt to place such a stress on God's mercy that they would believe justice and the inevitable reward of sin will not come becuase of certain expressions on the all pervasive mercy they would prefer an all powerful Being to exercise.

HIGH WATER EXPECTED.

Columbus, O., Feb. 1.—Weather and river experts today expressed the opinion that danger of high water in this vicinity, while not imminent is a possibility because of the rains yesterday and last night and the consequent thawing of the heavy blanket of snow.

RACERS ARE BEHIND TIME RECORDS; 6 TEAMS LEAD.

Chicago, Feb. 1.—Six teams were leading in the six-day bycicle race at Dexter Pavilion at the end of the eighty-first hour (8 a. m.) today, the score being 1,582 miles and 8 laps. The record is 1,621 miles.

The leaders were: Moran-McNamara, Egg-Verri, Walker-Root, Drobach-Piercey, Corri-Carman and Walthour-Bedel.

Four teams were one lap behind. They were: Mitten-Wiley, Linarth-Dupuy, Anderson-Hansen and Kopsky-Colombato. Three laps behind the leaders came Provost and Rudirusse.

PACKAGE SALE POSTPONED.

There was announced in Saturday's Evening Times a package sale to be held at the Jules Wendell jewelry store in Oswego. This sale has been postponed for an indefinite period.

NEW YORK SHOW OF MOTOR BOATS

First Day of Exhibit Attests Popularity of Power Craft

New York, Jan. 31.—The burgee of the National Association of Engine and Boat Manufacturers was masthheaded at Madison Square Garden at 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon and the Eleventh Annual Motor Boat Show was in commission. The Garden was crowded when the show began and at once every one began to inspect the boats and engines that have been built especially for this exhibition.

With a brief inspection it was declared by all that this year's show is the best in the history of the national association because so many improvements have been made in the types of boats shown and in the marine engine as well.

The Garden presents a pleasing appearance. It has been transformed and the picture shown in Venice, the home of the gondola, with its canals and lagoons. Palaces and churches stand in the background making a pretty setting for the modern motor boats, which occupy the greater part of the main floor. The foyer has been tastefully decorated with flags and lanterns and on entering the Garden there is a display of craft that takes the enthusiast back to days of summer and he can almost fancy he smells the salt air and can feel the heave of the seas under his boat.

One of the first exhibits noticed is that the Elco Company of Bayonne, and this includes a 45 foot cruiser, a 32 foot Elco cruisette, an Elco express which will make 30 miles an hour and an Elco run-about which is somewhat slower. The 45 foot cruiser is well known to all motor boat men and it has been the leading boat turnout by this company for three years. It has fine accommodations as well as plenty of room on deck and can be handled easily by one man. The attraction of this exhibit this year is the cruisette, which has more accommodations for its size than any boat yet built. It can sleep eight persons, giving each a berth. The engine, a Lamb three cylinder, is placed aft and drives the boat ten miles an hour. This craft costs $2,490, and it will make five miles on one gallon of gasolene, so it is economical to run as well as moderate in price.

New Lifeboats.

Next on the port side of the Garden is the exhibit of the Gas Engine and Power Company, and as usual the boats sent by this concern are beautifully finished in every way. There is a smaller copy of the Speejacks, owned by Albert Y. Gowen, which is one of the fastest day boats in the country. There is a 25 foot open boat which is called a Speedabout and which can make 20 miles an hour, and in addition to runabouts and launches there is a new type of lifeboat which will carry twenty-four persons safely. This boat has been built to show the steamship men what can be turned out to comply with the new law, which requires that all teamboats carry motor lifeboats.

Close by the gas engine exhibit is that of Fay & Bowen, which consists of most attractive runabouts and launches as well as a fine lot of marine engines. Just aft of this exhibit is the 52 foot cruiser sent down by the Luders Company from Stamford. This is the largest yacht in the Garden, and it was quite a difficult job to get the boat through the doorway on the Twenty-seventh street side. It is a black hulled boat with mahogany fittings and trim and has remarkably good accommodations. It is driven by a Sterling motor.

The Baby Speed Demon II., owned by Mrs. Paula Blackton, is the fastest motor boat in this country, and some think in the world. This boat won the gold challenge cup last year, the trophy for the American mile trials, and this year repeated its victories at the Miami regattas. It is on exhibition at the Sterling Engine Company's space because it is driven by Sterling motors. It has made a mile in 1 minute 20 seconds, which is at the rate of 45 nautical or 51.75 statute miles an hour. Another boat in the Sterling exhibit is a runabout of the Cinderella type built by the Reliance Boat Company and equipped with a Sterling motor. The Cinderella is known to all lovers of the sport as a fine boat for afternoon outings because she has speed and also is dry. A full line of 1915 engines is a feature of the Sterling exhibit and the chief attraction is a six cylinder de luxe motor rated at 50 horse-power at 400 revolutions a minute. This has a bore of 5½ inches and stroke of 8 inches. It is equipped with an electric starter and its price is $3,000.

The Van Blerck display is another that attracts because these engines have done well not only in the speed line but in cruisers, The Flyaway III, owned by J. B. Taylor, won everything that could be won last year, and it was driven by a Van Blerck motor of 100 horse-power. This year Joe Van Blerck has limited his motor to practically three models, which can, however, be made for high, low or medium speeds. There are many new features in these motors which will attract all engine men because Van Blerck is regarded as a genius in the marine motor world.

Immigration Bill Vetoed.

President Wilson has vetoed the immigration bill, as did his predecessors Cleveland and Taft, in a clear and ringing message to Congress. Congress may endeavor to pass it notwithstanding the objections of the President. This is the privilege of Congress. No one criticizes individual members of that great body for seeking to build up their political fences, but the country expects that the collective greatness of its legislative body will solve aright all national questions. The people may differ on the question of whether or not immigration to this country from the countries of Europe should be restricted. We gather from the action of Congress on this measure that there is a growing demand that the gates of America shall be closed as in the past to the travelers from the seaports of the world. But there is no difference of opinion among the students of this problem, that the literacy test for restriction placed in the measure just vetoed is no fitting test of the desirability of immigration, nor is the literacy test a test of the mental force or the character of the foreigner who presents himself here for future citizenship.

President Wilson is certain to touch the patriotic chord in every American citizen by his defense of the right of asylum and the open gate. He points out with exceptional force and impressiveness that the United States has been open since the days of Concord and Bunker Hill to those "who could find nowhere else the right and opportunity of constitutional agitation for what they conceive to be the natural and in-alienable rights of men." Passing on through the history of the country, the President calls attention to the fact that the height of political asylum has brought to this land "many a man of noble character," who has become "an ornament to our citizenship and to our public councils." Continuing, he says:

"The children and the compatriots of these illustrious Americans must stand amazed to see the representatives of their nation now resolved, in the fullness of our national strength and at the maturity of our great institutions, to risk turning such men back from our shores without test of quality or of purpose. It is difficult for me to believe that the full effect of this feature of the bill was realized when it was framed and adopted and it is impossible for me to assent to it in the form in which it is here cast."

The history of the United States abounds in instances of American greatness shorn of education. The battlefields of America were strewn with illiterate heroes. The great crimes of today against society are not the crimes of the illiterate. This proposition has brought a wider discussion of the subject than has been presented in some time, and we rather believe that out of it will come some immigration measure which will be restrictive only of the truly undesirables. Some of the opinions expressed by men of travel and study are interesting and instructive. William Dean Howells says: "Literacy is not a fair test of education. Great numbers of people with trained and able minds cannot read or write." To read and write is an accomplishment. A necessary one, no doubt, in our time but men with minds capable of great achievement are still unshod of that accomplishment.

Jane Addams, in expressing an opinion on the subject said: "At this time when we are hoping that the United States may take a leading part in a new internationalism which will mean such a world reorganization as will guarantee respect for the rights of the different nationalities, the passage of this law would be peculiarly unfortunate. How can we urge Russia, Austria and Germany to recognize the claims of peoples against whom we are at the same moment discriminating." From an immediate effect of this measure on the position of the United States no stronger idea could be advanced.

Of course, there are interests throughout this land which for personal or selfish reasons would nail the gates against those who flee from the oppressions and conditions under which the common folk labor in the lands over the sea. They forget that this is the land of freedom and of opportunity; they forget that it is the haven for the oppressed of every clime. The restriction of immigration should be such as to keep from this country the undesirable of other countries, but it is equally important that the stars and stripes should always carry the message of equal opportunity for all, the right to life, liberty and the pursuie of happiness.—Times, Buffalo.

SNEAK THIEVES ESCAPE IN TAXI.

Syracuse, Feb. 1.—Sneak thieves who robbed the apartment of Arthur [illegible], an attorney, in the Ely flats early yesterday morning, were surpris while at work and escaped in a taxi which was waiting for them outside the building.

Two young men hailed a taxi in South Salina street shortly before 4 o'clock yesterday morning and ordered to be driven to the ely at St. Mary's Circle.

The strangers entered the apartment house and told the chauffeur to await their return. They went to the third floor and stepped into the attorney's apartment.

Mr. Beebe, who has been ill for several weeks, was being cared for by a friend, Newell Johnson. Neither occupant of the apartment heard the thieves enter.

Johnson saw the reflection of one of the men in a mirror in the next room. He jumped to his feet and grappled with the robber, but both men managed to escape. They obtained $35 in cash.

BURGLAR SHOT BY AN OFFICER

Hatchet in Hand the Safecracker Nearly Severed Policeman's Fingers

New York, Feb. 1 - In a running fight with a safe blower he had detected in the jewelry store of Charles L. Wagner, of 135 Grand st. Williamsburg, early today, Policeman Stephen Thornton shot and fatally wounded the fugitive after the burglar had nearly severed two of the officers fingers with a hatchet. An accomplice of the safe cracker escaped with $1,000 worth of jewelry.

The policeman was passing the store when he noticed a light in the rear and saw two men at work on the safe. He entered softly, but the men heard him and one of them darted past him. The policeman took after him and fired two shots to make him halt. Brought to bay the man waited until the policeman approached, then lunged at him with the hatchet. Thornton dodged, threw up his left hand and caught the hatchet. He fired point blank at the safe cracker who fell with a bullet in his breast. The burglar was hurried to a hospital where he lapsed into unconsciousness and has not been identified.

His Business Ability.

In the Adirondacks lives a man too lazy to work, but evidently of great business ability. One winter when he was sitting around smoking his family came so near starvation that some of his neighbors, who could ill afford to help him, took up a collection and bought for the suffering family a barrel of flour, a barrel of pork and a load of wood. They were not considerate enough to cut the wood, but the business man knew how to manage. He hired some of the neighbors who had not contributed to his donation to cut the wood and paid them with half the pork and half the flour.—Lippincott's.

About Sports Generally

By FRANK G. MENKE.

New York, Feb. 1.—It seems as if the dear, old public has been bunked into believing for a large number of years that the baseball game is a gold mine proposition for all those who horn their way into the ownership of a big league baseball club.

The real facts are that very, very few of the big league clubs have averaged more than a 6 or 7 per cent return on their investment during the past eight years—the so-called "golden era" of baseball.

This statement is based on the financial showing of the New York Giants during the past four years—the best possible basis for arriving at estimates on baseball returns.

The profits of the Giants covering the regular season, follows:

1910, $85,030 (actual)
1911, $76,518 (actual)
1912, $84,803 (actual)
1913, $75,000 (estimated)
1914, $80,000 (estimated)

The Giants for many years have been the greatest drawing card in baseball. At home and on the road they outdraw practically every other club from 3 to 1 to 4 to 1. The Giants play 77 games each year on their home grounds. Because there is such a large transient population in New York, as well as such a big crowd of home fans they average around 10,00 and 12,00 a day in attendance.

Against this, clubs such as the Cincinnati Reds, Cleveland Naps, St. Louis Browns, Brooklyn Dodgers and other habitual second division clubs draw and average that rarely goes over 3000 per game.

If the Giants with an average of 10,000 or 12,000 attendance can return profits of only about $80,000 a year during the regular season, it means that the clubs averaging 3000 daily attendance made only one-fourth that amount each year—or about $20,000.

Most of the major league clubs have about $30,000 invested in stands, equipment, etc. A return of 20,000 a year on $300,000 means a dividend of about 6 1-2 per cent. And that's about the best return that major league clubs outside of the pennant contenders and winners have averaged in dividends over a five year stretch.

Of course, during some years one or another of the habitual tail enders may have been in the pennant fight and instead of returning $20,000 profits that year, they doubled the income. That was the case with the Cleveland Naps in 1908 and again in 1913. The Philadelphia Phillies acted as runners up in 1913—to the benefit of the bank-roll. The St. Louis Cardinals spurted in 1914—and drew crowds that meant bigger returns.

But usually the next year the club slumped. It played miserable ball. The fans quit. It wasn't a drawing card on the road and was lucky to break even during that year. So the average profit over a long stretch of years for any but a consistent pennant contender rarely has gone above $20,000. [illegible] we are probably putting our estimate higher than it really is.

HOT LINERS

The lawyer chaps are filled with glee,
They're just as happy as can be
To learn about the minor league the Feds intend to start;
They chuckle to themselves: "Haw, haw,
"That means more business for the law,
"For running baseball leagues these days is sure some legal art."

Willie Beecher got $701 and Freddie Welsh got $2,000 for that Huggin match they staged in the Garden the other night. They were well paid.

MAN DOES NOT TAKE CARE OF HIIS NOSE.

New York, Feb. 1.—One of the most prominent physicians in New York city has called attention to the fact that the average man pays no attention to the most prominent feature of his face—the nose. As a rule he clamps it with eyeglasses that pinch too much or impose upon it spectacles that are altogether too heavy. Then he wonders, continues the doctor, why the nose increases in size or perhaps in redness. Every part of the face comes in for a vigorous scrubbing, but the nose, which needs it most of all; yet it is apt to cause it is being used to breathe through during the ablutions. The result is that the nose gives more and more evidence of being neglected. The tissues become flabby and the pores are filled up. A little massage would work wonders in such cases, but it is rarely given.

WILL C. H. EBBETS BE NEXT MAN FORCED OUT OF BASEBALL?

Charles H. Ebbets, one of the owners of the Brooklyn National league team, is said to be slated to follow Farrell, Murphy and Fogel out of organized baseball. Some of the magnates blame Ebbets for the trouble that sent Joe Tinker to the Federal league and gave that organization much strength. Ebbets has also been known as a friend of Fogel and Murphy, and many believe that baseball interests will be best served by a change of ownership in Brooklyn. Ebbets has been in baseball for many years and is one of the most prominent of the big league magnates.

BIG ED KONETCHY MAY BE KEPT FROM PLAYING BY COURT PROCEEDINGS.

Ed Konetchy, the hard hitting first baseman who jumped from the Pittsburgh Pirates to the Pittsburgh Federal league team, may be kept from playing this year by court proceedings. The Pirates will try to get an injunction restraining Koney from playing with the outlaws. Should this effort be successful Koney will at least be barred from half of the games, those played in the home town.

RED MURRAY MAY BE TRADED TO CINCINNATI BY NEW YORK GIANTS.

Red Murray, outfielder, may be traded by the New York Giants to the Cincinnati Reds. Manager McGraw is better fortified with outfielders than he is with pitchers, and Manager Herzog of the Cincinnati National league team believes that he can use Murray, who is a good fielder and a hard hitter. Murray would probably welcome the change, as he would have a better chance for regular work in Cincinnati than in New York.

Since the outbreak of the European war, America has sold to the allied armies 55,000 horses. Considering the demand for army horses abroad and the tremendous supply of the animals on hand in this country, the shipment is considered small.

This was the view expressed last night by Hon. Seton Robert Beresford, brother of Lord Decies, who will sail today for Liverpool on the Cunard liner Lusitania. Mr. Beresford, who arrived here several days ago from New Orleans, where he had been engaged in selecting and shipping horses to France for the British government, said that the lack of facilities for the shipment of horses was alone responsible for the comparatively small number of animals bought here.

He said he had sent about 10,000 fine animals to France, and in traveling about the country on horseback selecting them had undergone some hard traveling and was ready and fit for any active service in the British army.

The French officers, he said, had credited him with having lowered the mortality of horses in transit about seven per cent.

"Horses require very little food at sea," he said. "Little and often is the best precept until within two or three days of their destination, when they can be fed all they can eat and will then pick up rapidly. Light sorrels, or chestnuts, as we call them, are the most delicate, greys the strongest. The light sorrels succumb so quickly to hardship that it has been found useless to take them."

Mr. Beresford said he believed the demand for horses would be of great benefit to the American farmers and horse breeders, but that the prices would not be increased.

"If anything, the price of horses will go lower. The reserve of horses in this country is enormous, and the competition to sell very keen owing, as I have said, to the absence of local demand. There is not the slightest fear of denuding any part of the country of horses, certainly, for three years. If there appeared to be any likelihood of this there are hundreds of thousands of unbroken ranch horses running practically wild that could be sold to war contractors.

"The Belgians now buying artillery horses in this country are very well pleased, although, like all other foreign buyers, they are finding difficulty in securing the European model. The English have bought the biggest horses mostly for heavy artillery use."

War: Pathos and Humor

Berlin, Feb. 1.—How German soldiers saved the life of a French baby is told in a letter written by an alderman of a West Prussian city who is serving as a battalion adjutant at the front.

"We had taken the village of Ch. by storm," he writes. "The enemy had to be driven from every single house, every barn and every shed. Still we were within the reach of their field guns and so it was impossible for our commissary department to furnish us anything to eat. We had to subsist on what we could find in the village. Luckily we discovered two pigs and the following night two steers were brought in from the pasture outside the village. So the meat question was solved for some days to come.

"But we had hardly anything to drink. The water was dirty and scarce. Besides, our men expected something better and stronger.

"We searched every house, went into every cellar, crept through every garret and found nothing. Finally one of our men called my attention to another house which we had missed. It was badly damaged by shells. The stables were mostly burned down. The yard was covered with French uniforms, bloody clothing, guns and the remnants of slaughtered animals.

"In the cellar of this house we discovered human beings. There were six women and eight children huddled together. I asked them whether they had had anything to eat and they told me the German soldiers had given them bread, soup and some meat.

"While talking to the women I heard the faint cry of a baby and in looking around I discovered in one of the corners a young mother holding a six months old child to her breast. I inquired whether the child was sick and the mother told me it was starving. It had not had any milk for two days.

"It seems the women had told our soldiers about the baby, but they had not understood what was wanted. Then I remembered we had kept the cow we found two days ago in our barn. So we went for the cow.

'One of my men volunteered to milk and got busy. But there was no milk. I ordered another soldier to milk, but the result was the same negative. The idea struck me that where so many soldiers wanted milk for their coffee the cow might have been milked dry. So I placed a guard in front of the cow's stall and ordered him to let no one come near the animal.

"Three hours later we tried again and were overjoyed when we obtained a pitcher full of milk. Immediately we made haste for the cellar where the baby was still crying. It did not cry very much longer.

"The women were profuse in their thanks and one of my men who carried the pitcher scolded them for making so much noise. He was mad because some tears were rolling down his cheeks. He himself is a father of several small children."

LAST WEEK IN THE WAR

SUNDAY, January 24.—Heavy fighting reported in the Argonne, along the Meuse and in Alsace, with an action of particular violence and importance in progress fifteen miles from the Rhine. Russians again resumed general offensive. Their cavalry advance is checked near the Prussian border by the Germans. Reports of the recapture of Kielce, in southwest Poland, by the Russians received. German aeroplanes drop bombs on Dunkirk, wrecking the United States Consular Agency, and the airmen of the Allies attack German submarines in Zeebrugge harbor.

MONDAY, January 25.—British battle cruiser fleet attacks German squadron in the North sea and sinks the German armored cruiser Bluecher, with more than 700 of her officers and men. The British battle cruisers Lion and Tiger are damaged and towed to port for repairs. Two of the German battle cruisers are seriously damaged but escape. French troops again attack Hartmansweiler Kopf, at Steinbach and Uffholz, in upper Alsace. The German War Office announced an Austro-German victory at Kirlibaba, in the southern Carpathians, checking the Russian advance toward Transylvania. It is reported that Hungarians and Austrians are being sent to the western front, exchanging places with German troops in order to strengthen the forces facing the Russians. A Petrograd report says a steamship carrying the entire Turkish aeroplane fleet of sixteen machines has been sunk in the Black sea by Russian ships.

TUESDAY, January 26.—German Admiralty says a British fleet cruiser was sunk in the North sea fight, a statement denied by the British Admiralty. Petrograd reports the Russians have forced the Germans back thirty miles toward the Pilitza and have driven them from Opoczno and Kielce. The Russian movement in northwest Poland reaches a point twenty-five miles southeast of Thorn. The Germans report Russian reverses northeast of Gumbinnen. On the western front the French claim the capture of a Bavarian detachment in Lorraine, the destruction of German bridges over the Meuse at St. Mihiel by French artillery, and artillery successes in the Argonne and in the Champagne district. French attacks on Hartmansweiler Kopf are repulsed with heavy losses, according to the German report.

WEDNESDAY, January 27.—The British Admiralty announces that British casualties in the naval battle in North sea on Sunday were one officer and thirteen men killed and three officers and twenty-six men wounded, and confirms statement that all British ships had returned to port. British bluejackets say German aeroplanes dropped bombs on British ships which were picking up survivors of the Bluecher. It is reported in Copenhagen that German light cruiser Gazelle was badly damaged by a Russian submarine in the Baltic. The French War Office says the British have won a success at La Bassee and that French aeroplanes dropped bombs in preparation for a charge at Craonne, the first instance of this use of aircraft. German War Office says 1,200 yards of British trenches at La Bassee were taken and counter attacks were repulsed. Petrograd announces that Zeppelin which attacked Libau was destroyed and crew captured. Berlin reports recapture of Kielce. The German Government orders the seizure of all corn, wheat and flour. Sir Edward Grey, the British Foreign Minister, replies to the German Chancellor's interview.

THURSDAY, January 28.—Official statements show that the fighting at Craonne, which began on Monday, has been the most violent on the western front in recent months. The German statement says that the French were forced back throughout the Craonne region and that trenches on a front of 1,400 meters were taken, as well as many prisoners. The German Government repeats that a British battle cruiser and two destroyers were sunk in the North sea fight. Vice-Admiral Beatty's official report sustains the earlier statement of the British Admiralty. Turkish invaders of Egypt reach a point east of El Kantara, where a fight with British outposts takes place. Turks are said to have an army of 120,000 men in this campaign. The Russian General Staff announces that Germans have been pushed back in East Prussia to a line twenty-five miles within the frontier and have met further repulses west of Warsaw.

FRIDAY, January 29.—French War Office estimates German losses on western front for first three days of week at 20,000 men. German General Staff announces continued German successes at Craonne, with 1,500 French dead on battlefield and 1,100 prisoners taken in the fighting early in week. Swiss despatches tell of riots in Vienna following latest mobilization call.

SATURDAY, January 30.—Russian General Staff announces new Russian army is invading East Prussia and has reached vicinity of Tilsit. The French War Office says the Germans were defeated twice near Soissons and were turned back in efforts to cross the Aisne. German aviators bombarded Dunkirk Thursday night and French aviators bombarded the German troops at Laon, La Fere and near Soissons. A New York Italian newspaper quotes the Turin Stampa as saying that Austria has ceded Trieste and the Trentino to Germany so that the Kaiser may offer these to Italy as the price of her further neutrality.

Holds Off A Burglar.

How An Indiana Woman Was Able To Stand the Severe Strain.

Mrs. Johanna Foegely, of South Bend, Ind., recently passed through a most thrilling experience, which would be a severe strain upon any person and especially so for a woman of 72 years of age. An Indiana paper contains a long and interesting account of it, saying that the burglar would soon have ransacked the house had it not been for the coolness and presence of mind of Mrs. Foegely, who cleverly diverted his attention, even while the burglar kept a revolver at her head, commanding her to "keep quiet or I will send a bullet through you," until he feared to remain longer. This is the Mrs. Foegely who was permanently relieved of dangerous Kidney and Bladder disease in 1900, by the prompt use of Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy; and because she possessed this good health and strength she was able to withstand the shock of her recent experience. Here is the first statement Mrs. Foegely gave, in 1900:

"For over three years I suffered from the most painful disease in my Kidneys and Bladder. Other remedies and my doctor failed to do me any good. I was induced to send for a bottle of Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy and I felt better before I had taken the first bottle. I am now cured and I will always recommend it."

In 1912 Mrs. Foegely writes another letter in which she says, in part:

"My testimony is as good as ever. The doctors all gave me up and told my daughter that anyone with such Kidneys could not live. After I had taken three bottles of your Favorite Remedy I talked to one of the doctors who treated me. He saw that I was better. I told him what I was doing, and he said I should keep on taking it. I took seven bottles and considered myself cured (that was 13 years ago). I am now past 72 years of age. I feel as well as ever, but a little nervous at present, owing to that burglar experience."

Brave Mrs. Foegely! She is a "little nervous," and who wouldn't be? But she had the strength to stand it and twelve years ago her doctors said she would die! She us. Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy in time and another name is added to the long list of men and women who have been permanently relieved or cured of serious Kidney, Bladder and Liver troubles by this reliable medicine. The Good Luck It Brought to a Humble Admirer

By JONAS ALLEN BOWERS

Old Abe Driggs stumped down the road toward Mason Cadbury's corner store. There, in the back room, he was to meet Dan Fleer.

"I want ter see you erbout something most 'ticular, Abe," had been Dan's message.

"I reckon mebbe it's erbout trading in my patch of taters for victuals," mused Abe, his black face shining with anticipated joy in the haggling.

But it was not about potatoes or goods from Dan's store in Cartersville, nine miles away. It was a proposition that almost took Abe's breath away.

"It's this a-way, Abe," whispered Dan across the little round table in the back room, "there's money in it for you and for me. I know you have been saving money fer to go no'th to live wid your gal, Hannah Mary—and I knows you done lost all you had sayed to dat gold mining schemer from Nashville. Well, you all wants ter make $20 all ter once—eh?"

"Twenty dollars is good money," admitted Abe, "but I was calcalatin' on a leetle mor—'nuff ter keep me in terbaccy and rheumatiz lotion till I can get some chores to do. Hannah Mary says there's plenty chores for a respeccable man to do in de no'th."

"Say $40, Abe. You kin make it easy," he urged.

"Well, you knows Kunnel Twiddle's chicken yhads"—

"Lordy, Dan Fleer! I ain't no chicken thief!" replied Abe angrily.

"Ain't you?" sneered Dan. "You recomember dat time way back in de cotton blast winter when yo' was caught transforming chickens from Mister Bemis' henhouse? De jedge fined you—I fergit how much 'twas!"

"Three dollars and costs," murmured Abe regretfully. "And when Mister Bemis heard how come it dat my little Hannah Mary was born dat berry night and I wanted de hens to make broth and buy de medicine why he paid de fine himself—he shore was a powerful fine gentleman, sah!"

"All you got to do, Abe, is to go up to your back lot and creep under de fence. De kunnel's henhouse is plumb up agin de fence. De door has just an ornery hasp, and it's as rotten as punk. I'll be on de other side of de fence, and as fast as you pass dem hens over I'll plump 'em inter my bags.

"Outer 300 chickens de kunnel won't miss a measley hundred. De hotel keeper over to Cartersville will pay me 25 cents er pound and no questions asked. What say, Abe?"

"When do I get my money?" whispered the weakening Abe.

"When de last hen pops inter de bag," promised Dan recklessly, although he knew that his own pockets would be empty until the unprincipled hotel keeper paid for the stolen poultry.

Uncle Abe thought of the little store of money which he had imprudently invested in bogus mining stocks. He thought of his daughter Hannah Mary, who had married a northern negro and was now widowed with two small children to care for. Hannah Mary was an expert laundress, and she had written her father saying that if he could sell the little cabin and come north he could make his home with her. Little Abe and Mary wanted to see their "grandpap."

Abe's heart hungered for these kin, but he had patiently tilled his little plot, hoarding his money for the northern trip. Now that it had vanished he must wait another year or so before going, unless some big luck happened or he could sell the cabin.

But land and tumbledown cabins were almost valueless in South Carolina then, and his going to Hannah Mary and the grandchildren must wait for the big luck to come.

Was this scheme of Dan Fleer's the big luck in disguise?

"I 'spect dem little gran'chillun is tired waitin' fer dere grandpap ter come," insinuated Dan wickedly.

"I'll do it, Dan," whispered Abe, "but," he added despondently, "I don't reckon I'll ever look Marse Linkum in de face agin!"

"Marse Linkum?" jibed Dan Fleer. "Yore crazy, Uncle Abe! Marse Linkum been dead dese thirty years—shore you don't wanter look no ghos' in de face! Lordy!" He shuddered.

"I mean what I said," retorted Abe with dignity. "Now, Dan, when do you reckon you'll discompose dis yere nefarious deed?"

"Tonight."

"Tonight! I ain't got no time fer reflecksh um," bemoaned Abe.

"De less reflecksh uming you do, Abe Driggs, de nearer you'll get to dat $40," warned Dan as he arose to go. "You be at your back fence prezactly at 2 o'clock, when de moon sets, and de rest is easy. My mule waggin 'll be back in de woods, and in half an hour the hull thing will be did."

Once inside of his homely little cabin Abe hung his hat on its accustomed peg and sat down in his big rocking chair.

It was a very tidy, comfortable little home, with a rag carpet on the floor and a battered but shining little cook stove in one corner. There were many little evidences of Hannah Mary's love, for Uncle Abe heard often from his devoted daughter in New York.

Over the mantelpiece hung Uncle Abe's choicest treasure, a large engraved portrait of his idol, Abraham Lincoln, whose love of right and justice had struck the shackles of slavery from Abe's wrists as well as those of thousands of his people.

The portrait of Abraham Lincoln was an inspiration and a companion to Abe Driggs. There were some in the Baptist chapel who complained that Abe followed the precepts of Lincoln rather than those laid down in the Bible, but the parson defended Abe by retorting that as Abraham Lincoln had the good book for his guide Abe could not be far wrong.

Now, Abe, as usual when he was troubled, addressed the portrait of the deliverer.

"Scuse me, Marse Linkum," he said apologetically; "I's got ter ask you a question. I reckon you'd think it was wicked if I was to transform a hundred of Kunnel Twiddle's hens to Dan Fleer and take $40 ter git no'th to Hannah Mary, even if I paid back the $40 soon's I could git some chores"—

Abe stopped short.

Even in the lamplight he could see the kindly face of Abraham Lincoln looking down at him, and the eyes were sad—so very sad and disapproving.

"Lordy!" quavered Abe, and mounting upon a chair he turned the frame toward the wall, so that the accusing eyes could no longer follow him. "Oh, I gotter do it," he muttered, as he clambered breathlessly down. "If I don't see them little chillums this winter, laik as not I never will, nohow!"

His mind quite made up, Abe hobbled around the room, making a pot of strong tea and frying some bacon and hominy for his supper. He heated some bricks and put them between the sheets of his bed so that it might be warm for his rheumatic limbs when he crept under the covers to sleep until midnight.

He did not sleep.

He shivered until his cracked old clock wheezed out the hour of 12; then he got up and dressed and swallowed some scalding coffee to infuse warmth into his shaking limbs.

At 1 o'clock he was crouching in the shadow of Colonel Twiddle's henhouse, waiting for Dan Fleer.

Far away in the dark woods an owl hooted, and later came the sharp bark of a fox. Then, echoing, came the hollow "heehaw" of Dan Fleer's mule.

"Lordy!" shivered Abe, thinking of Abraham Lincoln's accusing eyes. "Whatever would Marse Linkum think of dis yere bizness?"

Moments passed—a half hour, and still Dan Fleer did not come. Abe pictured Dan thrashing the big mule with a stout stick. On critical occasions like the present the mule chose to exercise his characteristic obstinacy.

The moon had set and darkness wrapped the undulating fields. The group of henhouses bulked large in the foreground. Over yonder, beyond the group of tall holly trees, was the Twiddle mansion. Its windows were dark. The colonel's family slept peacefully, not suspecting that their humble neighbor and friend, Abe Driggs, was plotting to rob the henroost.

Abe writhed in self contempt.

Then resolve took possession of him and sent him hurrying down to his cabin. Five minutes afterward he came forth with the picture of Abraham Lincoln under his arm.

"I dassent do it without your help, sah," he addressed the portrait. "It's a case of where I's gotter have a boost, and dey ain't any one here on yearth kin stand by me like you kin!"

So with Abraham Lincoln as a moral support to lean his weak will upon poor old Abe Driggs climbed the slope to the henhouses, squeezed through the fence and then struck into the path that led down to the Twiddle mansion.

As he approached the house a dog stirred in the kennels, but recognizing a friendly step returned to his slumber. Abe's heart contracted at the thought that Dan Fleer had counted on Abe's good reputation and his friendship with the Twiddle dogs to accomplish the theft without discovery.

What happened to Abe Driggs afterward Dan did not care.

Abe's first impulse was to go to the back door, but it was doubtful if he could arouse Colonel Twiddle in that way. So he reluctantly went to the front door and reverently pulled the big brass bellknob.

The clanging sound thrilled through the great rooms of the house. There was a distant stirring overhead. A light pricked out of the darkness, and Abe, peering through the side lights of the door, could see Colonel Twiddle, wrapped in his dressing gown, descending the stairs, holding a lighted candle. At the head of the stairs fluttered white robes that indicated that Mrs. Twiddle and the young ladies had also been aroused by the unexpected summons.

What the colonel thought one might not guess, but Abe noticed that his white hair was tumbled over his fine head and that gave to his stern features a rather fierce expression.

"Lordy, it may mean jail—but hold tight, Massa Linkum, I gotter do it!" whispered Abe as the door was thrown open.

"Well?" demanded the colonel, peering out into the porch. "Oh, it's you, Abe! What in thunder do you want at this time of night?"

"Please, Kunnel Twiddle, I gotter see you most important, sah," pleaded Abe.

"Very well, come in—but what has happened that you are wandering around at midnight with a picture under your arm? Your house hasn't burned down, eh?"

"No, sah, thank de Lord," returned Abe, then clutching the frame tightly under his arm he launched forth into his story. He spared no detail of the plot to steal the colonel's chickens, except that he would not divulge the names of the other conspirators—Dan Fleer and the hotel proprietor.

"A set of scoundrels!" fumed the colonel testily, turning toward the stairs, and Abe saw to his mortification that Mrs. Twiddle and her two lovely daughters had donned dressing gowns and formed an interested audience on the stairs.

"You mustn't blame Uncle Abe, Horace," protested Mrs. Twiddle.

"Yes, ole miss," said Abe sadly. "I done planned ter steal them hens. I talked it over with Marse Linkum, and he looked so nachurally sad and disgusted dat I turned his kind face to de wall and went my wicked way. Den, waiting dere by de henhouse for D—de odder villun, sah, I jes' couldn't make out ter do it—and, being a weak sinner, I jes' brought Marse Linkum erlong to sort of bolster me up—and dat's all."

"Marse Lincoln—what on earth does he mean?" cried the ladies in chorus.

So Colonel Twiddle lighted the big globular lamp on the newel post and made Abe display his treasure and explain how it had helped him to overcome the temptation to steal in order to obtain the much coveted money to pay his expenses north, where Hannah Mary and the "chillun" awaited his coming.

"If I die before I gits dere," Abe ended gravely, "I reckon my conscience will be clear anyways! And dat's something, even if dem pore chillums don't never see dere wicked old grandpappy!"

Colonel Twiddle's hand came down upon the bent shoulder. "Don't you worry about that, Abe," he said heartily. "I've been wanting to buy your land and cabin, but I didn't know you wanted to sell it. Come over at 11 o'clock today and I'll have Lawyer Smith here to draw the papers. About $200—does that suit you?"

Two hundred dollars!

There was no sign of Dan Fleer or the mule. Afterward it developed that they had never reached the rendezvous, for the mule had elected to remain at the cross roads until dawn. The next day Abe sent word to Dan that he had sold his place and was going north at once.

And when Hannah Mary and the much admired grandchildren met Uncle Abe in the railroad station Hannah Mary relieved the bewildered old man of a large square package.

"Don't let no harm come to dat, Hannah Mary," cautioned Abe. "If it hadn't been for Marse Linkum I wouldn't have been here at all."

Making an Acquaintance.

In illustration of the ways of the east side of London the following true story is told: A certain club for working girls in the east end of London had recently elected a new member, and one day the secretary happened to look out of the window and was surprised to see the new member rush up to a strange lad in the street, punch him violently on the head and then run away. The secretary remonstrated with her sharply, to which the new member made reply: "I'm very sorry. I won't do it no more if it's agin the rules, but perhaps you won't mind telling me, then, how am I ever to get engaged?"

ALBANY LETTER DAY BY DAY

Cardoze Tells Times' Readers the Doings of Officials and Lawmakers

By FREDERICK T. CARDOZE.

Albany, Feb. 1.—And now it appears that there are other places than Reno where divorces may be obtained, although it is doubtful if the fact would have been brought out had not a bill been introduced in the legislature to amend the Indian law. The presentment of the amendment disclosed the fact that the Indian Reservations within the state a court of feathered Red Men so known as the Peacemakers Court, has the power to annul marriages which have been contracted by Indian residents thereon.

It is an interesting fact that in 1909, when the Indian law went into effect, it gave to the stately warriors who might be chosen from the several Indian tribes in the state as members of the Peacemakers Court, full authority to sit as judges upon their fellow braves and their dusky squaws. Since that time the official records of the clerk of the court in question are doubtless chronicled the proceedings of more than marital mixup.

The Peacemakers Court is no superficial body but on the contrary a powerful branch of the system of government which the Indians of the state obey. The oldest member of the Peacemakers Court is the presiding judge and before him and his associates must be brought all domestic tangles for settlement. The court has power to summon witnesses at will to assist in the administering of all manner of justice.

Assemblyman De Hart Ames of Cattaraugus county, now desires to amend the Indian law so as to extend the jurisdiction of the Peacemakers Court by removing the limitation of $100 upon the amount of the award which may be made by that court. The introduction of his bill brought to light the generally unknown authority to annul marriages that body posesses.

There is another bill which has been introduced which presents some interesting features also; the bill of Assemblyman Feinberg. This legislator is looking up statistics which which will inform him as to the number of commercial travelers in the state. He wants this information to help out his measure which is aimed to give men engaged in this line of work an opportunity of voting.

Several attempts have been made during recent years to have a law passed which would permit commercial travelers to vote. One plan was to perfect a system whereby they could mail in their votes; another was that they might register and vote by affidavit. Neither became laws.

The text of the Feinberg bill is that no elector shall lose his vote because temporarily absent on the last day of registration from the city or village wherein he resides. The legislature is given power to provide the manner in which such absent voter may register.

Although there are many besides commercial travelers who are compelled to be absent from their homes on the last day of registration, drummers are by far the most numerous of those who fail to register and the Feinberg bill would be greatly to their advantage. Actors would come under the provisions of the Feinberg bill also, though, as a matter of fact, the men of histrionic attainment seldom appear at the polls.

Temperance Reform.

One of the important questions which the Republican legislature now in session in this state should consider is that of temperance reform. The members of the legislature should take up this question in a sane and practical way and endeavor to frame legislation that when enacted will eliminate so far as possible the evils of intemperance and improve conditions in the state.

The people of the state under the present liquor tax law have local option in all the rural counties and under the existing law those who violate it are severely punished.

The local option feature of the present liquor law in all the rural counties has worked well and it gives the people in every town the right to say whether or not they will grant a license to hotels, to drug stores or to saloons. This provides for home rule and for local option and the penalties for violation of the law are severe, much more so than the penalties proposed in the bogus so-called local option bill of the Anti-Saloon league.

Not only this but the so-called local option bill of the Anti-Saloon league provides for local option by villages and under this provision in Wayne county and nearly every other rural county in the state many of the towns which are now "dry" would go "wet." The people in the villages would vote for license and therefore such villages as Sodus, Wolcott, Savannah, Macedon, Ontario, Williamson and Walworth would probably go "wet," while now the rural voters in the country districts carry these towns "dry."

This is one of the evil provisions of the local option bill of the Anti-Saloon league to which we wish to call to the attention of every minister and every temperance citizen who have been supporting this measure. This feature of the bill fathered by the Anti-Saloon league is indefensible and no temperance man or woman who understands this provision and realizes what its effect would be can by any possibility support the measure.

The legislature should give scant attention to this bogus local option bill which would upset the present effective local option system in every rural county of the state.

The liquor traffic directly and indirectly is the cause of much of the crime and pauperism in the state and it is the theory of the Raines law, and it is a correct theory, that this business should be heavily taxed and be made to contribute to the support of the state institutions which are burdened with the insane, with the paupers and with the criminals who are more or less, directly or indirectly, produced by the evils of the liquor traffic. This is the philosophy of the Raines law and its enactment eliminated thousands of saloons in the state and it was a practical step forward in the cause of temperance notwithstanding the abuse which has been heaped upon the law by ignorant fanatics.

Thomas B. Reed, one of the greatest statesmen this country has produced, soon after the Raines law was enacted, took occasion to say:

The Raines liquor tax law is the boldest, the most constructive and statesmanlike piece of excise legislation ever placed upon the statutes of any state.—Republican, Lyons.

Study and Fix In Your Mind These Airship Possibilities of North Sea.

The island of Helgoland, off the coast of Germany, is not only a naval base, but also the most up to date Zeppelin station. From it a modern Zeppelin, which is capable of flying 600 miles at a stretch, can undertake cruises of considerable length over the North sea and can survey the greater part of that portion of the Atlantic ocean. Indeed, an airship, having a radius of action of 360 miles, can travel from Helgoland to any point bounded by the arc, Z, Z, Z. From any position on that arc, Z, Z, Z, a Zeppelin at a height of, say, 4,000 feet, could in fine weather make observations over a farther distance of twenty-five miles, so that, although the range of action of a Zeppelin from Helgoland would be limited by the arc, Z, Z, Z, its range of observation would extend up to the arc, O, O, O. The section lined area contained by the arc, O, O, O and Z, Z, Z, is a belt which, under normal conditions of wind and weather, would be beyond the radius of action of a Zeppelin, but over which it would be able to keep watch. Zeppelins, stationed at Helgoland, could, therefore, observe over the thousands of square miles of sea area which lie between the arc, O, O, O, and the coast of continental Europe. Observation carried out by the Zeppelin over the North sea could not be sent by wireless telegraphy unless the airship were within the cross section lined area, bounded by the arc, W, W, W, and the mainland of Europe. The radius of the arc, W, W, W, is 150 miles, which is the range of the wireless telegraphy apparatus fitted on a modern Zeppelin. If a Zeppelin, therefore, has made an observation beyond 150 miles from Helgoland it would have to return to within that range before it could send its wireless message. This is an important point to remember in dealing with the new factor which has been introduced into naval warfare by the advent of air craft, for it shows that it is only within the arc, W, W, W, that a Zeppelin can maintain contact with its adversaries and headquarters. If we now examine the radius of action from various points of the English coast of the aeroplane, which is capable of flying 400 miles at a stretch, we shall see that, with an aviation base near Sheerness, observations can be carried out within the area contained by the T arc, A, A, A. From a point near Cromer aeroplanes can scout the sea area within the T arc, B, B, B. With Scarborough as center observations by means of aeroplanes can be carried out within the T arc, C, C, C, and from a point near Peterhead aeroplanes can make observations within the T arc, D, D, D. Of all the various circles that can be described with a radius of 360 miles about a center lying on the English coast the one drawn from a point near Cromer cuts the greatest area of the Zeppelin wireless zone. This is useful to note. Another point of practical importance is that there is a zone in the northeast of the North sea which can be scouted by means of Zeppelins stationed at Helgoland, but which cannot be reached by aeroplanes from the British coast. That zone is denoted by dotted lines in the sketch.

GERMANY WILL FIGHT TO THE END, SAY DUTCH

Amsterdam, Feb. 1.—Germany is expecting to take over the 19,500 ton dreadnought Salamis which is being built for the Greek government at Stettin. The Greek naval attache who was supervising the construction of the warship has left Germany. Dutch papers commenting upon the report says that Baron Von Burin, the Austrian foreign minister who went to Berlin to urge Germany to peace expressed his belief that the Kaiser will fight to the end. It is taken as a forgone conclusion that the war will last six months longer.

SUBMARINE DID NOT WARN MERCHANTMAN

London, Feb. 1.—That the British steamer, Tokomaru was torpedoed by a German submarine without any previous warning being given, was the declaration made today by members of her crew. The ship was getting ready to enter Havre harbor at 9 a. m. when the torpedo struck amidships carrying away the bulworks and bridge. The captain and third officer saw the periscope of the submarine. As the submarine was heaving away S. O. S. calls were sent out and half a dozen French torpedoboat destroyeds came up. Until contrary word was received today it was believed that the steamer Ikaria had also been sent to the bottom.

Rome, Feb. 1.—The Italian War Office ordered the army Reservists of the classes called out last week to report to the colors before Feb. 20. The war office has offered to place troops at the disposal of the Germans and Austrian Ambassadors to protect the embassies against the war riots which took place Sunday.

Berlin, by wireless, Feb. 1.—Thhe War Office announced this afternoon that there have been no new developments in the western theater of war during last tenty-four hours. It says there is nothing important to report from East Prussia.

TRADE SHOWS IMPROVEMENT

Dun's Review Says Mill Operations Are Expanding; Production Increasing

New York, Jan. 30.—Domestic trade is slightly larger both in volume and activity, but the movement continues slow and business optimism is far in advance of actual gains. The signs of improvement are much more significant than any developments resulting from the depression produced by the European war. The most important event in the iron and steel trade is not the poor showing for the last quarter, followed by the passing of the common stock dividend of the United States Steel Corporation, but rather the evidences that the turn toward normal conditions has been made and that mill operations are now expanding. The decline in the securities market as a result of the passing of this dividend is less an indication of the drift of business than is the successful financing of Pennsylvania railroad requirements, the notable ease in money, the better collections and the general feeling of confidence as regards the financial situation. Statistics of bank clearings and railroad earnings, revealing that the volume of business is still below normal, are of less significance than the fact that the decreases are themselves on a declining scale that is to say, improvement has set in and both production and traffic are increasing. The textile markets are broadening in activity and in a number of lines prices are firmer. Many cotton mills are running practically at full capacity. The wool market is fairly active and the shoe trade reports a slow betterment. Copper, coal and lumber have recently developed a broader demand. From all the leading cities come reports of improvement in conditions and a widening conviction that the year is to have a progressive, though conservative, business advance. The west is profiting by the enormous world demand for breadstuffs, and the situation in that section is naturally better than in other sections of the country. Exports are also increasing of other American products, both raw and manufactured, and army orders are large.

The improvement in iron and steel develops slowly and mill operations continue at about 50 per cent of capacity on the average. Certain lines, such as wire products, sheets and tin plate, reflect substantial progress, but no material strengthening of prices is apparent.

Additional business has been received from the transporting companies, further orders for close to 75,000 tons of rails having been placed in the west, while one eastern system has let contracts of 15,000 tons. The chief feature in the export trade is the booking of 10,000 tons of rails for the Chilean State Railways; France has purchased 10,000 tons in England and Sweden has bought 15,000 tons in Germany. Eastern shipyards are anticipating one of their busiest years, as eleven vessels are now under contract and others are pending, aside form the Government's naval programme that will be announced later.

New demands continue to broaden in wholesale dry goods lines and the markets rule very steady, with advances announced on bleached and brown cottons. Export business with many of the smaller ports is well maintained, but the Far Eastern countries are buying in a very limited way. Duck and certain other classes of goods are still in request for European military purposes, while fine and fancy wash fabrics are in improved distribution, especially the former. Some sheetings have recovered as much as 3-8c. a yard from the low level of 1914 and quite a few numbers are up from 1-8c. to 1-4c. this year. There is a better movement in prints and staple ginghams, some lines having advanced and being well sold for the next 60 days. On woolens and worsted staple goods are being opened for fall and irregularity has characterized the price situation thus far. There has been a large business for forward delivery on broadcloths of the best types; in one instance sales have been greater in volume than ever before. The men's wear mills are quite busy on war cloths and this aids materially in keeping working forces employed.

Trading in footwear continues of the whole much below normal. Manufacturers are encouraged by some increase in the interest displayed and good business is expected following the departure of visiting buyers in the eastern markets. For spring wear men's high grade shoes in dark tan calf are selling well, but the question of styles is still a perplexing matter and on this account many jobbers are reluctant to place sizable contracts.

MONTANA OFF TO HAITI.

Washington, Feb. 1.—The armored cruiser Montana, Capt. Lewis M. Multon, and carrying 600 marines, was ordered today to go from Guamtanamo to Port au Prince to aid other vessels there in protecting American interests. Secretary Daniels said that reports from naval officers showed continued activity among the revolutionists.

RAILROAD BRIDGE BLOWN UP; GERMAN ADMITS THE ACT

Structure Spanning Maine River Crossed by Many Trains Carrying to Canada War Supplies; International Investigation to Come; Piers too Greatly Damaged

Portland, Maine, Feb. 2.—It is reported here that a German officer named Horn has been arrested in connection with the blowing up of the railway bridge of the St. Croix river at Vanceboro early today, and officials of the Maine Central railroad declare that he has practically admitted his guilt.

Horn was arrested on United States soil near Vanceboro by State Game Warden George W. Rois. He was taken to Vanceboro and examined by Washington county officials.

Following is the story of the blowing up of the railroad bridge at Vanceboro, Me.:

Vanceboro, Maine, Feb. 2.—The steel bridge over the St. Croix river from Vanceboro, Me., to McAdam Junction, N. B., and important link in the Canadian Pacific railway, over which most of the war shipments of food and horses have been sent to St. John's, N. B., was blown up shortly after 1 o'clock this morning bzy Germans and German sympathizers, according to the belief of railroad officials.

The eastern one of the three stone piers which supported the bridge was destroyed by some high explosive, with a detonation which rocked the houses in Vanceboro, shattering the windows of the railroad station and alarming the residents on the Canadian side of the river.

The steel girders of the last two spans at the Canadian end of the bridge were strained out of shape, held together by the fragments, and by the steel rails. Not only was the third pier, that toward the Canadian end of the bridge, completely wrecked, but it is believed that the straining of the steel structure has damaged to a great extent the standing piers.

Neither the Maine Central nor the Canadian Pacific railway can advance any motive for the wrecking of the bridge other than one arising from the war. There has been no guard of Canadian soldiers on duty at the bridge. Railroad men intimate that Germans or German sympathizers seized the opportunity on a stormy night, at a time when traffic over the bridge was slack, to cut into the transportation over which Canada has been shipping most of its provisions to St. John.

"This bridge was dynamited," said Superintendent Grout of the Canadian Pacific, who is in direct charge of that part of the road on which the bridge is situated, "The eastern end of the bridge was wrecked by a bomb, detonated with a time fuse, probably set a considerable time before the explosion. There has been a guard and a watchman on duty at the bridge, the guard during the day and the watchman at night. The bomb must have been placed during the change of guards."

Neither the Canadian searchers nor those on the American side of the river could obtain any trace of those who might have been responsible for the explosion. The high wind and the falling snow obliterated any footprints that might otherwise proved valuable in running down their trail. All the searchers could find was the wreckage that covered the ice.

James Hawthorn, constable, the only Canadian official near the bridge when the explosion occurred. immediately got in touch with the telephone exchange at Woodstock, N. B. He requested the telephone operator to notify the Canadian authorities at Fredericton, N. B.

Assistant General Manager A. Price, of the Canadian Pacific railroad at Montreal, was notified by the railroad operator of the Maine Central at Vanceboro. After ordering out several pile drivers and wrecking crews, Mr. Price sent an official notification of the explosion to the Governor of New Brunswick, at Fredericton, with a request for an international investigation of whatever sort it might seem necessary to the Governor.

The Canadian customs officials at Vanceboro turned out at once when they heard the detonation. Nearly the entire population of Vanceboro hurriedly dressed and ran out to the wrecked bridge.

They ventured out on the bridge over two spans of the steel bridge they came to the end of the girders sloping down to the ice of the river.

The combined energies of the Canadian Pacific and the Maine Central were concentrated at once toward restoring freight traffic over the bridge. Passengers will be transported over the frozen river by sleigh, from one end of the bridge to th other.

Governor Wood at New Brunswick said:

"I shall at once take the necessary steps to secure an investigation of the destruction of this bridge. It will, of course, follow that we will take precautions to prevent any more bridges being destroyed while we are trying to secure the punishment of the guilty in this agair."

The bridge was a steel structure, built in 1910. It was 1,200 feet long and was supported on three granite piers. It crosses the St. Croix river, at this point the boundary between Canada and the United States.

GIRL MADE HER SUICIDE THREAT

New York, Feb. 2.—After her threat to commit suicide had been treated as a jest by her companions, Madeline Bickhard, aged 18, jumped from a window of her home on the tenth floor of the Annehilde apartment today. Her body was found lying in the snow an hour later. Miss Bickhard, who was employed as an attendant in a sanitarium in Stamford, Conn., left a note for her mother saying:

"Don't worry, dear mother, I am going to a better world. I could not stan dthe suffering." She had been ill of heart disease.

GERMAN SUSPECT FRESH FROM NEW YORK CITY

Vanceboro, Me., Feb. 2.—The German suspect who was arrested in connection with the destruction of the railway bridge on the Canadian border told the authorities in broken English that his full name is Werner Van Horn and that he came here from New York on Saturday. It is believed the plot was hatched in New York. A German flag was found in the prisoner's pocket.

PITTSBURGH LOOKING FOR ITS BIGGEST FLOOD

Pittsburgh, Feb. 2.—Danger from flood is increasing. The Ohio river at the junction of the Monongahela and Alleghaney rivers reached a height of 26 feet this morning and with the steady rainfalls throughout western Pennsylvania it is expected that a height of 28 or 30 feet will be reached by midnight. The river is at present above the flood level and higher than at any period since the spring of 1913. Merchants are removing their goods from stores along the water front and transporting them to higher grounds. Residents in the lowlands are removing household goods to high land.

LATE WAR BULLETINS

Berlin, by wireless, Feb. 2.—Only artillery duels in the western theater of war are reported in an official statement issued by the War Office this afternoon. South of the Vistula in the eastern theater of war German attacks are progressing.

Berlin, via Amsterdam, Feb. 2.—French aeroplanes have bombarded Muelhausen and Reichweiler, in Upper Alsace, doing heavy damage, says a dispatch to the Berliner Tageblatt from Strassburg. At Muelhausen the aviators concentrated their fire upon the railway station. Reichweiler is three miles northwest of Muelhausen.

London, Feb. 2.—German spies are suspected of an attempt to wreck a British military train near Avonmouth today. Stones were placed upon the track.

BRITISH GAIN AND HOLD

Paris, Feb. 2.—The tide of battle on the La Bassee front in northern France has swung in favor of the British after a terrific engagement. The official statement issued by the War Office says that the Germans lost a fierce assault against the British lines at Guinchy, near La Bassee and that the British rallied and in counter attacks not only gained all the ground they had lost but took some German trenches in retaliation.

Germans Also Suffer Severely in Poland in Furious Assault Upon Russians Defending Warsaw

Petrograd, Feb. 2.—Seventy thousand Turks were killed, wounded or taken captive by the Russians in the decisive battle in the Caucasus, which ended with the rout of Enver Pasha's army at Karaurgan and Sari-Kamysch. These figures are given in the Bourse Gazette, an official newspaper. One hundred and sixty thousand residents of Persia and Turkey have been left homeless through the devastation of the country by the Turkish armies.

RUSSIAN ARTILLERY TOO MUCH FOR GERMANS

By FRANCIS LAVELLE MURRAY.

Petrograd, Feb. 2.—Another great battle has developed east of Lowicz in Poland where furious attacks and counter attacks have been in progress for three days. In an official statement issued today it was admitted that, on Sunday, the Russians holding the front near Belimow were driven from their first line trenches, but later they regained some of these. The German losses are described as colossal. The forces of Field Marshal Von Hindenburg drove their furious assaults against the Russian center despite the pounding of the Russian artillery. The fighting in that region indicates that the Germans are trying to launch another drive against Warsaw to divert the Russians from their operations in East Prussia.

Seventy-eight officers and 4,065 men of lower rank in the Austro-German armies operating the Carpathians were captured by the Russians during the past week, it is officially announced today. The statement says:

"German prisoners report that the Germans last week lost over 6,000 in killed and many prisoners. In the Carpathians the Russians captured 78 officers and 4,065 men and tpok ten rapid fire guns and ten cannon.

"On Sunday the Germans concentrated a great force with artillery in the region of Sochaczew, Berjimow and Belimow (east of Lowicz in Poland) and developed an offensive of great tenacity which compelled us to retire to our second line of trenches. Counter attacks by the Russians turned the Germans out of all the trenches they had occupied, causing them colossal losses. Simultaneously with the Berjimow attack the Germans carried out a series of determined assaults along a front from the village of Gouime to the hamlet of Moghelj, these being supported by heavy artillery and rifle fire and partly by the bayonet.

"Between noon and 2 o'clock Sunday afternoon, thanks to the activity of their artillery against our trenches, the Germans succeeded in carrying a part of them. At 2 o'clock we began a general counter attack with the result that, toward evening on Sunday the enemy retained only a small part of our advanced trenches and a castle. Thus the German successes on Sunday in the vicinity of Berjimow

Hobson Running Amuck.

Representative Hobson should not mix national prohibition and national defence, or the suspicion will arise that he is a fanatic on both questions. If there is one thing that goes to his head more than another and distorts perspective it is national prohibition. When he hitched it up with naval expansion in the House and rode both his hobbies furiously he was a spectacle for gods and men.

What could have been more irrational than the Captain's charge that the Wilson administration [illegible] gained for peace with Japan by giving assurances that the United States would soon retire from the Philippines and by promising Japan that she shall have a free hand in China at the cost of the open door? Captain Hobson did the cause of national defence no good, but an injury, by his wild ranting, and we should think that the national prohibitionists would want to clap an extinguisher upon him. He must also have done the Administration he was attacking a good turn.

A long season of silence in his seat would become Mr. Hobson and relieve his friends in the Democratic party, if he has any.—Mail, N. Y.

To Divorce Road Building from Politics.

Governor Whitman's demand for the resignation of John N. Carlisle, Highway Commissioner, will doubtless provoke another chorus of accusations of partisanship. It should not. Mr. Carlisle is one of the least objectionable of the Democratic officeholders of the last regime. He is personally honest beyond a peradventure, but his record in this office, unfortunately, is not beyond reproach. His retention there is undesirable, not because of what he has done, but of what he has not done. James W. Osborne, a Democrat, who last year reported to Governor Glynn the results of his investigation of the Highway Department, said:

The present Highway Commissioner, John N. Carlisle, is a political appointee. His subordinates are political appointees where his power is not circumscribed by civil service regulations. The executive officers are political appointees. The superintendents of highways of each particular district are political appointees. The consequence is that if each one of these officers is to be useful to the politicians who caused his appointment he must employ as many persons as possible, at the highest possible wages. I find that the payrolls of the department are uselessly padded. I find that the employes of the department have been compelled to pay contributions to political parties.

That indictment still stands. So long as such conditions exist, reform and economy in the Highway Department are impossible. Mr. Carlisle has done his best, but he has not produced the desired reform. Governor Whitman is entirely justified in seeking an opportunity to reorganize the department so that roads may be built free from politics, with its drains inside the department and graft outside.—Tribune, N. A REPLY

In reply to Saturday's editorial, "Our Charities," a communication of decided merit has been received and it is a pleasure to publish the same. The writer has undoubtedly spent some time in delving into this question of home charities, and fine suggestions are presented.

There is at no time a field of interest of any greater moment than that offered at home. We need co-operative expression coupled with work of self immolation to accomplish and solve our direct problems.

Our charity problem is a direct one, and to meet it and solve it correctly is no child's play. Neither should it be an excuse for pouring out of sentiment; it is the city's business proposition and as such should be met.

CHARITY AND SANITY

No one can remember a season like the present for lavish and varied giving. The need is unprecedented and the generosity of response has never been surpassed. The public attitude is a rebuke to cynicism and a stimulation to belief in the innate goodness of the human heart.

Indeed, the desire to give has been so glowing, so impulsive, that a certain danger has arisen of its getting out of hand, a danger that discretion might be obscured by the eager craving to be helpful. The risk is not so much of excess as of disorder in giving; not so much of too great an outpouring of means to meet the existing conditions of distress as a temperamental exaggeration of the conditions themselves. In a word, while neither chill nor check in the work of relief could be wished for, it is highly desirable to regulate it within the bounds of good judgment and common sense.

In particular, it is wise to avert anything like a hysterical appraisal of the home situation. That there is deep and widespread distress throughout a great part of the country is only too evident. In and about New York the shortage of employment is acute. The number of men and women going through the winter without working is much greater than usual; the prolongation of idleness has driven an unusual number to the end of their resources. But the situation is not cataclysmic. The number of those in want, though very great, remains only a small fraction of the population. The resources of the community at large are not only ample for its needs but for the relief of the suffering.

This being the case, it can do only mischief to resort to hysterical language in describing the need of the hour either for purposes of appeal or of sociologic agitation. Nothing is gained by [illegible]. On the contrary, the evil of stagnation and poverty may easily be increased by alarmist views and wild language. Panic feeds on exaggeration and fructifies in poverty. The best policy is to cut off the nourishment of fear.

Meanwhile, as the idleness and distress are realities, the effort to end them should know no stint, but again it should be put forth with calm and order. The finest charity of all today is work. A day's work for one man is a boon; a month's work for a hundred is a beneficence. The course of the Young Men's Christian Association in pushing ahead a great building enterprise is a shining example. But there must after all be some mere giving. To be effective it should be careful as well as cheerful.

To some the opportunity comes to afford help direct in deserving cases, but as a rule the safest channels of relief are the well established ones where the machinery already exists of collection and distribution. The springing up of a multitude of temporary agencies is a serious handicap to the cause in general. The multiplicity of demands upon the charitable is liable to take on in their eyes the semblance of nagging and their liberality is likely to become tired and exhausted. On the other hand, the work of distribution in inexperienced hands is subject to imposture and abuse.

It is not necessary for every one who feels inspired to aid to start a new movement. There is room for all workers in the lines already created to tide the submerged over until the wave of trouble subsides.—Sun, N. Y.

The business man who thinks that the town he lives in isn't good enough for him can find a lot of good advice in the following bit of poetry, which is entitled "It isn't your town—it's you":

If you want to live in the kind of a town
Like the kind of a town you like,
You needn't slip your clothes in a grip
And start on a long, long hike.

You'll only find what you left behind,
For there's nothing that's really new;
It's a knock at yourself when you knock your town,
It isn't your town—it's you!

Real towns are not made by men afraid
Lest somebody else gets ahead;
When every one works and nobody shirks,
You can raise a town 'round the dead.
And if, while you make your personal stake,
Your neighbor makes one, too,
Your town will be what you want to see—
It isn't your town—it's YOU!

SAYS CHURCHES HAVE TOO MANY MEETINGS.

Auburn Pastor Tells Baptists Opportunities Are Made for People Evenings.

Syracuse, Feb. 2.—"The church has been the biggest sinner in the bunch for breaking up home circles," declared Rev. Edward L. James of Auburn in his talk on "Some Practical Methods in the Educational Side of Church Work" at yesterday afternoon's session rural conference of the Baptist churches in Central New York.

"We make so many opportunities for the members of families to go out evenings," he said. "Almost every evening there is something to take them from work. We are emphasizing the necessity of preserving the home now, and it is right that we should."

John R. Boardman, a settlement worker among the boys of New York's east side, said that churches are prone to do too much for boys all along the line and from this cause the subjects get a "sort of mental dyspepsia."

"I am glad to note that we are getting down to considering the primal boy and girl in our plans for them. I realize now that when I was pastor of a church, superintendent of a Sunday school and secretary of a Y. M. C. A., I outraged the boys every day because I placed them in artificial positions. There is no creed in boyhood; it is the most democratic thing in the world."

Mrs. Tomlinson, in speaking of the Camp Fire Girls, declared that through the efforts of the organization much of the intimate relations between mothers and aughters, which had been lost to a great extent, has been restored.

REV. MELVIN KINNEY.

Syracuse, Feb. 2.—News has reached this city of the death of Rev. Melvin D. Kinney, 78, at the home of his son, F. A. Kinney, at Germantown, Pa., on Sunday. Three days before Mother Colt Kinney, his wife, died.

Mr. Kinney was born at Rodman, Jefferson county. He prepared for college at Falley Seminary, Fulton, and later was graduated from Wesleyan University. He then entered the ministry. He was pastor of several Methodist churches in the Northern New York Conference, including Mexico, Lowville, Watertown and Oswego and was presiding elder of the Watertown district for six years.

For several years Mr. Kinney was president of the Thousand Island Park Association. He was a brother-in-law of Miss Amelia Coit, formerly teacher in [illegible] and Rev. Dr. Albert Coit, formerly pastor of the Olivet Baptist church. Besides his son he is survived by six grandchildren. The body will be taken to Watertown for burial tomorrow afternoon.

Killing Dependence on Charity

(Criticisms upon "Our Charities" Which Appeared in Saturday's Evening Times.)

Editor Fulton Evening Times:

This season of the year brings home with ever increasing emphasis the fact that the poor we have always with us. This particular winter seems to have an unusual demand for the exercise of charity and it certainly argues well for Fulton that our "strong charity bee buzzes so busilly." That our people love sweet charity for the very joy it brings in the giving, as well as for giving expression to our best impulses is well demonstrated by the fact that we have so many "sources from which charitable aid springs." But just here is the reason that "our poor are so poorly cared for."

Perhaps the best plan to conserve our charitable energies is by the formation of a Charitable Association as you point out but, while this might, and no doubt would, bring more "common sense" into this problem than has heretofore been known, yet even there the danger of having a "feast one day and famine the next" would still remain. There are times when the "cold charity of the world" is not warmed into activity even by "too much sentiment."

"The solution of the problem" lies much deeper than the "co-operation of every single club, fraternity and individual." It reaches down to the very foundations of society. A very large percentage of those who receive charity helplessly deplore the necessity for it. Self respect never wants charity and the receipt of charity too often has a tendency to undermine self respect. At the Christmas season we work ourselves into a high fever of sentimental giving that spends itself in the piled up basket of dainties taken to the poor family around the corner, or, perhaps, in other gifts that perish with the using.

The writer believes that public charity should be left to a department of the city (or county, or state) administration, presided over by the highest type of Christian sympathy, but founded upon the guiding principle of minimizing, to the utmost, the necessity for charity. Furnish the opportunity for self help and few, very few, people will accept of charity. Where there is a demand for it let a day nursery be established and maintained at public expense. A man of employment is a matter of public concern and it should be a matter of municipal activity to furnish employment so far as possible. Kill forever all dependence on private charity, first by killing the causes which create the necessity for it, and after that supply the opportunity for self help as a public (municipal) department operated entirely at public expense. "With such an association, time, effort and money would not be wasted."

"When will we wake up?"

MAY HAVE THE DEAN'S FIGURE ON MONUMENT.

Plans for Soliciting Funds for Monument Decided on Sunday.

The Oswego Times is authority for the news that the movement to erect a memorial in St. Paul's cemetery to the Very Rev. Dean Barry received impetus at a meeting of St. Paul's parish yesterday after vespers. A motion made by W. J. Dowdle, providing for the appointment of a soliciting committee of twenty, five from each east side ward, was carried. Chairman Thomas Burden will name this committee shortly.

This committee will name solicitors, for their territory, each solicitor being given a city block in which to work. Soliciting will be done in St. Paul's parish only, but all donations will be accepted. Until the committee has canvassed and found what amount will be available, no design will be selected. The original committee of five was empowered to get proposals from the several granite dealers. The amount it is expected to raise ranges all the way from $2,000 to $5,000.

Designs have been submitted voluntarily by several dealers and these include shafts, crosses, and figures with the face of Dean Barry on the monument in a variety of forms. A bronze statue of the Dean, surmounting a granite pedestal, has also been suggested. Another design is a three quarter length figure of the Dean in silk hat, long coat and stick.

Father Collins eloquently appealed at the mass meeting yesterday for support for the memorial project, referring to Dean Barry's great work for the people as individuals, as a church and as a city. This was the only means by which respect and love can be shown to him who for forty-five years worked earnestly in the Lord's vineyard and equally so in civic affairs, and to transmit Father Barry's memory to posterity. There was no doubt, Father Collins said, that Dean Barry was the greatest man of his time in Oswego.

[illegible] provides for the distribution of pledge cards in the parish. The payments may be extended over five months. It is requested that the names and addresses of those now living out of Oswego be furnished the secretary, John E. Cullinan. Charles R. Marsden was elected permanent treasurer of the fund.

MASONIC DINNER

Several prominent speakers will be present at the Hotel Pontiac Friday evening, February 5. There will be good music and an excellent time is anticipated. The banquet is to be held under the auspices of the club room committee of Frontier City lodge No. 422, F. & A. M.

Barge Canal Office Closed.

The Oswego barge canal office closed Saturday and hereafter the work will be directed from the main office at Syracuse. Chester C. Hahn, stenographer, has removed to Albany with Mrs. Hahn, who was formerly Miss Marie Gokey. They will make their home in that city temporarily. —Times.

In these days of easy marketing, with a telephone in nearly every home and a grocery store or delicatessen shop on every corner, many housekeepers think an emergency shelf quite unnecessary, preferring to shop each day for what is required. They declare it is poor business to tie up several dollars in canned goods, or other groceries, which they may not use for months.

Well, that is one way of looking at the matter, but there are several other sides to the question. There are days when one finds it absolutely impossible to go even to the corner grocery and these are the very days when some friend drops in for a chat, and you would so like to make a cup of tea and some sandwiches in her honor, or invite her to remain for dinner, but there is really nothing nice in the house, and you simply can't phone for a lot of things in her hearing. Another day it may storm, the wires become entangled, and the grocer or butcher out of all reach. On these occasions the emergency shelf will stand you in excellent stead.

Perhaps, too, sometimes you will find that, with the best of management, it has been absolutely impossible to make the allowance go all the way round, so many little extra things were necessary, and there was a bill for ice that you had completely forgotten. On such an occasion, will not the well stocked emergency shelf appear like an oasis in the dessert?

Saturday is an excellent day for organizing such a shelf, buy a few little things for a beginning, and then each time you go to market try to add something to your stock. Don't allow yourself to be tempted into using the good things there unless the occasion warrants. Regard your emergency shelf as a sort of savings bank for a rainy day, and you will be surprised how soon you will have a nice assortment of dainties all ready for that special event when they will prove so welcome.

Here is a partial list of articles which should find a place on your shelf; Two or three cans of some very fine soups, a few tins of canned meats and fish, and these may comprise a can of tongue, two of chicken, a jar of bacon, and several cans of salmon and sardines. A can each of peas, corn, tomatoes, and string beans are well to have; with them one can always piece out a scanty dinner, either with an extra vegetable, a corn pudding or a string bean salad. Mushrooms in cans are very helpful in making sauces, so you might add two small cans of these.

Then I would advise a few boxes of fancy crackers, with a jar or two of cheese—be sure and get the kind that keeps, however—and a quarter of a pound of very choice tea. Orange Pekoe is my favorite for afternoon use. With this and the crackers you can offer the chance visitor a cup of hot, delicious tea with a wafer at a moment's notice.

I always have a few cans of evaporated milk on my shelf also some bouillon cubes, two small bottles of olives, a pot of ginger, a pound of lump sugar in the half size, some shelled nuts, and a package or two, of quickly made gelatine. When making my preserves and jelly, I always make a portion of it rather nicer and richer than the rest, and this I put in small, fancy pots and glasses and place it on my emergency shelf. It makes a dainty addition to a somewhat sketchy luncheon.

Don't attempt to keep the emergency shelf too full; that would be extravagant. Just get a few useful things at a time, and add to them as you can. And another point, be sure to replace the things as you use them; that is quite important.

The Saturday menu is before us, however, and fascinating as the subject of the emergency shelf is, we must think of tomorrow's meal.

BREAKFAST
Stuffed Apples and Cream
Broiled Lamb's Kidneys Buttered Toast Coffee

LUNCHEON
Cream of Lettuce Soup
Virginia Batter Bread Maple Syrup
Tea

DINNER
Boiled Corn Beef
Boiled Cabbage Turnip and Carrot Cones
Mashed Potatoes Pickled Beets
Sliced Oranges Coffee

Stuffed Apples

Cut large tart apples in halves cross ways, but do not peel them. With a spoon scoop out a deep well in the centre of each. Fill with orange marmalade, and place the halves in a pie tin, filled side uppermost, put a teaspoonful of butter in the pan, also a cup of sugar and one of boiling water. Bake quickly till tender. Serve in individual dishes with cream.

Broiled Lamb's Kidneys

Split the kidneys down the thick side, but do not sever the core or membrane. Open them and run a skewer through the centre, so that the kidney lies flat, then run the skewer through a square of bacon, then through another kidney. Place on a hot gridiron and broil quickly. Four minutes should serve to broil them nicely. Serve on a hot dish with a bit of butter, pepper and salt on each kidney.

[illegible]

Stir half a cupful of cold boiled rice left from today's luncheon, into a pint of milk, and add to it two eggs beaten very light, also a tablespoonful of butter. Mix with this two cups of cornmeal, to which you have added a teaspoonful of salt. Bake in shallow pans and serve very hot with butter and syrup. If you can get the old-fashioned water ground meal, your bread will be much more delicious than it will if you use the ordinary kind.

Boiled Corn Beef.

Select a nice piece of the plate when buying the corn beef; it is cheaper than the other parts, but when cooked nicely is very good, and not so dry as the round. Four pounds will make a very good piece and will give you enough for a nice dish of hash with poached eggs on Monday. Put it on the stove in cold water and let it come very slowly to the boiling point, then merely simmer for three hours. Do not let the water bubble, but keep it barely moving. When serving trim the rough edges neatly and draw the bones from it.

Turnip and Carrot Cones

Cook white turnips and carrots till tender, then chop each vegetable separately and season with butter, pepper and salt. Press into small cone-shaped glasses and turn out around the meat, alternating a white and a yellow cone.

Boiled Cabbage is generally cooked with the meat, but this method is very apt to induce indigestion. A better way is to wash and cut the cabbage into quarters, soak in salt and water for ten minutes and then plunge into rapidly boiling water into which you have placed a teaspoonful of baking soda. Do not cover, and do not allow the cabbage to cease boiling. In half an hour it will be done, when it should be dressed with a cream sauce. By this method the cabbage will not fill the house with an unpleasant odor while cooking.

APPLIED FOR LETTERS.

Oswego, Feb. 1.—A petition for letters of administration on the estate of Alfred Arduini, late of Fulton, was filed by Philip Arduini, in Surrogate's Court, today. Decedent was killed at the American Woolen Co.'s plant in Fulton, JJan. 1. The only estate is a right of action against the company or William Ide, by whom decedent was employed.

The final accounting of David Finn, as administrator of the estate of Margaret Finn, deceased, was filed. Each of the children received $158 each, out of a total estate of $1,341.

A petition for letters of administration in the estate of H. Putnam Allen, jr., was filed by H. P. Allen of Fulton. The decedent, a child, died a few months ago, leaving an estate of $100.

A decree declaring Frank Fry of Salamanca, N. Y., to be entitled to a bequest for $1,000 from the estate of Mattie Hodges, late of Pulaski, was filed today. Decedent had two nephews of the same name and both claimed the bequest.

DIVORCE ACTIONS

Oswego, Feb. 1.—Justice DeAngelis is holding a special term of Supreme Court for trials here today. He heard a number of divorce actions this morning and granted interlocutory decrees.

In the action of Minnie Keeney vs. Lewis J. Keeney the tables were turned, the decree being granted the defendant instead of the plaintiff. Justice De Angelis said that he was convinced from the testimony offered that the defendant was entitled to the decree.

The plaintiffs were granted decrees in the following cases:

Margaret Jackson vs. William Jackson. The defendant is alleged to be a convicted bigamist in New Jersey.

Grace Vanepps vs. Cantley Vanepps. The parties live in Orwell and suit was not contested.

Flora Crouch May vs. Benjamin L. May. Action for annulment of marriage. Granted.

Bound to Occur.

"SANITO" COOKING UTENSILS

are a necessity for housekeepers who wish to excel in domestic science. They are the only American-made cooking ware which absolutely reproduces the high priced, imported German utensils, so universally used abroad. SANITO utensils have an acid proof lining which cannot crack or scale off and retains nothing to taint or discolor the food. When cooked in SANITO the food cooks evenly, retains all its juices and flavors and never scorches or burns. SANITO is a nonconductor of heat and after being heated to the cooking point—212 degrees—it requires but a very small gas flame to complete the cooking process. With proper care SANITO will last a life time.

THE B. T. C. BOYS ENJOYED TALK

Rev. Charles Robertson Used "Appreciation" as Basis of His Lecture

The Borrowed Time club enjoyed intendely a lecture by the Rev. Chas. Robertson yesterday afternoon. The title of the lecture was "Appreciation" and the theme was taken from Mark 14: 3-9. The thought expressed was as follows:

One of the prominent and beautiful qualities of our Lord's character is expressed by the word appreciation. It goes with him always as the perfume goes with the flower. No little deed of kindness escaped him. If it's only a cup of cold water or a crust for the hungry, or a garment for the naked or a smile of recognition for the stranger, or two mills for the service of the temple, he makes special mention of it and magnifies it away into some thing done unto Himself. When Judas criticized Mary of Bethany for wasting the precious ointment, Jesus says "Let her alone. She hath wrought a good work. She hath done what she could, verily I say unto you, wheresoever this gospel shall be preached throughout the whole world, this also that she hath done shall be spoken of for a memorial of them." His sense of appreciation is so keen that in rough, uneducated fishermen, with the smell of their ware about them, he saw the salt of the earth, the light of the world, and he took pains to tell them so.

Appreciation Not Flattery.

It is a virtue which receives far too little emphasis. Words of criticism are common enough. Words of fault finding are nearly always in the air. Words of slander, words of dispargment, words of attack, words with a sting in them, all these are abundantly and painfully familiar. But even the best and biggest hearted people are too sparing, sometimes indeed, they are almost stingy in their words of commendation. Appreciation is not flattery, it is not blandishment or blarney; it is the effervescence of a great kind nature. It is the fragrance of a noble and generous and god-like soul. People of the nil admirari sort, people who have become sour and blase, people who see nothing to applaud or approve and everything to condemn, are certainly not to be envied. Life is so full of good things, so overflowing with blessings, so packed with reasons for music in the major key, that people always in the dumps and doldrums, seem to be out of place in it. As it is appreciation that gives zest and flavor and relish to life, let us specify a few of the things, which, for those who are thoughtful, are calculated to call it out as the sun calls the laughing streams out of the snow and ice of the mountains.

Begin with nature. How wonderful, how stocked with beauty every where for those who have eyes to see. I know there are poor empty souls who care nothing for a sun rise and would rather hide themselves behind the blinds than look upon the glories of the morning. I know there are men who can gabble in a sunset and give themselves up to small talk when the master painter flings the splendors of departing day upon the canvass of the skies. I know there are those who can chaff and joke in the presence of Niagara or before some other scene of surpassing sublimity and grandeur. If they had as much soul as they ought to have, they would feel like falling down in worship. But all are not made of such cheap stuff. There are people of thought, people of fine fibre, who are entranced by the gorgeous coloring in the clouds, gladdened by the song of birds, filled with praise by the splash of the mountain stream, lifted into adoration by the breaking waves upon the sea shore, and keyed into joy as they see spring waking in the garden and landscape into life. He who cultivates an appreciation of nature, does not need company when he goes to the hills, or follows a stream along its winding way, or threads some sinuous valley. The tree will tell him of a score of sap-circulations and growth. The stone will let him into secrets of geology and of far-away formations. The ledge of coal will tell him about ancient vegetation buried years ago and filled with stored up sunshine and fire. The leaping brook will tell him about the marvel of gravitation that loads it with power as it falls forever toward the sea. The daisy smiling up in his face, will tell him that small as it is, it is minister ed to by the whole solar system. Indeed how rich are the fields and the forests, the moor and the mountain for a man of appreciation, and the are rich for us all, if we open our eyes to see.

I. all nature turns to history and civilization, or if you please, to what we call progress. He must be dull and unresponsive indeed, whose appreciation is not founded on the looks into the part. A man who is not calloused, shut up in his own hard shell, can sit down at the table of today, laden with so many good things, without thanking God, for what has come to him out of the bountiful hand of the great yesterday. Behind him the makers of alphabets; behind him the makers of literature; behind him the pioneer who opened up new worlds; behind him the person of liberty; behind him the death of martyrs, behind him the missionaries to whom he owes his religion; behind him the mighty scientists the mighty monitors, the dauntless array of strugglers carrying society upon their devoted shoulders to the high level of the present. Not one of all these blessings ever cost him a cent. They came to him without money and paid. But if he is thoughtful he knows that somebody had to pay for them, that they came out of the tears, the sacrifices, the blood of his brothers who are gone. If he is thoughtful, he will not be an ingrate, a selfish and thankless recipient and sit at this table of life as loyally furnished without glad and generous recognition of the benefits lavishly conferred upon him. He will see in them a reason for service and hear in them a divine call to contribute his quota of good things to the history that is to be made in the future. Freely he has received and freely he will give. The only way he can discharge his debt to the past and pay the reckoning of progress against him is to do something for the great tomorrow and leave something behind him that will be a blessing to society when he is gone.

If he is genuine, if he is a true man, if his heart is in the right place, he will show his appreciation of what has been done for him by thinking ahead, considering the time to come, the needs of the years that lie beyond the limit of his own life. Where would he, where would all of us be, if broad-minded far-seeing men and women of yesterday had not thought of us, sacrificed and suffered for us, built schools and colleges for us, and as they toiled; so if we have any appreciation that is worthy, any appreciation touched with nobility we shall be builders of institutions for posterity, lifters and helpers of those who will be on the stage when the curtain for us has been rung down.

Contrast in Lives.

But if this seems a trifle remote—it ought not to; it should strike home with a good deal of force—but if does seem remote, let me come closer and remind you of the virtue and value of appreciating difficulty. Keen observers who have traveled widely tell us that the people of the old lands have a dull and dejected look. They are not happy. Their faces are not bright. Somehow they live under the clouds; while the people of Canada and Australia and America, are full of sunshine and are radiant with hope. The reason, is not far to seek. In the ancient lands things are nearly all done. The by achievements, the great accomplishments have passed into history. The forests have been felled, the rivers have been bridged, the mountain have been tunneled, the great conquests have been made, and so the people having little to overcome, have dropped into a sort of semi-despair.

If our sight were as clear as it ought to be, we would see that scarcely anything in life calls for higher and finer appreciation than that which is hard and trying. Most of us, I presume were born poor, and sometimes perhaps we have wished it might have been otherwise. But if it had been, if we had been ushered into life to feed out of a silver spoon, and to be nursed in the lap of luxury the probabilities are that our sunshine today and our worth and strength would be a good deal less than they are, or negligible quantities altogether. The people who sit everlastingly on the top of the hill are not the people to be envied, but the people who are climbing, holding on to this, pulling at that, with rock and sand slipping from beneath their feet, but struggling persistently and triumphantly up. If you want to find boredon and rapidity and world weariness, go among the four hundred, the blue-blood people who really have nothing to live for, who are lounging about in perpetual idleness. Their very laughter is hollow. Their life is without salt, because it is without endeavor, what they need is opposition train and stress storm, strenuous head winds—"Thorns for the feet and trials to meet and a difficult river to cross."

If all the illusion of one humanity, one is greater, none more false, none more cruel in the working irony, than the illusion that ease and luxury and big bank account bring happiness and yet while we know this or ought to know it we are often inclined to think that if our children could start out in life with a fortune at their command, they would be particularly fortunate. The truth is that in nine cases out of ten it would be most unfortunate for them. The best of all schools is the school of hard knocks and no teacher does so much for us, or is so kind to us, as Miss Difficulty. She may seem rather a cross and crochety old maid during one school days, but by and by we learn by her stern discipline.

FLAMES SWEEP CITY; FRENCH HOLD THANN

By FRANKLIN P. MERRICK.

Paris, Feb. 2.—Fire set by Germans shells is sweeping the city of Thann, in Upper Alsace, which is now held by the French, it is reported from Belfort.

Artillery duels are again raging all along the line. In the Vosges and Alsace-Lorraine the big gun combats are going on in a blinding snow storm.

The German engineers and sappers attached to the German army of the Aisne, have suffered heavily from the French cannonade directed toward New German trenches which were in the course of construction.

French marines have been sent to reinforce the Belgian troops in West Flanders.

East of Amiens, near Albert and on the La Bassee canal the German infantry attacks against the first line trenches British field works have been repulsed and the corpses of men who fell in the fighting on Friday and Saturday still lie upon the muddy battle field.

METROPOLIS HIT BY BIG STORM

A Blessing in Disguise to the Unemployed of the City Who Now Have Work to Do

New York, Feb. 2.—In the wake of a heavy rain, a blinding storm of snow and sleet drove down upon New York today, paralyzing rail and ferry traffic and crippling telegraph and telephone communication. It was the first hard storm of the winter and the street cleaning department put 1,000 extra men and 500 extra carts to work before noon to clean up the streets.

The Bowery Mission lodged 100 and fed 1,000. The Salvation Army Shelter for Women cared for 85 and fed 200 more.

A high wind, blowing in from the sea, piled the snow in drifts and the sleet formed a dangerous crust on top. A number of urban railway accidents were reported the most serious of which occurred in the subway when a trainload of 100 passengers were thrown into panic by fire. Insulation on wires ignited, filling the tube with smoke. The train was run to the nearest station where the passengers made their way to safety through the suffocating smoke.

ALBANY LETTER DAY BY DAY

Albany, Feb. 2.—Politics, with its manifold requirements, brings to the service of the state men of varied and interesting characteristics. The officials who are holding elective and appointive positions under the present administration, present characteristics which are widely diversified. Upon the manner as to how news shall be dispended from their respective departments they take different positions. Some are modest and others are glad of an opportunity to appear in print.

Attorney General Egburt E. Woodbury, who was removed as a state tax commissioner by the Democrats, is extremely solicitious relative to newspaper publicity. He likes to have his official acts, opinion and remarks as widely distributed as possible and has established the rule that no correspondent shall interview him privately nor publish exclusively any news item concerning him or his department.

The plan of the new attorney general is to give out such news as he sees fit to all of the newspapermen through the medium of a press agent and to allow nothing to get into print, if he can help it, unless the item is simultaneously made known to the small army of reporters at the Capital.

State Treasurer Wells takes an opposite view. He says that he is always willing to see any of the newspaper men and that he will freely answer any and all questions put to him in private. "Come in any time and get your story," he says. "Tell me what you think the news is and if it it is news, write it."

Secretary of State Francis M. Hugo is a follower of the ideas of State Treasurer Wells. "An exclusive story is an exclusive story," he declares. "If a newspaper man is enterprising enough to dig up a story alone, he is entitled to it, so far as I am concerned."

State Comptroller Eugene M. Travis has had so much news to dispense of late that there is little opportunity for enterprising scribes to seek more, nevertheless he will readily grant an interview.

State Engineer Frank M. Williams is also always approachable and easy of access. Facts and figures are at the disposal of he who cares to delve into them.

Adjutant General Scotsbury's salutation is "come in and see me any time, perhaps we can dig something up for you."

State Architect Pilcher insists upon acquiring and objects to being misquoted.

Speaker Thaddeus C. Sweet of the assembly talks offhand and never exacts a promise of secrecy, while Senator Elon R. Brown, Republican leader of the senate is not prone to long interviews. He is concise in diction and trusts the newspaper man.

Minority Leader Alfred E. Smith, Democratic Assembly, will talk with anyone at any time and what he says is generally originally put. "Go as far as you like," is his challenge.

As to Gov. Whitman, he is the prince of news creators. Unlike Former Governors Dix and Sulzer, who had stenographers on hand to take down questions and answers, he talks freely and candidly.

W. C. T. U. MEETING.

A business meeting at 2.30 o'clock sharp, will precede the meeting of the W. C. T. U. to be held on Friday afternoon, Feb. 5th at 3 o'clock, in the Baptist church, at which time Mrs. Desilva will give an address.

It is hoped that the county president may also be present. Ladies are urged to come and join the union in battle that they may be one also in the coming victory.

DELEGATES TO STATE GRANGE AT OSWEGO.

Mrs. Harvey MacMurchy and Mrs. A. D. Clark of the local Equal Rights league are delegates to the State Grange at Oswego this week. Some of the best workers of the state in the suffrage ranks will be present during the week and it is believed the organization will indorse the movement.

Funeral Chas. McCausey.

The funeral of Charles, infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles McCausey will be held from the family home, 511 Harrison st., tomorrow at 9 o'clock.

Interment will be made at St. Mary's.

NOTABLES IN THE LIMELIGHT

Claude Kitchin, Who Will Lead House Majority.

When the Sixty-fourth congress assembles for its first session—and that may be any time after March 4 next—there will be a new Democratic leader on the floor of the house. This will come to pass by reason of the translation of the present floor leader, Representative Oscar W. Underwood of Alabama, to the United States senate. The new leader of the majority will in all probability be Representative Claude Kitchin of the Second North Carolina district. Mr. Kitchin is the second man on the Democratic side of the great ways and means committee and if the usual procedure prevails will become its chairman, which position carries with it the majority leadership.

When Mr. Kitchin first went to congress in 1901 his elder brother, William W., was also a member of that body. Later William left congress to become governor of the Tar Heel State. Congressman Kitchin is a native of North Carolina and is forty-six years old. He is a lawyer by profession and has practiced law at Scotland Neck since his graduation in 1890. He never held public office until elected to the Fifty-seventh congress, and he has been regularly returned ever since, steadily rising in the esteem of his colleagues and becoming a powerful member of the Democratic party. Mr. Kitchin is a good speaker, forceful in debate and is considered one of the best parliamentarians on his side of the house.

Would Aid the Unemployed.

Representative David J. Lewis of Maryland, who is preparing a bill for the creation of a federal employment bureau, believes the postoffices should be used to bring the man and job together. "My idea," says Mr. Lewis, "is that state and municipal employment bureaus should be co-ordinated with a national bureau. The federal government already has the machinery to run the federal employment bureau in its extensive postoffice department, whose ramifications reach every nook and corner of the land."

Born in Pennsylvania of Welsh parents forty-six years ago, Mr. Lewis has an unusual history. While still a child his parents moved to Maryland, and here young Lewis began coal mining when only nine years old. He learned to read in Sunday school, and he often pursued his studies by the light of his flickering mine lamp, fastened to his cap, as he walked twelve hours a day behind the mules he drove far underground. That his studies took him into law and Latin give a hint of the persistence of the youth. He continued at mining until 1892, when he was admitted to the bar of Allegany county, Md. In 1901 he was elected to the Maryland senate and in 1911 was sent to congress, to which he has twice been re-elected. Representative Lewis is chairman of the house committee on labor.

SHIP BILL CAUSES REVOLT

Nine Recalcitrants United With Republicans

Washington, Feb. 1.—Nine Democrats, including Senator O'Gorman of New York, unexpectedly joined an alliance with Republicans in the Senate late today in an effort to send the government ship bill back to the Commerce Committee. The revolt turned in a twinkling an administration advantage into a defensive position which to-night seemed almost hopeless to many Democratic leaders.

Forced to fight for the life of the measure, the Democrats succeeded in adjourning the Senate with the motion to recommit pending, and a party caucus was called for to-morrow morning.

Senator Clark of Arkansas, a Democrat, and president pro tempore of the Senate, revolutionized the situation which has held the Senate in deadlock for many days. He rose while Senator William Alden Smith of Michigan was concluding a long speech against the shipping bill, and asked him to yield for a motion. The senator yielded, and Senator Clark, introducing his remarks with an appeal for consideration of other legislation, moved to send the pending bill back to committee.

SSuch pandemonium as followed this development has not been witnessed in the Senate in many years. Senators poured from the cloak rooms to the chamber. Republicans, forwarned, were the first on the scene.

As soon as administration leaders could catch their breath, Senator Fletcher, in charge of the bill, made a point of order against the motion, which Vice President Marshall sustained. Senator Clark appealed from the decision and the chair was overruled by a vote of 46 to 37, nine Democrats joining the Republicans.

After some further parliamentary maneuvering, Senator Reed took the floor and denouncing his Democratic colleagues for their defection, accused the opponents of the bill of being influenced by the "shipping trust."

Both sides seemed to be willing to declare a truce to take stock of the new situation and when Senator Fletcher moved an adjournment until noon tomorrow there was no opposition.

The Democrats who voted with the Republicans against the ruling of the chair were: Bankhead of Alabama; Camlen, Kentucky; Clarke, Arkansas; Hardwick, Georgia; Bryan, Florida; Hitchcock, Nebraska; O'Gorman, New York; Smith of Georgia and Vardaman of Mississippi.

Republican senators openly exulted and Democratic leaders rushed hurriedly in and out of committee room conferences to determine upon a course of action. They counted noses, figuring on absentees and could not see a way out of the difficulty. Senators Simmons, Stone, Kern, Shively and others sought conferences with progressive Republicans.

It was asserted that the revolting Democrats would persistently propose in the caucus tomorrow that the ship bill be dropped and that attention be turned to appropriation measures and other important legislation; including a rural credits bill for which Senator Clarke made a plea today.

Despite the feeling of some of his colleagues, Majority Leader Kern tonight would not admit defeat, and in announcing the call for the caucus he declared "We will pass the bill yet."

THE QUIRK TONIGHT.

Essanay presents The Good for nothing, a splendid 4-reel photo-play, featuring G. M. Anderson (Broncho Billy) and 2 other reels to complete a 6-reel program. Tomorrow, five acts of high-class vaudeville and a 3-reel K. & E. "The Fatal Wedding," also, a 3-reel Vitagraph, "Goodness Gracious."

Clever Player.

Prof. Lewis the champion finger billiardist of the world gave a remarkable exhibition of his skill at the Elks' club last evening. The professor had as remarkable control of the ivories with his nose as with his fingers. He will entertain at the I. O. O. F., club at 8 p. m. and at the Macabees at 10 p. m.

Plan Banquet.

Local college women are planning a get-together dinner to take place this month. A number of graduates of the leading colleges and universities are residents of Fulton. A "Kollege Klan," or permanent organization may be the outgrowth of the dinner.

Dr. Harriet M. Doane, Miss Nancy Cook and Miss Marion Dickerman form the committee in charge of the affair.

MRS. BESSIE MALONE.

Bessie, wife of Charles Malone, age 49, of 255 W. 5th st., died this afternoon at 1.15, having suffered from a complication of diseases.

Besides her husband the deceased is survived by one sister, Mrs. Anna Quirk, and one brother, James Duffy, of this city.

SYRACUSE MEN BUY SITE FOR HOTEL AT NORWOOD

Norwood, Feb. 2.—The old 'American House site, recently purchased by W. C. Gage of this village, has been sold to Cahill Brothers of Syracuse, who plan to erect a three-story hotel on the property in the spring.

The hotel was destroyed by fire a little over a year ago. The building, which was located across from the passenger station of the Rutland and New York Central railroads, was a favorite with the traveling public.

All persons having unsettled accounts with Morton and Shattuck can settle the same at the law office of F. S. Spangle until Feb. 8, after that date at the residence of Mrs. V. W. Shattuck, 418 Hannibal st.,

TRAINS CRASH; 1 MAN KILLED

Buffalo, Feb. 2.—One man was killed and two seriously injured in a rear end collision between two Pennsylvania freight trains near Irving, N. Y., shortly after noon today. The man's name was Harry Wright, residence unknown. The conductor's name is Boyle who is still unconscious, and a man named McLane had a shoulder and leg broken, and another man whose name has not been learned lies seriously injured and unconscious. The accident occurred when a freight train whose engineer was evidently blinded by the wirling sleet took a wrong switch and crashed into the rear end of another train.

WRECKS NEAR ROCHESTER

Rochester, Feb. 2.—Icy rails caused two cars on an inter-urban line to jump the tracks east of Rochester this morning. A car on the Syracuse and Eastern Railway jumped the rails at Block 5 west of Newark and several passengers were bruised. Two men were so severely hurt as to require removal to a hospital here. They were Jacob Loose of Newark, conductor, and Otto Schey of Fairport, a passenger. A westbound car on the Rochester and Eastern jumped the tracks at the Twelve Corners. No one was injured but traffic was tied up for some time.

There are still left in the stove department, at the People's Hardware store, three stoves which any reasonable each offer may tempt the proprietors to dispose of before inventory is closed. —Adv.—40.

About Sports Generally

By FRANK G. MENKE.

New York, Feb. 2.—A bet of $500 to $100 was made down in Wall st., the other day that the Braves wouldn't win the 1915 pennant. That wager seems to express pretty generally the opinion of fandom concerning the Braves chances during the coming season.

The Braves played the most wonderful baseball over a stretch of 10 weeks that ever has been played in history. They beat a team in the world series that was considered to be the greatest ever welded together. And they beat that outfit in record time. And yet, despite that great showing, despite the fact that the Braves have been strengthened considerably, only the stoutest hearted Boston fans are predicting another pennant for the Braves.

The so-called "wise men" of baseball think that the Braves will not repeat simply because lighting isn't supposed to strike twice in the same place and that accidents rarely happen twice in the same way.

"The Braves victory in 1914 was of a miracle nature" one of the "wise ones" tells us. "You can't expect too many miracles in this day and age. Of course, I don't say that the Braves haven't a chance to repeat in 1915. They may win. All things are possible. But I don't think they will win."

"Why?" we asked.

"Well, their 1914 successes was due to a certain extent to great ball playing and it also was due to luck. They got nearly every break in the games between mid-July and the close of the season. Time and again they seemed to be hopelessly beaten in games, yet they won out, either through some hit made at timely moment by a man who never before hit in a pinch, or by some error made by an opposition player who averaged about one error in 20 games.

"Look over the 1914 record of the Braves—that is from mid-July to the end of the season—and you will see that they won a large bulk of their games by one run. Time and time again they were returned victors in 1 to 0 or 2 to 1 games. That was when their pitchers were going good. In the early part of the spurt the Braves pitchers were working in wonderful fashion and their batters weren't hitting. Later on when the pitchers slumped the batters got busy and won the games with their clubs.

"That's luck. You can't tell me it is anything else. The Boston batters tried as hard to hit when their pitchers were pitching shut-out ball as they did when they were touched up for six and seven runs per game. But the Braves batters were in a slump when their pitchers were going good. They were lucky enough to get out of just in the nick of time.

"The trio of Boston pitchers—Tyler, James and Rudolph—who did such wonderful work in 1914 won't repeat in 1915. Achievements like theirs of last season occur only one in a decade. All three may have a good year in 1915—and they may not.

"Magee will strengthen the outfield. The Braves infield ought to work up to standard in 1915. So should the catching department. The Braces, on paper, may look better for 1915 than they did when they beat the Athletics. But will they have the same luck? If they don't they may finish no better than third."

What think you all of these sentiments?

BURKE AGAIN UP FOR TRIAL

Accused of Corruption; Goethalls and Two Ex-Presidents May Appear Against Him

New York, Feb. 2.—John Burke, former commissary supervisor of the Panama Railroad, was put on trial here today before Judge Albert B. Anderson on charges of corruption in purchasing supplies for the United States government. William H. Taft, and Colonel George W. Goethals are expected to be witnesses; and possibly Theodore Roosevelt will be heard.

Burke was indicted first May 14, 1914; and again Dec. 4, 1914. The last indictments charge Burke with having accepted a bribe of $5,866 from Arthur Goldschmidt, of the firm of B. Luria and Company, Hamburg, Germany. He is also charged to have received $1,500 and $2,500 from Pascal Canavaggip, a wine merchant of the city of Colon.

The earlier indictments charged the prisoner with having received bribes from other merchants with whom he dealt, amounting to $11,150. Burke has been held in bonds aggregating $38,000.

With Burke in May were also indicated Isaac Brandon, president of Isaac Brandon, Brothers, Inc., Robert Wilcox and Jacob L. Salas, all prominent men in the Canal Zone.

Burke was in the service of the commission on the Canal Zone more than seven years. He was latterly practically manager of the immense institution which clothed, fed and housed the army of canal diggers.

During this period there were many complaints lodged with the authorities at Washington by merchants in Panama that the Commissary Department by preference went to Europe for its supplies, thereby depriving the Panama merchants of their share of the business of $5,000,000 a year.

Burke was appointed from Indiana and did his banking in Indianapolis, a city familiar to Judge Anderson. From the first notice of the charges Burke has denied his guilt. He was an appointee of President Roosevelt.

Colonel Goethals has been a personal friend of Burke. Although he finally suspended Burke, Goethals expressed himself as disinclined to believe the charge that there had been grafting.

Judge Anderson is remembered for his reversal of the famous $29,000,000 Standard Oil fine, and for his decision of Theodore Roosevelt's libel case against the New York World in connection with stories regarding the manner of the acquisition of the Canal Zone by the United States, the colonel losing.

TRADE BODIES ARE IN SESSION

Washington, Feb. 2.—Captains of Industry from all parts of the United States are gathered in Washington to attend the four-day convention of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States of America, which opened here today.

The National Council of the Chamber, which is a federation of more than 600 Chambers of Commerce, Boards of Trade, commercial clubs and various trade organizations, met today to discuss the general business affairs of the nation. The effect of the European war on American foreign trade and upon home industries was discussed by the business men and a program of the national chamber's activities for the ensuing year was submitted.

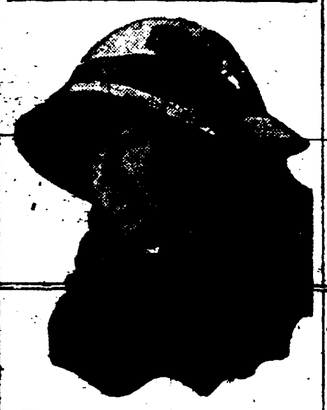
John H. Fahey, President of the Chamber, will deliver his annual address tomorrow at the morning session, while Secretary of State Bryan will address the Council on American investments abroad at the afternoon session. The Federal Reserve Act and its relation to Trade Extension will be discussed by Samuel McRoberts, Vice President of the National City Bank of New York city and several technical speeches will be made by trade experts.



President Wilson is to address the Council on February 3. He is expected to grasp the opportunity afforded by this large gathering of business men, to get in personal touch with the world of trade and commerce and explain to the members his views on big business. Speakers at the session of February 4 will be Secretary of the Treasury W. G. McAdoo who will advocate the administration shipping bill and Senator Theodore F. Burton of Ohio, who also will speak on the ship measure.

Joseph E. Davies, retiring head of the Bureau of Corporations which shortly is to be merged into the New Federal Trade Commission will tell the Council about the new trade body at the session on February 4. Harry A. Wheeler of Chicago will discuss successful methods of commercial organization. Mr. Wheeler is a former President of the Chamber.

Secretary of Commerce William C. Redfield and Governor Charles S. Hamlin of the Federal Reserve Board are to deliver addresses at the annual banquet of the Council on the night of February 4.

Recent work of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce of the Department of Commerce is the subject to be discussed by Dr. E. E. Pratt, Chief of the Bureau, at the session February 5. E. A. Filens, Vice-President of the International Congress of Chambers of Commerce, will speak on trade expansion and the European war the same day, while later the National Council will elect officers.

War: Pathos and Humor

Paris, Feb. 2.—American hustle has "nothing on" the Australian variety. One day a train stopped near the Golf Hotel, a red, rambling building on the top of the northern cliffs of Wimereux and from it descended 120 Australian men and women. Twelve hours later it had been converted into the Australian Voluntary Hospital and 147 wounded soldiers were being treated.

Within half a day the hotel had been cleared, cleaned fitted and furnished, from the first bedstead to the last towel. It would ordinarily have taken a week.

What the Australians lacked they made or invented. There was of course no operating room. A room having been decided upon as suitable for that purpose, there were no workmen to transform it. Three women nurses set to. They scraped every inch of paper off the walls at a terrific rate and then the tallest mounted an improvised scaffold and manipulated the whitewash brush.

A case for the surgical instruments was improvised from a glass front exhibition case for chocolates which had stood in the hotel lobby. It was the spirit of the pioneer.

In the first seven days of the operating room's existence twenty-nine serious operations were performed there.

Before the end of the first twelve hours the X-ray apparatus was installed and working. Herschel Harris, chief X-ray man, invented a simple apparatus which proved of great value in examining X-ray negatives. It is a box one side of which consists of a ground glass screen illuminated from within by an electric lamp. This can be brought right up to the side of the operating table so that the surgeon can refer to it as he works.

The staff which numbers 120, including 36 nursing sisters, is not accommodated in a building apart, so that when off duty they do not have to be in the atmosphere of suffering and death.

In the golf clubhouse there is a bacteriological laboratory, for there is nothing which this wonderfully equipped hospital lacks. Such a laboratory is almost indespensable to a "war hospital" for testing such germs as those of tetanus, gangrene, enteric, the latter being one of the most important diseases to diagnose.

It is one of the discoveries in a bacteriological laboratory that gangrenous wounds must be treated by being kept open, because the bacillus is anaerobis, that is to say, it cannot live in air, so stitches are now taboo, and the wound, swabbed with hydrogen peroxide and irrigated with carbolic or saline solution, is kept open until the bacilli have been destroyed. The bacteriological laboratory will show at once whether a wound is infected or not, and with what, and the treatment is determined accordingly.

As regards the outside equipment of the hospital, there are available nearly 50 motor ambulances.

The personnel is almost entirely Australian. The medical staff all volunteered at a meeting of Australian doctors who were in London when the war broke out. All the nursing sisters, with a few exceptions, are Australians, and it is in keeping with the general spirit which pervade the "A. V. H." that some of them actually paid their own fares from Australia to come and offer their services; and they all work with splendid energy, which may be imagined from the fact that on one occasion work went on continuously in the operating theater from six o'clock in the morning till 2 a. m. on the following day.

The whole installation of the hospital shown signs of this businesslike, efficient disposition, coupled, of course, with that pioneer ingenuity of the Colonial. Here is a new splint which permits of the dressing of a wound without the necessity of removing the splint; there is a simple apparatus for the extension of a wounded arm. "If you haven't got a thing, invent it," seems to be the motto; and in war surgery so many unusual situations arise that the faculty is of sevenfold value.

PULASKI HIGH SCHOOL WINS AGRICULTURAL PRIZE.

Pulaski, Feb. 2.—The pennant for stock judging at the "Farmers' Week" held at St. Lawrence University, Canton, last Friday, was again won by students from the agricultural department of the Pulaski high school for the second consecutive year, the other schools sending students of a similar department including those at Brushton, Belleville, Chateaugay, Lowville and Mexico. The Belleville school stood second and Mexico third. The highest individual score was made by Herbert Jeans of the Pulaski high school, with Glen Potter and Orla Bennett, also of the local school, second and third respectively. Pulaski had a credit of 1,055 points out of a possible 1,250. The herds judged were one-ring Holstein cows, Ayrshire cows, Holstein bulls and draft horses, credits of sixty points being allowed for placements and forty points for reasons in each ring. The competing students from here in the stock judging contest returned home Saturday afternoon, accompanied by Prof. O. Bert Trowbridge, who has been in charge of the agricultural department at the Pulaski high school since its establishment, two years ago.

PIANOS
The test of the Henry F. Miller piano by those who know. It is hard to describe the Miller tone, it is higher, it is deeper, more delicately playful than the voice of any other musical instrument.
The Miller tone has an underlying richness, simple music takes on a new charm when played on the Henry F. Miller piano, very classy and in a class by themselves.
For singing and voice work you have the real ideal piano, for orchestra and critical work it never has been excelled.
Wearing qualities never questioned. Case work refined and delicate and marvelously constructed is polished and dull finished cases.
See them, critically try them and you will buy no other Piano. Send for catalogue. Sold on sensible terms.

HELPFUL HINTS FOR HOUSEWIVES

Combined Stove Brush and Blacking Container.

A combined stove brush and blacking magazine relieves the task of blacking the stove of much if not all of the muss and soil which it has heretofore been accompanied with. The blacking, in the form of a solution, is contained in a reservoir which is attached to the back of the brush, occupying a position along its length, where it also acts as a convenient handle to be grasped by the operator. After the desired quantity of blacking has been freed on the stove top it is distributed by means of a dauber, which is affixed to one end of the combination.

Household Helps.

When poaching eggs always put a little vinegar in the water.

Oranges and lemons keep well if hung in a wire net in a cool, airy place.

If currants are dried in flour after having been washed they will not sink to the bottom of a cake.

If when chopping suet you add a little ground rice to it, it will not stick to the chopper, but can be minced quite easily.

Every room in the house should be thoroughly aired once a day.

Buying Kitchenware.

Avoid buying ware which has "seams," cracks and joints where food particles can accumulate. They are harder to wash and likely to become insanitary sooner. A saucepan should have a "lip" on two sides. One piece straight handles are better than the "bail" kind, which becomes hot as it hangs to the side of the pot. Never be tempted into the supposed economy of buying "seconds" in kitchenware. There is always some weak spot, some uncoated place or a "bubble" where the surface is weak.

Omelet, Southern Style.

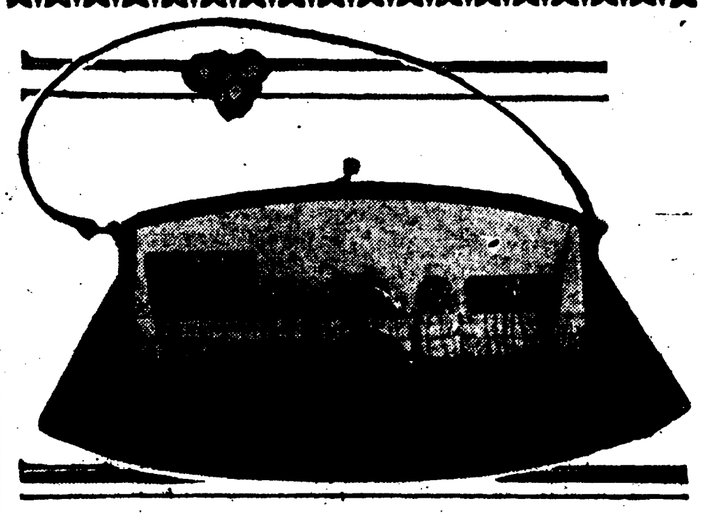
Separate the whites and yolks of three eggs, beat the whites stiff and dry, beat the yolks until light, then beat into them eight teaspoonfuls of thick white sauce and a speck of cayenne and salt. Fold this into the beaten whites. Fold in six tablespoonfuls of ground baked ham and turn into a hot buttered baking dish. Bake until firm. Take care not to overbake or it will be dry. Sprinkle ground ham around the edge of the dish, stick a spray of parsley in the center and serve immediately.

Beaten Biscuit.

Add a tablespoonful of salt and a tablespoonful of butter to a quart of flour. Rub them together, then add a cupful of milk and, if necessary, a little water to make a stiff dough. Place the dough on a firm table or block and beat with a mallet or rolling pin for fully half an hour, or until it becomes brittle. Spread in half an inch thick, cut into small circles and prick each one with a fork. Bake in a hot oven for twenty minutes.

Chicken Pie.

Line sides of a baking dish with a biscuit dough. Cook chicken until tender, season with salt and pepper and a little sage if desired. Put meat into dish lined with the dough, pour in a part of the gravy and cover dish with biscuit dough. Cut a hole the size of a dollar in the cover, and cover this with a piece of dough. While baking remove this piece often to examine interior. If pie is dry put in more chicken gravy.



Fresh Fish Balls.

With a silver fork pick some remnants of cooked fish and sprinkle with salt and pepper. Pass through a vegetable ricer a few hot boiled potatoes; to these add a little fish stock or sauce or cream, also salt, pepper, and beat as for mashed potatoes. To the fish add just enough of the hot potato to hold the fish together. Shape into balls, roll in crumbs and egg, then in fine crumbs, and fry in deep fat.

Cleaning Windows.

The easiest way to wash windows during cold weather is to wipe them with a soft cloth or sponge which has been dipped in kerosene; then in a few minutes go over them with tissue paper or soft newspaper and rub off most of the oil and dirt, after which with fresh water give them a good polishing. They will soon be clear and bright.

The Modish Maiden Now Affects The Torpedo Shaped Hand Bag

SMART NEW MILITARY HAND BAG.

THE military influence has made itself felt even among designers of accessories for women's dress. An example of this exploitation of the military idea may be seen by a glance at the illustration. This shows the new torpedo shaped hand bag of black leather. This attractive trifle is mounted in gun metal and supplied with toilet accessories to match. The lining is of soft white leather.

WASHINGTON'S BIRTHDAY FETE

Clever Conceits In Colonial Style For Giving the Patriotic Touch to Social Functions In Honor of the Father of His Country.

THE Washington birthday hostess should have everything truly American from the colors in her decorations to the mold of the ice cream on her menu.

The colonial reception gives the fortunate owner of rare old silver or beautiful china a splendid opportunity to display her heirlooms and antiques.

If in the family possessions there are no colonial heirlooms and antiques the hostess need not despair, for the shops

The place cards and favors for a Washington party are various and many of them are easily made. Little cardboard figures of George and Martha Washington are most effective place cards. Attractive place cards are made of white mat board with red, white and blue shield either painted on or cut from a paper napkin and pasted on the board.

Interesting little favors are tiny cabins made of dark brown corrugated paper and filled with bonbons. On the slanting roof of the cabin is a tiny hatchet carrying on its handle a couple of cherries tied with patriotic ribbon. The centerpiece to correspond with this is a large cabin built on the same design with windows of red, white and blue tissue. The candles burn inside and light up the windows.

The baskets fashioned of white or red paper with clusters of cherries tied to the handles are filled with wintergreen candies.

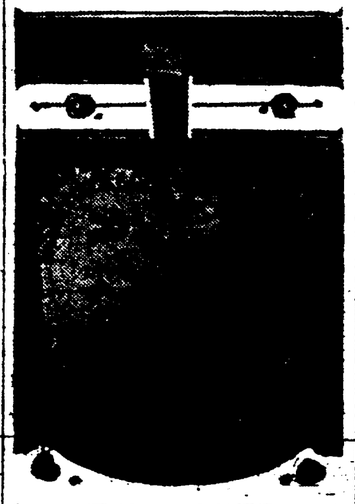
The bonbon boxes, made to imitate bark covered stumps, to which are attached little hatchets, are favors much in demand, as are the logs fashioned somewhat after the same line.

A little more expensive and almost impossible to make at home are the funny colonial figures, the bodies of which are made to look like a tree trunk. The head is a large red cherry turned around so that the stem serves as a pigtail. The eyes, the nose and the mouth are painted on and a cocked hat made of black cardboard tops off this figure.

The handsome favor illustrated here is a match safe made to imitate bark. The cluster of artificial cherries tied at the side is fastened with red, white and blue ribbon. Thus it represents the cherry tree fruit and bark.

FOR VALENTINE DAY'S LUNCHEON

Novelties Best Appeal to the Guests, and Many of These May Be Fashioned by the Clever Fingers of the Hostess.



ONE of the least expensive and most satisfactory ways of entertaining on Valentine's day is to give a luncheon.

At a valentine luncheon last year the hostess hit on a new idea. The day before the luncheon she mailed to her own address a little package for each guest.

At dessert the maid answered a ring at the door given by an imaginary postman—really a small daughter, who thought it a treat to be in her mother's secret—and appeared in the dining room with a trayful of packages done up with red twine with hearts of paper used as seals.

A merry ten minutes followed while the guests unfastened the bundles. Some of the gifts inclosed were jokes on hobbies of the guests. A woman with a weakness for sweets found a little satin heart full of bonbons. A woman with a taste for pretty clothes unrolled layers of waxed papers to find a true confection of the milliner's art—a candy hat, trimmed with candy flowers and ribbons. The unmarried guests found little plaster cupids, one wielding an arrow, another carving a heart, another linking two rings together.

The table decorations at this luncheon, designed by the clever hostess, showed a bank of red carnations and asparagus fern in the center of the table. Half a dozen small plaster cupids were hidden in the greenery and flowers. To the hand of each cupid several streamers of red satin ribbons, baby width, were tied, and these streamers led to each guest's place, where they ended in a rosette fastened to the place cards—hand painted with cupids and hearts. Under the rosette the stems of long stemmed carnations and a sprig of fern were slipped.

Plaster cupids in marble white five inches tall and well modeled make attractive place favors. Each of these cupids carries over his arm with a colored ribbon a square box—about an inch square. Each box could contain a different sort of trinket.

The heart shaped souvenir pictured here is a little sachet which may be used for scenting milady's dainty garments. The ribbon hanger is ornamental and may be useful in attaching it to the clothing. The sachet is of pink silk embroidered in a darker shade. A piece of cardboard covered with wadding and thickly sprinkled with sachet powder is the foundation for the sachet.

PRIEST FAVORS CITY OWNERSHIP

Believes That If Private Interests Find Profit City Can Do the Same

Yesterday's Oswego Times reports the remarks of the Rev. Father Colling during the course of his Sunday sermon at St. Paul's church upon the question of power development at the high dam. Father Collins said that the discussion of secular affairs from the pulpit is not the practice, but sometimes it becomes necessary as the only effective means of informing the people. Father Collins stands where his predecessor, the Very Rev. Dean Barry, stood, in favor of municipal ownership. He takes the position that if the power can be developed with profit by outsiders and turned over to the city after a term of years, free of charge, the city can develop the power itself.

Father Collins said that he could not be unmindful of the fact that certain interests appear to be at work to secure possession of the water power at the dam and develop it to their own advantage. The water power belongs to the people and any attempt on the part of private individuals to secure control should meet with the protest of the taxpayers. The people should be interested in all that concerns the welfare of the city and should permit nothing to interfere therewith. It is their duty also to see to it that the city officials look after and safeguard the interests of the people.

Father Collins said he believed the city could just as well develop the power as to turn it over to any private organization. The excuse that the city is not in a position to develop at the present time because of the heavy expense is not valid, in his opinion. If a private corporation can go to this enormous expense of developing the power and after a term of years turn it back to the city free of charge, then the city can do the same. If it should be found that the expense of developing all the power is prohibitive, then the city could develop what is needed and eventually dispose of the remainder to private parties.

The success of the municipal ownership of the water plant was cited by Father Collins to show that the city could profitably and satisfactorily engage in the power project. He recalled that certain men, he would not say that they were the same as now oppose the power project, held up their hands in horror when the citizens led by the late Dean Barry, proposed and fought for municipal ownership. But the source of supply was changed to the lake and Oswego now has a water supply and system that few cities enjoy. Not only has the city been able to assume the burden of paying for the plant, but has also been able to assume other burdens and extend the benefits of pure water to all sections.

Father Collins concluded by urging watchfulness on the part of all taxpayers of municipal affairs in order that their interests may be conserved and protected.

Do Not Try to Have a Sale Without the Help of The Fulton Evening Times

These Are the Reasons Why:

The Poster reaches at most only a few hundred people: The Evening Times is read each evening by approximately, 10,000 people.

The Poster is seen only by people when they are away from home. The Times goes into people's homes and finds them.

The Poster must be tacked up and distributed—a day or two of hard work for a man with a rig. The Times distributes the same information at every house in the city.

The Poster is not seen in bad weather, because people stay at home. That is just the time The Evening Times is read most carefully.

RUSSIAN ARTILLERY TOO MUCH FOR GERMANS

was insignificantly compared with the losses sustained by them through our fire and bayonet attacks.

"According to our military commanders our artillery inflicted enormous damage upon the Germans, dispersing dense gatherings of the enemy and reducing to silence a number of German batteries. As a result of this we were able to withstand th withering fire of the enemy. Fighting continues in the Carpathians.

"We continue to advance with success along the Nijnia-Polinanka-Ludovinka front.

"After the fighting in the Lipno-Dedbrzin front it required six-ty carriages to remove the enemy's wounded.

"German prisoners taken in the Berjimow district say that the German attacks on this front over a distance one and a half kilometers long, cost the Germans, between 23 and 30 over 6,000 killed and many wounded. In the Carpathians from January 26 to January 29, on the Nijnia-Polinanka-Wlyslek front we captured 78 officers and 4,065 men and took ten rapid fire guns and four cannon."

Appended to the official statement was the following note:

"The severe encounters on the Sochaczew-Belimow front and on the Rawka and Bzura rivers indicates that the Germans are making another attempt to move on Warsaw. The scene of the fighting in this region is about thirty miles from Warsaw."

VON KLUCK'S SON KILLED

Copenhagen, Feb. 2.—Lieut. Egan Von Kluck, only son of Gen. Von Kluck, was killed at Middlekerk, in Belgium during a bombardment at that port by British warships, according to information received here today. Capt. Von Kluck was 28 years old and was attached to the marine service.

TRAILED BY THE RUSSIAN POLICE

Man Takes Desperate Chances to Evade Capture.

Having received an education in practical chemistry and served as superintendent in a steel works, I was offered a responsible position to take charge of a factory in Russia. Three years were all I could endure in that country, and I made up my mind to quit.

Just as the train on which I left pulled out of the station a man came running from the outside, jumped on the footboard and was helped by the guard into one of the compartments. Opposite me sat a man, evidently in a humble walk of life, who watched eagerly the one who boarded the train and leaned out of the window when he was helped into the compartment.

"Dangerous attempt," I remarked. "The fellow might have been killed."

My vis-a-vis made no reply for some time. Then, pulling himself together, he said:

"You do not recognise me, superintendent?"

"I do not."

"I am one of the workmen in the factory. I am Ivan Sviashski."

"One of the men who got up the recent petition to the czar?"

"Yes. They are after me. That man who boarded the train is one of the police. As soon as the train stops he will arrest me. Then there remain for me the horrors of Siberia."

He had known that I sympathized with the Russian workmen—indeed, that sympathy was one of the reasons for my leaving Russia—and had confided in me for this reason. I wished I could help him, but saw no way. I would have given him my passport, but he told me he was known to the police and could not pass as another man. His plan was to risk death by jumping from the train as soon as it was dark. I did not think there was one chance in a hundred for him in this course and told him so, but failed to move him. He said he would rather die than suffer in Siberia and would make a leap which he knew would be almost surely fatal. He gave me the address of his family and begged me to communicate what I knew about him to them.

As soon as it was dark he climbed out of the window and, standing on the footboard, bade me goodby and walked away from the window. I sat and thought about him till the train reached the first stop.

There it was surrounded by the police, who had doubtless been telegraphed, and every passenger was examined critically. The man they looked for was not to be found. The police, concluding that he had jumped from the train, gave up the search, permitted it to proceed, and I suppose went back over the road to discover the result.

I knew that all the time the train had speeded so fast that the man must have been killed, and on the way kept thinking of his mangled body lying by the track. I could not sleep and was glad when morning came and we reached the border.

At the station there I was going into the dining room to get breakfast when I was stopped by a railroad hand whom I took for a locomotive fireman.

"Are you the American superintendent?" he asked.

"I suppose so," I replied, puzzled.

"Come with me."

In a twinkling it occurred to me that he might have news of the man I was interested in, and I followed him, he keeping some distance ahead of me. He took me a few hundred yards up the road, where stood a locomotive. The engineer was cleaning his engine, and one or two idlers were gaping at the machine. The man I had followed glanced at them meaningly, and I knew we must wait for them to go away. When the last one had gone the fireman—for such he was—got up into the tender and whispered something to some one, I could not tell whom, for there was nothing there, so far as I could see, but coal. Then he beckoned me to climb up and, removing a lump of coal, exposed a man's face, the face of Ivan Sviashski.

It was plain to me that Sviashski had walked along the footboard to the tender, climbed over it and, finding sympathetic laborers in the engineer and fireman, they had concealed him under the coal. He had sent for me, hoping that I would furnish him with means to go to America and find employment for him when he arrived there. I placed some money in the hands of the engineer for him and appointed a place of meeting provided he could get safely out of Russian territory. I left him still in an uncomfortable position under the coal—for the time had not come when he could be released without too great a risk—and after getting a breakfast I proceeded on my journey.

I waited at the rendezvous, and as he did not appear I feared that after all he had been captured. I made up my mind to write what I knew about him to his family and proceed on my way when I was told that there was an old man at the door of the hotel who wished to see me. I went out, thinking that he might be my man disguised, but on seeing him could see not the slightest resemblance. He fooled me for several minutes before telling me that he was Sviashski.

I brought him home with me, secured work for him, and in a couple of years he sent for his family to join him.

BUDAPEST THE OBJECT POINT OF RUSSIAN TROOPS

Reinforcements Number One Million Men, to be Hurled at German's Threatening Warsaw

By FRANCIS LAVELLE MURRAY.

Petrograd, Feb. 3.—Fierce fighting continues in the district west of Warsaw and the tide of victory is now flowing toward the Russians as a result of the arrivel there of fresh troops. Dispatches from Warsaw estimate the Russian reinforcements in this region at 1,000,000 men and an official statement issued here today stated that trenches taken by the Germans in the fighting have been recaptured.

While general interests centers in the fighting wst of Warsaw, the military experts regard the news that another invasion of Hungary is in full swing of greater importance from a strategical standpoint. The Russian general staff reports that large forces of cavalry are now approaching Budapest.

Russian successes in the region of Mlawa, northern Poland, are also announced in today's official statements. While it is admitted that the Russian drive against Thorn has been checked by the great masses of German troops hurried to the front along the lower Vistula, official confidence is expected that the situation in northern Poland will again turn to the advantage of the Russians.

The official statement is brief, but shows that the Russians are gaining, saying:

"The Russians have been successful in skirmishes in the direction of Mlawa.

"There has been severe fighting on the left bank of the Vistula, particularly south of Goumine (southwest of Warsaw). The Russians recaptured there the trenches lost in the first fighting. The conflict continues.

"In the Carpathians the Russians have advanced as far as the Upper San river, capturing at one point six guns, several machine guns, a Howitzer battery and many prisoners. The enemy has been driven out of the Wyszkow district."

The Austro-German forces in the Wyszkow district had been attempting for a week to advance northward toward Lemberg with the intention of forcing the Russians to evacuate the Galician capital and lift the siege of Przemysl.

TROOPS FIGHT AT CLOSE QUARTERS IN ARGONNE

By FRANKLIN P. MERRICK.

Paris, Feb. 3.—With clearing weather operations on the battle front in France, West Flanders and Alsace-Lorraine are assuming a bigger scale and a heightened degree of intensity. The attack delivered by German infantry on the Aisne indicates a renewal of hostilities on an extensive scale in the triangle formed by the junction of the Oise and Aisne rivers. German attacks at St. Paul, which were repulsed with severe losses, were directed against the French position in the forest of St. Mard, east of Soissons, where a heavy amount of French artillery was massed.

The French troops lying west of Muelhausen have resumed their attacks and progress is reported at Burnhaupt.

In the region of Arras and in West Flanders the German artillery has concentrated a terrific fire against the French, British and Belgian trenches.

After a respite, severe bayonet fighting is again in progress in the northern part of the Argonne district, the troops fighting at close quarters for possession of trenches. It is believed that the German troops in the vicinity of St. Hubert, Four de Paris and Perthes are being strongly reinforced. French airmen reported great activity on the railroads behind the German lines in this region.

GERMAN FIRE BOATS FAILED; WERE STOPPED

Paris, Feb. 3.—The official statement at the War Office today claims a gain for the French troops operating in the Aisnes Valley, particularly near Perthes, and also tells of the repulses of a violent German attack near Bagatelle in the Argonne. The statement follows:

"There is nothing to report from north of Lys. Between the Lys and the Oise in the Sector of Nouzette, which is west of Lens, our batteries silenced a sharp fire of the enemy's infantry. The Germans launched fire boats on the river Encre before Azeduy, north of Albert. These engines of destruction were stopped by us before any explosion occurred. Our artillery has continued to secure excellent results in the valley of the Aisne. We have advanced slightly taking some prisoners and repulsing a counter attack near hill No. 200 near Perthes."

LATE WAR BULLETINS

Constantinople, Feb. 3.—Via Berlin and Amsterdam—Fighting has been resumed between the Turkish and British forces at the junction of the Euphrates and Shat-el-Arab rivers in Mesopotamia, it was announced here today. An official statement said: "A force of 100 Turks attacked the English near Korna by night. Two battalions fired at each other for several hours. A squadron of gunboats drove off the Turks at daybreak, but the enemy lost heavily."

Berlin, Feb. 3, by wireless.—German troops occupy the greater part of Angola, according to information given out by the government press bureau today. It is reported from Lisbon that the Portuguese government is sending more troops to Africa.

It is also announced that confirmation had been received from Windhuk of the deaths of two German officials of high rank in Angola.

AUSTRALIANS GET THEIR "BAPTISM OF FIRE"

Cairo, Egypt, Feb. 3.—Australian troops were victorious over a detachment of Turkish soldiers in a skirmish near Nachl on the caravan route between Suez and El Akaba Monday night, according to advices received here today. The Turks are said to have retreated, leaving 30 dead and wounded on the field.

This fight was the Australians' "baptism of fire" and they acquitted themselves with credit. The Australian forces here are now of considerable strength.

GERMANS CAPTURE MANY RUSSIANS AND THEIR GUNS

Berlin, by wireless, Feb. 3.—The capture of 4,000 Russian prisoners and six machine guns since Feb. 1, in the fighting west of Warsaw, is announced in an official report from the German General Staff issued here this afternoon. It states also that Russian cavalry attacks in northern Poland and the French assault on German positions near Perthes have been repulsed.

BAN THINKS OF YANKS MOSTLY

By FRANK G. MENKE.

New York, Feb. 3.—The talk about the Hotel Belmont where the American league moguls are holding forth today was full of rumors of trades. The strengthening of the Yankees is the uppermost thought in the minds of the men in Ban Johnson's organization. Boston, Cleveland and St. Louis are expected to trade or sell men to New York.

Several clubs drew promising young players in the draft last season, while the Yankees di not get a single player. Before any of the players are turned back the Yankees will get first pick of the youngsters.

While the purpose of today's meeting is ostensibly to adopt the schedule, the chances are that the session will be carried on during the rest of the week.

The schedule will not keep the magnates busy. There are many questions connected with the complications that now surround the baseball situation that will be considered and new plans of campaign against the Federal league laid out.

Most of the members of the American league arrived here yesterday and early today. Thre was a full attendance when the meeting began.

RIPPER LEGISLATION.

Albany, Feb. 3. — Assemblyman Machold, chairman of the conservation commission of the Assembly today introduced the Administration Ripper Bill abolishing the Commissioner. Under the provisions of the measure the three present commissions are abolished and a single commissioner is provide for at a salary of $8,000 a year. There is to be one deputy at $6,000 a year and three separate divisions. Land, water supply and forest, fish and game. Each division is to be under the supersision of a chief at $2,500 a year.

HINMAN RESOLUTION PASSES THE ASSEMBLY.

Albany, Feb. 3.—By a vote of 113 to nothing the Hinman concurrent resolution proposin gan amendment to the State Constitution making the referendum of the proposition that women shall vote passed the Assembly today. The Senate advanced the resolution.

FLOOD WATERS ARE RECEDING

Pittsburgh, Pa. Feb. 3.—The flood crest in the Allegheny and Monongahela rivers was reached at midnight last night when the streams rose to a height of 28.4 feet, higher than they have registereds since the disastrou floods of March, 1913. The acute flood anger in western Pennsylvania is now believed to have passed. Forecasts for cold weather came this morning and the rivers are receding rapidly.

For eleven hours last night the rivers registered above the 28 foot mark and it was only 4 o'clock that river men were convinced that the cresa had been reached and passed. Although little actual damage was done, much suffering was caused among the poor who live along the water front and in the lowlands nearby. Practically all streets leading up from the rivers were covered with more than a foot and half of water.

All of the water front mills for miles up and down the Allegheny and Monongahela rivers have been forced to suspend operations temporarily because of the flooding of their plants.

Policemen in skiffs carried food and fuel to those who were unable to leave their homes this morning after having patrolled the flooded istrict all night watching for weakening walls and foundations. In many sections residents were ordered from their homes yesterday afternoon by the building inspectors, who feared the undermining of foundations.

HINMAN MAKES CHARGES.

Albany, Feb. 3.—After Majority Leader Hinman had pointed out that the Democratic party had used the Civil Service Commission for partisan purposes the Assembly today passed the bill amending the Civil Service law. The measure gives the Governor power to designate whom on the Committee shall be president and to change the designation at any time. The terms are for one, two and three years.

COMMIISSIONERS CONFIRMED.

Albany, Feb. 3.—The appointment of S. H. Ordaway, W. G. Rice and W. D. McKinstry to be Civil Service Commissioners was confirmed unanimously by the Senate today.

PURCHASE BILL REPORTED BACK

Due to an Amendment, Provided Effort Fails to Reconsider Resolution

Washington, Feb. 3.—Administration senators today sought to persuade the seven seceding senators to turn to the Democratic fold and drive through the shipping bill, as umch untrammelled by amendments as possible.

The immediate destiny of the bill awaited the outcome of the conferences between the Democratic leaders and the seven senators who bolted on Sunday. Unless these senators return to the fold it is possible the Democrats will postpone a test vote.

Although the most earnest efforts were made by the Democrats to keep their caucus proceedings of last night a deep secret it became known today that their program is: An effort to reconsider the vote by which Senator Stone's resolution to table the resolution to recommit was lost. Failing in this move, Senator Fletcher will offer an amendment that the bill be recommitted with instructions to report back in forty-eight hours. It is practically certain that the bill will be amended to place a time limit on the time of operation of the government. The Democrats also have agreed that the neutrality is to be safeguarded by an amendment forbiding the purchase of interned ships without the belligerent's consent.

CARRANZA TO TRY ESCAPE

Villa with 70,000 Troops Closing in Upon His Arch Enemy

By LEWIS T. MATSON.

El Paso, Tex., Feb. 3.—Gen. Villa notified Constitutionalist headquarters at Juarez today that he had ordered his army to move at once against Tampico. Troop trains are already carrying Villa's soldiers toward Tampico position will be greatly strengthened and his supporters believe he will soon bring to an end the various revolutions that have cropped out. A message received from Aguascalientes last night General Villa declared that he had an army of 70,000 men and asserted that within six weeks his forces would be supreme. In this message he admitted that he had been wounded, but said that his injury which had been accidently suffered, was not serious.

The general opinion along the border is that Villa will be able to 'make good" on his predictions of ultimate victory over the Carranzistas and others of his foes. The failure of eneral Carranza to return to Mexico City is taken as an indication that the "first chief" intends to stay at Vera Cruz in order to make his escape from the country when Villa is triumphant.

GIRL TICKET AGENT ROBBED BY NEGROES.

New York, Feb. 3.—With a revolver pressed against her chest, Miss Jennie Kent, ticket agent of the Brooklyn Rapid Transit company at Fulton and Sumner ave., was held up early today by two negroes who made away with all the cash in sight, including two dollars in the woman's purse. The highwaymen escaped just before a train pulled in at the station.

TAKING CARE OF EMPLOYES.

Albany, Feb. 3.—When the Thorn bill abolishing the Efficiency and Economy Commission came up in the Senate today with a favorable report from the Judiciary Commission, Senator Gilchrist offered an amendment which provide for the return to the Civil Service list of the employes who would be otherwise thrown out of positions.

Lips Untouched by Kisses.

Moultrie, Ga., Feb. 3.—If a pretty girl wants to kiss you, do not run away. John Radcliffe, in trying to remain unkissed, fled from pretty Miss Winifred Trice, fell through a door and broke his arm and three ribs. He says he's satisfied because his lips are still untouched.

HALF MILLION STORM LOSS

Death Follows In Wake of Hurricane—Swept Jersey Coast; Metropolis Suffers

New York, Feb. 3.—At least $500,000 damage was done to property by the storm which swept up the Atlantic coast and seven deaths were caused in the New York district. Four of these seven storm victims were drowned when the steam dredge Eastern was sunk by the high wind in the Port Jefferson, L. I., harbor.

Fifteen thousand men were at work in the streets of this city today removing the snow, but their work was made difficult by the colder weather which had turned the slush into solid ice.

Rail traffic and wire communication still suffered from the effects of the snow, sleet and wind, but conditions were better than those of yesterday.

The New Jersey coast was hard hit by the storm, many towns and bridges being damaged by the waves rolled inshore by the 90-mile an hour wind.

At Keansburg, N. J., 500 feet of new bulkhead was badly damaged.

A blizzard raged through the northern part of New York state last night and the fall of snow in the mountain states districts was heavy.

The increasing cold in New York has caused widespread suffering, especially among the unemployed. All the charitable institutions were filled to overflowing during the night.

A riot occurred at the office of District Superintendent John Kernan of the street cleaning department when 500 men who had gathered to solicit work cleaning streets were disappointed. Police reserves restored order.

PROBING STREET PAVING IN SCHENECTADY.

Schenectady, Feb. 3.—Schenectady's common council held the first session of a probe last night in an effort to place the blame for tampering with a petition to pave a street in 1913, after the petition had left the hands of its signers. W. Thomas Wooley, city engineer of Syracuse, who was city engineer here in 1913, was the principal witness of the evening. His testimony and that of Fred Mett, the originator of the petition which now bears a rider, were absolutely contradictory. The investigation is due to the contention of the residents of the street involved that inasmuch as a rider was pasted to the petition after he ysigned it, which inreased the expense of the pavement by several dollars, they will not pay the assessment on the improvement. At midnight the probers adjourned until tomorrow night.

FORMER SYRACUSE MAN DIES

New York, Feb. 3.—Abraham Edward Perrin, former New York State Fair Commissioner and one of the pioneer carriage manufacturers of the state, died of heart disease caused by acuate indigestion, at the hotel Marie Antoinnette today. He was 62 years old. Mr. Perrin was born in England and lived for many years in Buffalo and Syracuse, taking up his residence in New York one year ago. He served commissioner for eleven years, being supplanted when a Democratic administration succeeded that of Governor Hughes.

EXPLOSION IN BOARDING HOUSE KILLS NINE.

Kane, Pa. Feb. 3.—Nine persons are reported to have been killed and at least twenty-five injured, some believed to be fatally, and many seriously, in an explosion that completely wrecked a tenement boarding house a Mayburg, Pa., near Kane early this morning. Several rescuers were reported injured in attempting rescue work from the mass of debriss.

Relief trains brought dead and dying to Kane at 9 o'clock this morning. At that time four bodies were reported recovered. It is thought that the explosion was occasioned by leaking gas but this belief had not been verified by the authorities.

Opinions

With a Brass Band.

Concerning the envious suggestion made in Kansas that the Progressive party is quietly purchasing a lot in the political graveyard, the Hon. William Allen White remarks: "We may venture to say that if or when the Bull Moosers go to the boneyard, they will go not as galley slaves scourged to a dungeon but as a drum major with a brass band. The pussy foot never has fitted well on the Bull Moose. He has his faults, but the right hand always has written notice in black-face type of what the left hand is doing."—Press, Chicago.

Developed by Protection.

This country can produce anything it really needs. Many recall the days when it was said that it would be impossible to develop our silk industry, yet this is one of the largest of all our lines of manufacture. The duty on tin plate was opposed in the belief that we could not compete with the tin manufacturers of Wales, but the tin plate industry in this country employs tens of thousands. The duty on lemons, pineapples, and oranges was fought, but Florida has taken the market from Cuba and Spain. Protection for onions was laughed at, yet Texas raises more onions than we now import from Bermuda.

Cane sugar and beet sugar were considered worthy of Protection, and the sugar industry of Louisiana and the beet sugar industry of California, Colorado, Michigan, and other States—now needlessly being sacrificed—grew by leaps and bounds. Many will recall what was supposed to be the folly of Protecting dates, raisins, prunes, walnuts ond olives in the United States, yet we note by the July bulletin of the California Development Board that the prune crop of Santa Clara Valley this year is estimated at from 50,000,000 to 65,000,000 pounds dried, and the walnut crop of California at over 10,000 tons. Protection for hardware has developed an enormous business in St. Louis and other popular centers. Protection of shoes built up a great New England industry; of hats, the splendid manufacturing enterprise in Connecticut, and of Jewelry, a trade in that line in Rhode Island that is the envy of the world.—Leslie's Weekly.

Psychology or Pay Envelope

About every time the President gets his pay envelope he writes something encouraging for business. His last epistle to the Commercial includes a blessing for big business. The rough roads are passed, every thing is macadam rolled from this point and the country is to enjoy wonderful prosperity. The President has encouraged the people many times. Since times must some day improve and he continues optimistic some day he will hit it right and get a great reputation.

Business in certain lines is a lot better, hence all business is some better. But our improvement is not due to crops or economics. It is directly due to the war of nations which in times of peace compete with us for our home markets and in times of war must have our food and supplies they cannot make, the able bodied being at war. As long as the war lasts this country will have an increased export trade and a decreased import trade. These conditions are to the advantage of any country. But they are only temporary. When war ceases the men from the battlefield will again compete with our workmen. Unless the Underwood tariff law is amended we shall revert to the days of depression antedating the war and due absolutely to the surrender of our home markets. When the President draws his next pay envelope and feels like writing a peice he should propose a return to Protection so that when the war is over business will be better than it is today.—Standard, N. Y.

Five British Ships Sunk.

The exploit of the German submarine U-21 in sinking three British merchant ships in the Irish Sea near Liverpool, Saturday, was duplicated yesterday, when two steamers flying the British flag were sunk in the English Channel near Harvey Other vessels were chased by the submarine.

The exploits of the U-21 prove that Admiral von Tirpitz when last December he suggested the starvation of England by the destruction of her ships off her own coast was revealing a plan, and not speculating as to a possibility. What defense can be interposed between the submarine and the merchant ship is one of the most serious problems confronting the British admiralty.

It is asserted that the latest German underwater boats are capable of traveling 2,500 miles, which gives them a sphere of effectiveness that obviously makes any merely local protective measures inadequate. The power against which they are employed must devise a defense that shall cover a wide area of the ocean and is competent to resist the severities of storm as well as the attacks of the enemy. At present it seems improbable that any agent more effective than light cruisers and destroyers can be used, but even England cannot provide the sufficient number to guard each individual merchantman. Thus the immediately effective measure may be the convoying of merchant fleets by naval fleets, and the employment of air craft to detect the approach of underwater assailants. It would be rash, however, to believe that some other form of defense may not be produced in the emergency that England faces.—Dispatch, Utica.

Relief for the Kidneys.

Mr. William J. Calkins, 343 Main street, Hartford, Conn., says:—"After having doctored for more than a year with best physicians in Hartford and getting no relief, I was advised by a druggist in Plainville, Ct., to try a bottle of Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy. I was very nervous and had a complication of diseases, especially kidney trouble. I started to use Favorite Remedy and the first bottle gave me great relief. I continued its use for some time and was permanently cured. I sincerely recommend it to sufferers and discouraged in thinking there is no help for them." 40 years of success in Kidney and liver disorders. Write Dr David Kennedy Co., Rondout, N. OSBORNE ON SCHOOLS

Thomas Mott Osborne blames the school system for some criminals. He says the schools are all wrong, and that there should be more democracy in the schools to prepare for life in a republic. In order to teach self-government, he states, we must give self-government.

"The public schools are not preparing young people for citizenship," said Mr. Osborne. He further states:

"The public schools are not doing enough to develop this larger loyalty—the feeling of responsibility for others, for the community. Without this democracy is impossible.

"The feeling of personal loyalty exists in all. It is the professional ethics of the burglar. It must be developed into loyalty to the community; that is, responsibility for the welfare of the community. This can be taught only by giving responsibility for their own actions to teachers and pupils alike. The schools must prepare for self-government by allowing self-government."

Thomas Mott Osborne has spoken with good, solid judgment on this point. It is the duty of every community to take an active interest in its schools. Fulton is particularly without activity in this line. Of all the clubs of the city engaged in literary or other pursuits, there is not one directly connected or affiliated with school life, and why not? Scarcely creditable does it seem that in a city of 12,000 inhabitants there is not one Parent Teacher's Association, not one Mother's club delving into school problems, and not even one branch of club life stirring in this line. Many villages, and all progressive cities years ago formed associations to stimulate school life, why not Fulton?

While it is all very well to enlarge on the duties of the school, and to criticise the teacher when things go wrong, the true spirit of progressive, valuable school life really emanates from the home itself. The progress and culture of a city does not let the schools shift for themselves.

THE WIDOWS' PENSION BILL

The widows' pension bill, introduced in the Senate by Mr. Mills and in the Assembly by Mr. McCue, represents an effort to have the state discharge more completely an obligation which it already assumes in part toward the dependent in the community. Pensions are to be paid to widows who have children to support and cannot support them unaided. Such children often have to be taken care of in state institutions, and if they stay at home are pretty sure to become a charge of some sort on the public. The community must pay eventually for their lack of a fair opportunity to live decently and to receive a normal education.

The scope of the state charity system may properly be extended so as to give assistance to widows who would be glad to bring up their children at home if they only had the means to do so. Orphans go to the state institutions, but a poverty-stricken widow's little ones often have a harder fate than that. The objection has been made to the pension bill that it is the wholesome dread of becoming recognized paupers which leads many mothers to make a hopeless struggle to keep their children at home when home resources are sadly deficient. To such the receipt of a pension from the state would not be an acknowledgment of pauperism. The recipient would agree to do a return service on which the state may rightly put a considerable value.

If the money to be spent on widows' pensions is raised locally and thus represents only another form of local relief activity no criticism of the scheme can well be made. Each community will determine for itself the urgency of the assistance requested and can thus regulate its own charity expenditures. What we call public charity is not pure alms. Every community finds that in the long run the investment comes back in a higher average of welfare and in greater social efficiency.—Tribune, N. Y.

NEW SYSTEM FOR SCHOOL

State Department is Framing New Measure. Salaries May be Raised

The State Department of Education is preparing a bill for introduction to the Legislature during the present session which will provide uniform regulations for the school systems of all cities of the first, second and third classes in New York State. The details of the bill are now being worked out and it is expected that the measure will be ready for legislative action within a short time. A summary of some of the new points to be brought up follows:

The bill provides for an educational board in each city, to be composed of five of seven members, to be appointed by the mayor and serving without salary. The most important feature of the bill is the power over city appropriations for educational work which will be vested in the school board.

Under the plan proposed, the Board of Education will prepare the budget at a meeting to be attended by the mayor. The school budget will then be presented to the mayor, and if it meets with approval, will be sent to the city clerk, to be included in the city budget.

Should the mayor disapprove of the budget, he may return it without his approval to the Board of Education, which then has the right to repass it by a vote of five members, in case there are seven on the board. Then it takes its place in the city budget as in the ordinary course and must be adopted by the Common Council.

Must Be Voters

According to present plans, the Board of Education is to consist of qualified voters, which, it is noted, would at present exclude women.

If it should be decided that members of this board should be elected rather than appointed, the State department favors the holding of special elections for this purpose, at which no other subject should be considered.

It is the wish of the State department, it is explained, that education may become a State proposition rather than a purely local question.

According to the bill, the city Board of Education would have power to employ a superintendent of schools, and to appoint teachers and other officers, and to fix their remuneration.

A Higher Salary Scale

The bill also suggests a scale of minimum salaries and proposes to fix the pay of primary teachers at $600, with yearly increases of $50 until a maximum of $1,200 is reached, and that of secondary schools at $1,000, with similar increases to a maximum of $1,800. This scale is higher than that given in a greater number of cities in this State.

It is understood that considerable changes may be made in the bill, particularly in regards to the school budget, before it is presented to the Legislature.

PLACING THE CREDIT.

A teacher, instructing her class in the composition of sentences, wrote two on the blackboard, one a misstatement of fact, and the other wrong gramamatically. The sentences were: "The hen has three legs," and "Who done it?"

"Harry," she said to one of the youngsters, "go to the blackboard and show where the fault lies in those two sentences."

Harry slowly approached the board, evidently studying hard. Then he took the crayon and wrote

"The hen never done it. God done it."—Tit-Bits.

PIANOS

The test of the Henry F. Miller piano by those who know. It is hard to describe the Miller tone, it is higher, it is deeper, more delicately playful than the voice of any other musical instrument.

The Miller tone has an underlying richness, simple music takes on a new charm when played on the Henry F. Miller piano, very classy and in a class by themselves.

For singing and voice work you have the real ideal piano, for orchestra and critical work it never has been excelled.

Wearing qualities never questioned. Case work refined and delicate and marvelously constructed in polished and dull finished cases.

COMMISSION TO HANDLE OSWEGO'S WATER POWER.

Oswego, Feb. 3.—A form of bill, to be introduced into the Legislature in Albany as soon as possible, creating a water service commission of five members, to have full charge and control of the city's water and power rights at the high dam on the Oswego river, was formally and unanimously adopted by the power commission at a meeting held Monday night in the City Hall. There was no discussion, and the form of bill as drafted by the sub-committee was approved by the members of the commission as a whole on a recommendation to that effect from Chairman John D. Higgins who was also chairman of the sub-committee. The bill was a result of three weeks' deliberations by the members of the sub-committee and was agreed upon at a session held Saturday night. It is virtually an amendment of the city charter, and gives the city of Oswego all rights to develop or to do what may be thought fit with the water power and all rights in its connection at the high dam.

Chairman John D. Higgins of the Power commission this noon announced that he had selected D. P. Morehouse, sr., and John R. Pidgeon to assist him in getting the bill adopted by the commission last night before the firm of legal experts in New York city and later before the legislature in Albany.

In Canada we learn our game,
Then play our stakes as tho' we're sane;
We don't believe in raising Cain
And loosing time.

Of course you read of Princes Pat.
And of her boys who flung the bat,
And knocked the Bassee Dutchman's hat
All gally west?

I see poor Dutchie stuck in mud,
I see the steam raise from his blood.
I'll bet my hat, he lost his cud;
Poor Dutchie boy.

It takes a lot to beat the Dutch;
Canadian boys don't find it such
A task to make them wear the crutch
Hurrah! Miss Pat.

It takes more than a German shell
To make them miss that old mess bell,
But if, "To Arms" I hear them yell

About Sports Generally

By FRANK G. MENKE.

New York, Feb. 3.—Golf, if you care to know it, has delivered the coffers of the big league magnates a harder wallop than the general business depression, the European war or any of the other causes given for the falling off in the 1914 ball game attendance.

Golf is wearing the folks away from baseball. Ten years ago—even three years ago—there weren't many golfers. The golf fever has ravaged the nation most in the last two years. The golf devotes numberd probably 5,000 or 10,000 fifteen years ago. The estimates of the golfers in the United States today range up to 1,000,000 (one million).

In other years when the American business man could tear himself away from his regular choves during the summer time he would hustle out to the ball parks. Now the once time fan who is a golfer skids past the ball park and hustles out to the links so as to get in 18 holes before sundown.

Watching a baseball game is good sport and it is thrilling, but a man who loves baseball and golf at the same time usually loves golf the more. Baseball, to a golfer, is only baseball, but golf is a Heaven sent pastime.

In every big league town at least 300 men who used to be regular attendants at the ball games now go golfing. The figure may go higher—probably may reach 1,000 a day. But let us take the lower figure of 300 a day. The organized major leaguers stage eight big league games a day. The loss of 300 fans at each game means a total loss of 2,400 a day.

Over a season's stretch of 154 games it will be seen that at the rate of 2,400 a day a total of nearly 400,000 fans are weaned away from baseball games by golf. At 75 cents a head it means that the total money loss for a season is $300,000.

Split among the 16 clubs in the organized majors makes averages nearly $20,000 a year lost to each club because golf has stolen away some of the fans.

Women golfers are demanding equal rights on the links. They say it's just horrid mean of the masculine golfers to assume a lordly attitude on th egolf course and that hereafter, by gosh, they're gonna get their rights or—well, the alternative hasn't been decided upon yet but it will be something horrible.

The ladies have been busting into newspaper and magazine pages quite frequently of late with long wails concerning the injustice to which they must submit.

"The men are too conceited—that's what's the matter," writes one feminine golfer. "They think that all the golfing skill in the world is theirs. They think whenever they are on the course they dominate it. If women are playing ahead of them they insist upon playing through. They won't wait as they would if other men were playing ahead of them.

"There are some women golfers today who are pretty nearly as good as the best men golfers. And a dub woman golfer is no worse than a dub man golfer. So there is no reason for the men to be so puffed up about themselves as golfers.

"Equal rights is what we want on the links and that is what we will insist upon getting in 1915—and in all the years to come. "If we don't"——!!!

IN THE WORLD OF SPORT

Charles Deal, Who Helped Braves Win Pennant.

Among baseball players and fans Charles Deal, who played third base for the Boston Braves in the world's pennant series, is known as the man who made good in a pinch. Deal was originally the regular third baseman of the Braves, but because of poor health and light batting George Stallings purchased Red Smith from Brooklyn to play the base. When Smith broke his ankle just before the beginning of the clash with the Athletics Deal got the opportunity to show what was in him. Although entirely out of practice, having been on the bench for some time, he surprised the fans by his splendid work. In fact, he was largely responsible for Boston's victory in the second game of the series. Deal is a native of Williamsburg, Pa., twenty-three years old, and began his professional career at the age of seventeen. For a time he was with the Detroit Tigers, but Jennings sent him to Providence for more experience. In the fall of 1913 Stallings secured him for the Braves.

The Patella Punch Is New.

When Zulu Kid was stopped by the "ischium punch" in a recent fight with Bobby Burns in St. Louis it appeared that the last word in pugilistic novelties had been found. Burns hit the Kid three inches below the hip, around to the rear, paralyzing the Zulu's leg. But still greater hope for the defensive efforts of the dwarf against the giant is found in the patella or kneecap punch which Johnny Kirk dealt Eddie Campi in a recent bout. Kirk started a swing near the floor and Campi stepped in to avoid it, getting a crack right on his praying knuckle. Temporarily paralyzed, he hobbled through the round. He recovered during the intermission, but limped through the rest of the show—four rounds.

Stallings Wants Twenty-four Players.

George Stallings is very much put out over the new roster limit of twenty-one adopted by the National league. "The twenty-two suggested by the American league would have been much better," said he. "Twenty-one will give no one an opportunity to carry a uniformed coach. Take me, for instance. A great deal of my success with the Braves was due to co-operation with Fred Mitchell. I cannot afford to sacrifice him. That, then, will mean that I will have to get along with twenty men. I think a manager should be allowed to carry at least twenty-four players."

$4,200 to Win One Game.

Colonel Robert Lee Hedges of the St. Louis Browns claims to have paid the record price for one victory last season, $4,200. This was Lefty Leverens's yearly stipend last year, and he cashed in just one win for the Browns, though he had a dozen chances. And the colonel blames the Feds for this high figure. He only paid Leverens $3,200 in 1913, but the Feds offered him $6,000 last spring, despite the fact that the pitcher injured his arm on the round the world tour, and Hedges had to pay him $4,200 to hold him.

Yanks' Business Manager.

Harry Sparrow, a long time friend of Manager McGraw of the Giants and Captain Huston, has been appointed business manager of the Yankees. Mr. Sparrow served in a similar capacity for the National and American league teams which toured the world a year ago under the direction of Manager McGraw and Charles A. Comiskey of the Chicago White Sox.

Browns Have Tall Pitchers.

The St. Louis American league pitching staff for next season will include seventeen pitchers, whose combined height is 102 feet and whose average height is a fraction over six feet to the man.

IN A NAVAL FIGHT

Vital Work Is Done In the Control Room of the Vessel.

THE HEART OF THE WARSHIP.

Through This Steel Cell, Deep Under the Deck, the Commander In the Conning Tower Is In Touch With Every Person and Event on Board.

When a warship sails into action her heart pulses and throbs as eager for the fray as the hearts of any of her crew. Yes, a warship has a heart. The heart of a warship is the control room, deep down under the deck, situated aft, usually abaft the second funnel.

Even on big fighting ships the heart is small. Generally it is only ten feet by six, and is almost noise proof and eerily quiet. It is really a steel vault, entered by a door not unlike the door of a burglar proof safe.

From floor to ceiling the walls are lined with dials, wires, gauges, electric bells, speaking tubes, switches and a great amount of other apparatus which keeps the commander in constant touch with every corner of the ship. It is the most wonderful and the most fearful room on earth or sea.

It is a fortress within a fortress, a steel cell within the steel walls of the fighting engine.

To be in the control room during active service is to feel like being in a vault with the door locked on the outside. This little compartment which visitors seldom see, will keep alive as long as there is a living soul on board able to hear and answer a call.

It is through the control room that the commander issues his instructions, observes and notes how the battle is going, calls the gun crews from place to place, directs the engineers, steers the whole fabric and supervises everything. If a submarine is seen in any direction it is through the control room that it is reported.

A little bell rings, a voice far away speaks, "Submarine on the port bow, sir, two leagues off." In an instant the answer thrills the gun crews: "'Ware submarine on the port bow; enemy's craft. Ready!" The gunners have been ready for some time, and when the chief gunner has "laid" the gun to his satisfaction bang goes a message the enemy will not forget if it hits him.

If a gun has to cease fire the order comes through the control room. If the enemy lands a shell on deck or anywhere in the warship the doctors are notified that they are wanted at that spot almost as soon as the men have fallen. If the gun crew are dead it is from the heart of the ship that the order is given for fresh men to fill their places.

Though the captain himself is in the conning tower above, he knows through the officer in the control room just what has happened to his ship and the extent of the damage, and if the captain is killed in the conning tower or on the bridge the chief officer in the control room goes up at once to take his place.

There are generally about six men in this little throbbing heart of the battleship, including operators and junior officers.

The chief officer gives directions to the torpedo operators, the gunners, the searchlight manipulators and the officers in charge of the fighting masts, if such are part of the ship's equipment. But, besides all this, there are a thousand and one things to attend to during an engagement.

Every order has to be given at an instant's notice; given distinctly, firmly, without the slightest hesitation or flurry. It is only in the control room that one learns what the phrase "devotion to duty" really means.

Everything goes with automatic precision in the heart of a warship, and as it is the most vital spot on board special care is taken to preserve it from harm.

Think of the steady nerves required of those men, cooped up in this small room when the shells are flying around and the hull is being battered by the enemy's guns! A wrong signal might mean disaster, but the organization is so near perfection that mistakes are practically unknown.

There is no rest for the officers in the control room during a fight. They must stay at the ship's heart telegraphing and telephoning to every part of the vessel, without taking notice of the wreckage that is being heaped up on every hand. They know that when the men in turret No. 1 or turret No. 2 cease to reply to their signals something serious has happened.

They know that even when the conning tower has been smashed by shot and shell and the bridge has been swept away they must stick to their switches so long as there is an officer alive to direct operations. Not until the ship is blown up or rammed are they allowed to leave that little room, and then they go down with her.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Always Truthful.

"Does your husband ever lie to you?"
"Never."
"How do you know?"
"He tells me that I do not look a day older than I did when he married me, and if he doesn't lie about that I don't think he would about less important matters."—Houston Post.

He shines in the second rank who is eclipsed in the first.—Cornelia.

War: Pathos and Humor

London, Feb. 3.—Operations elsewhere involving larger masses of troops have somewhat overshadowed the British conquest of Mesopotamia, which is proceeding steadily. The Turks have put up a good resistance, but are now breaking down. From the Persian Gulf the British troops from India advancing inland in this cradle of civilization.

I have just learned some interesting deetails of the earlier stages of this campaign from a letter written by a man with the Indian Expeditionary Force. He writes in part:

"We sighted our rendezvous on November 13, after a most uneventful, calm and comfortable voyage, and lay at anchor for two days. We were ten miles from land off the mouth of the Shatt el Arab, the united stream of Tigris and Euphrates. It certainly was a most remarkable sight transports of all sorts, carrying troops, stores, camels, mules, and artillery—much more livelier than Bombay Harbor had been.

At dawn on the 15th we passed the bar and sailed up stream, past the fort at Pao, which was captured by the Indian Brigade, that had gone ahead of us several days before. On the morning of the 16th we disembarked at a place called Saniyeh.

At dawn on the 17th, we marched out northwards. The whole scenery here is one same; the river is fringed on one side for a mile or so with date groves, intersected with little nullahs, full of water at high tide. Beyond is the desert with the most wonderful mirage; at times one thinks that the troops ahead are marching through water and date groves, and it is all mirage; they are really on the sand. We marched eight miles across the desert inland to the palm groves. At first we went through river mud, which clogged our boots and made marching very heavy; then came a sudden rain storm which lasted an hour, soaked up to the skin, and left mud on each boot at every step.

At 11.30, just as the rain came down, the first Turkish shell came over us and the battle of Sahil had commenced. The Turks were about 6,000 strong, with twelve guns of various sorts, entrenched in an old fort, in a police station, and in trenches along the fringe of the date groves. We attacked in two columns. For an hour it was an artillery duel, with our guns, aided by the guns of the gunboat on the river firing over them. Then each brigade attacked. We lay waiting two hours under shrapnel fire from the enemy, and later with the bullets from their firing line which had passed our attack, coming in half sent all round us. I am bound to admit that lying on absolutely open desert without a particle of any sort of shelter, is excessively unpleasant. We in spite of that, and although we got our share of it, the shrapnel burst too high, and we had only four casualties. The doctor of the 7th Rajputs was hit as he advanced. At about three the Turks evacuated their position, without waiting for the final charge. We covered the retirement into our new camp. There were some unpleasant sights. The whole place was covered with dead and wounded Turks, Arabs, and even Chaldeans; we collected about twenty stretchers and brought in as many of them as we could. The field ambulance people were not at all pleased as they already had as many as they could deal with.

That evening we were on guard over the prisoners—a most weird collection of all sorts of Arabs and Turks. Two wounded Turkish officers whom we picked up talked broken French; they were all against the war. One of them is the son of a Turkish doctor in Bagdad and the other hailed from Beirout. Just as we started to come to camp a furious dust-storm descended from the desert. Our camp for that night and the following four nights was the acme of discomfort. All our kit was at the bottom of the river. I had only a cardigan jacket for warmth; the only food in twenty-four hours a sausage and a half a loaf of bread. On the fifth day we got some supply rations and made a sort of stew. At night here it is very cold and with a keen wind; six of us slept altogether under a waterproof sheet in a bunch to keep warm, but, even so, one was up half the night walking about at the camp fire to get roasted.

We were in camp at this place until the 21st. On two occasions we were on outpost duty in the old fort. The latter occasion was at night, and the sniping went on from darkness to dawn with very little sleep for anyone. I got the hospital into cover behind a solid wall but we had several bullets overhead and there was such an incessant noise that there was little sleep. The cold, with only a cardigan jacket on one was intense.

On the evening of the 21st we embarked on one of the Lynch river steamers and proceeded up stream, as news had come in that Turks had evacuated Basra and that the Arabs were looting the city. The Turks had sunk a Hamburg-American boat of 7,000 tons and two lighters across the river and our transport steamers could not pass it; we had to anchor at night near the obstruction and to pass it by daylight. At 10 a. m. we arrived at Basra to find the whole place quiet and two gunboats in the river, and some places fire from the Arab raid. We landed at the pier of the German Consulate.

Then followed two of the most weird days imaginable. We got all our kit ashore in small steamers from the Ekma, except our horses, which were only landed yesterday. The German flag was hauled down and the staff of the Consulate were in reality prisoners. But at the same time we were billeted in the Consulate and they were our hosts. Th Germans fed us most luxuriously; rather quaint to be dining in rooms ornamented with German flags and the Emperor William's disgusting portrait, in company with six Germans who were half hosts and half prisoners.

THE B. T. C. BOYS ENJOYED TALK

Akin to appreciation of efficiency is the appreciation of suffering. To speak a word for pain and to count it among the blessings of life may seem strange of us to be stretching a point beyond what facts would warrant. But not if we reflect a little. It is simply a matter of world wide observation that the present streams of life are filtered through the lands of affliction. The influences which soften and sweeten humanity, that benefit it with love and rescue it from selfishness have flown a thousand times more from the sick chamber than from the athletic club. The steam heated furnace makes immensely larger contribution to noble manhood and womanhood than do those that know little or nothing of the fire.

Pain and progress seem to be inseparably linked together. The lesson is brought home to us with early spring time. Before there can be opening buds and unfolding flowers with their sweetness there must be a crackling of shells and bursting of bulbs and a splitting of pods. To obtain suitable wood for the sounding board of pianos and the sides of violins, men find that best which has been swept by the storm and smitten by the blast. Wood grown in the sheltered hot house will not do. There is no music in it; and the best music of life is produced by trouble and pain.

Some day we shall thank God for our aches and afflictions, for one's trouble and sorrows. Some day we shall see that trouble was the port where we coaled up and stocked up for a stormy voyage which we could have hardly made without it. Some day we shall see that the sweetest perfume of one life came because the flower was crushed. Some day we shall see it was the deep waters that made us strong swimmers. Some day we shall see that the real pleasures of life, the pleasures that are something more than froth and foam on the surface, the pleasures that stay with us to bless our inmost souls, get their richest flavor from our pains. Appreciation will rise up within us, and the words of the Psalmist will spring to one life and we shall say, "It is a good thing for me that I have been afflicted that I might learn thy statutes."

But perhaps I can come a little closer yet and make my subject still more real. Jesus went to a certain place and failed and the gospel narrative says of Him, "He could do no mighty work there because of their unbelief." Even the Master was baffled and his energies palsied and his power suppressed by a shortage of appre- It is a truth to take home, a truth to apply around the whole circle of life.

Applause is not a superfluity, it is not useless effervescence, it is a tonic; it is an essential ingredient, in all the finest work.

If you want the musician to play well and the singer to sing with a new thrill and a new power, or the author to write his book, or the painter to paint his picture, or any human being to do magnificently, cheer him, appreciate him, give him the praise, the lift of hearty commendation and those who applaud the athlete in the arena know all this. I sometimes think that the fundamental thing at the root of the great labor problem is just here. The humble working man is made to feed that his labor the kind of thing he does is held in sort of contempt. The impression is made upon him that his lowly tasks are despised, looked down upon and he cannot stand it. Men will never work and be happy until they see that their work is appreciated. If employers added appreciation to the pay of their employes, there would be less distrust less friction, less clamoring for shorter hours of labor.

My subject bears everywhere. Appreciation of public officials would vastly improve our public service. Appreciation of the church not only on the part of the community into which it is constantly pouring its life, purify in the morale, elevating its tones but on the part of its own members, of what it is doing for them and for their children, would bring more generous and hearty support. If appraised as it deserves to be and in proportion to its restraining and elevating influence, to nothing else would we give out money so gladly.

In no other atmosphere than that of appreciation can the sweetness and the gentleness of wifehood, the nobility and unselfishness of husbandhood and the trust and loyalty of children unfold. To be miserly in praise and constant in fault finding is enough to break up any household, or any church, or any society or association of people. There is nothing better for the world and nothing more wholesome for ourselves and nothing that brings larger rewards in all the relations of life than appreciation. Its virtue and its value are above price.

PHEASANT EGGS FOR THE ASKING

Secretary Davenport Wants to Know How Many are Desired by Persons Who Will "Set" Them

Edward Davenport is in receipt of a letter from the superintendent of the state game farm, at Sherburne, N. Y., in which that official desires to learn the number of pheasant eggs desired by farmers and other persons in this vicinity who may be interested in propogation of these beautiful game birds.

Mr. Davenport is still the secretary of the Fulton Gun and Game club, and is consequently, sufficiently interested in the welfare of fish and game to create as great demand as possible for the product of the game farm.

The state superintendent informs Mr. Davenport that all allotments of eggs, will be made accordingly as applications are received at Sherburne, or by the local secretary. This year the Fulton club will receive a larger than usual supply of eggs. Last year the Fulton Gun and Game club received as its quota from the State Conservation Commission 700 pheasant eggs and 125 half-grown birds.

Inasmuch as last year the Fulton club did not receive a supply of trout fingerlings, there will be allotted in 1915 a larger number than in former years. In the words of Secretary Davenport, the Gun and Game club will this year "get the limit." In addition to the trout fingerlings the club will be awarded a fine lot of yellow perch, pike and black bass. The yellow perch will be placed in Lake Neahtawanta, the bass and pike in the river and the trout distribution will be made in the Kilby, Nelson, Windmill, Pinehill, Lewis and Carpenter Creeks.

THE BOY SCOUTS.

We printed in the December issue of Our Dumb Animals a statement, made under, as we said, what seemed to be the authority of the National Rifle Association of America, to the effect that the Boy Scouts were being trained in marksmanship through co-operation with this National Rifle Association which was supply instructors and supervisors. Our comment implied, that we still fear is true, that rifle associations are more anxious to widen the market for rifles than to develop the character of the Boy Scouts. Rifle practice at targets is fine discipline as well as good sport. However, we are always afraid that the boy who discovers he is a crack shot, as well as the boy who becomes familiar with a gun, will want to practice on something beside a target, and that back of the desire to have all our school-boys trained in shooting is the secret purpose of somebody to foster the spirit of militarism.

"The Boy Scouts of America is in all ways a non-military organization, our Scouts do not use guns, parade, engage in sham battles or participate in any of the cut and dried military practices."

The letter continues, "We offer a merit badge to Boy Scouts for marksmanship, but certainly this could not be objected to for all who are familiar with the development of boys realize how keenly interested they are in marksmanship." Among the promises made by the Scout seeking the merit badge in one which reads "I will never shoot at or kill a harmless animal or bird for the mere pleasure of killing." We are glad of this promise. Still, having had some knowledge of boys and of guns as well, we believe it is possible to develop even the highest type of citizenship without guns. It may take a little extra work, but it can be done.—Our Dumb Animals.

MORE CRUEL THAN BEATING

Many a horse, we are confident, could be speak, would gladly say, "Even a sharp blow now and then would cause me less suffering by far than sending me out onto icy and slippery streets improperly shod or with the calks of my shoes worn out." The Horse World is well within moderation when it writes:

"It is a mystery, in these days of scientific business management, that a concern which takes the greatest care of its horses in the stable cheerfully allows them to go abroad without calked shoes. The horses may be comfortably stabled, blanked and fed, but when it comes to the shoes the extent of the negligence is absoltely criminal."

"It may seem drastic, but purely from a humanitarian standpoint it would be well if our authorities made it a criminal offense to put a horse on the streets in winter without properly calked shoes. Let such an offense be handled under the heading of 'cruelty to animals,' for assuredly it is that and nothing else."

Our own practice is to tell drivers who are found by our agents on the streets with horses smooth-shod when the pavement is slippery from ice, that the horses must be properly reshod at once, and that unless they are the Society will prosecute for cruelty. We have repeatedly sent horses back to their stables with the warning not to use them again until reshod.

One, willing to think a moment, can readily understand that unless we had an agent on every street in the city we could prevent only a part of this cruelty. With a police force in Boston of more than 1600, law is being violated constantly. It is a very common thing for some indignant citizen to call up the Society and say: "A horse has just slipped and fallen in front of my office. Where are your agents? What do the public give you money for if not to look after such things?" We seldom find these complainants, however, among our contributors.—Our Dumb Animals,

Cholera a Sure Thing.

It is only a matter of time, in the opinion of English physicians who have visited the battle front in France and Belgium, when cholera will appear among the armies in western Europe and perhaps cross the channel into England. The men fighting in the east, notably the Austrians, have suffered from cholera, more or less epidemic, throughout the campaign. With the coming of the spring thaw in France and Belgium the thousands of dead lying in shallow graves will make a vast field of operations highly unsanitary, menacing the health of those whose powers of resistance have been broken down or weakened by the strain of unwholesome trench warfare. Moreover, the Germans have from time to time shifted forces from east to west and vice versa. In view of this it will be surprising if cholera does not follow these shifts. The Germans have been criticised for burning their dead, but even English physicians are now inclined to admit that this, after all, is the most humane method, in that a body once incinerated is no longer a menace to the living.

DIVORCE ACTION WAS DISMISSED

Justice Refuses to Accept Evidence Given by Hired Detectives

Oswego, Feb. 3.—Justice P. C. J. DeAngelis, presiding at the special term at court house, declined to grant a decree of divorce on the testimony of detectives and dismissed the complaint in the action of Mildred Allen vs. Stiles H. Allen. The parties live in Fulton and Mrs. Allen alleged that her husband had been intimate with other women. The plaintiff testified in her own behalf yesterday, but the bulk of the testimony was furnished by three operatives of a Syracuse agency, Jay Orth, Jay Wright, formerly of this city, and Robert J. Spencer. After their testimony had been given and witnesses sworn by the defense also, Justice DeAngelis said that the plaintiff had not borne the proper burden of proof and that he could not grant a decree on the evidence of hired detectives. The case was started Monday, but not concluded until yesterday. The troubles of the Ontario Motor Car Co. were again aired in court in the action of Charles A. Peterson vs. Frank C. Wolever, Arthur Wolever and the company to set aside certain transfers of stock on the ground of fraud. Mr. Peterson told the story of the organization of the company and said that Mr. Wolever agreed to place the building in West Second street in condition for his use as a garage and that in the event that Peterson needed it he would back him in the enterprise. The organization of the company followed, and the garage was opened in May last. Within a short time the partners disagreed and have since been engaged in litigation of various sorts. Mr. Peterson alleged that Mr. Wolever transferred stock to himself without authority. He claims to have put in his stock of automobiles and accessories into the business. F. T. Cahall represents Mr. Peterson and T. L. McKay and A. S. Wright appear for the defendants.

Justice DeAngelis will probably remain here the rest of the week, as there are a number of cases to be tried. The action of the Board of Education of Pulaski vs. First Congregational church society of Richland to establish a title is set down for tomorrow.

The court found for the plaintiff in the action of Post & Henderson Co. vs. Julia Dworniak for the foreclosure of a mechanics' lien. The defence was by M. Prouse Neal, who also had liens on the property. It was determined that the Post & Henderson lien was recorded prior to the others.

REMEMBER THE BIRDS.

The moment the ground is covered with snow the birds' claim is established. Then these friends who work so faithfully for us, destroying all sorts of grubs and bugs, and insect pests are largely deprived of their regular feeding grounds. Build some sort of platform high enough to protect it from cats and, morning by morning, scatter on it seeds, hay chaff, bread crumbs, and any waste scraps from the table. Hang up on the trees also pieces of suet, or a beef or lamb bone. If the platform isn't feasible, cover the window-sill with food, or sweep away a place on the ground and provide them food while the snow lasts. In the country, especially if the winter is long and hard, the quail and pheasants should be regularly supplied with grain. We are glad that work in many sections in this direction—Our Dumb Animals.

ARE YOU HUMANE?

No humane person allows families of kittens to be given about, to be lost or abused by the average cat-owner. No humane person takes a dog or cat for a pet, unless it may have gentle care and attention. No humane person leaves a dog or cat to forage for itself for a week or a month. No humane person sells a pet horse or gives away a dog or cat which has grown up with the family. No humane person buys birds to hang moping and sad in the care of servants or careless children. No humane person delivers a pony to the untrained care of children. No humane person fails to interfere when a horse or other animal is being abused on the street.—Oub Dumb Animals.

BACTERIOLOGIST IS NEEDED

The Official is Recommended in Mayor Fox's Annual Message to Council

The Mayor points out that more good works have been accomplished in this city during the closed year than under any former administration. He points to the completion of the Oak and Erie st. schools, the standpipe, the installation of two new marine boilers and a new pump at the water station. In addition the Mayor points to the purchase of a large Ventura water meter and many repairs and improvements made to the pumping station. The report emnuerates additional matters that came during the year under the attention of the city officials, including the filling in of the old canal bed and the work done towards securing a city market at Oneida st.

Eleven and 8-10th miles of new paving were laid, and improvements were made to a number of other sts., chief of which is Emery st.

The Mayor says the city is freer from disorderly houses, the illegal sale of liquor, and there is less drunkenness, especially on Sundays, than ever before.

This condition is due, the Mayor says, to the activity of the police department. One hundred and ten arrests more were made for public intoxication in 1914 than in the previous year. Gambling devices including slot machines are, the Mayor says, absent from the evils of the city.

The report praises the city's lighting system, including also the generosity of the Electric Co., in making free installment of fixtures and current in the East Park.

Charities Department.

The Mayor says that never before in the history of the city has there been as great demand made upon the bureau of charities as during 1914. He believes that this city's poor people have under the administration of W. L. Woodbury, received good attention. Able bodied males who may apply to the Commissioner of Charities for aid should be reported to the Superintendent of Public Works, that he may give them work as opportunities are offered.

Fulton, the Mayor says, is paying a higher rate for the care of its poor than a majority of the cities of New York.

Indebtedness.

The total banded indebtedness of the city on Jan. 1, 1915, was $536,514.42 and the assessed valuation of property was $6,107,485. During this year the total amount of bonds falling due will be $42,265.80. The Mayor says it is his plan to lower the city's bonded indebtedness as much as possible. He exploits the necessity of paving 1st st. from Rochester st. to Broadway, and the improvement of N. 6th, 7th, 4th from Division to 1st and Phillips. By improving the streets the Mayor refers to the manner in which Emery st. was treated, and that the cost of repairing the designated streets will not be as much as for Emery st.

Praise for Department.

The Department of Public Works and Supt. Rumsey come in for a lot of praise from the Mayor, for their ability in accomplishing work while deprived of financial resources.

The Mayor is proud of the work done by the Fire Department, in that total fire loss in 1914 was but $15,000 on $490,000 worth of property that became endangered.

New Apparatus.

One recommendation that will no doubt meet with general approval is the early purchase of new fire apparatus, which should include a modern auto truck, and an auto runabout to be used by the chiefs of the fire and police departments in responding to hurry calls.

Harry M. O'Brien, sealer of weights and measures, and Dr. Kennedy, meat inspector, are commended by the Mayor.

An Overpaid Official.

Mayor Fox believes that the sanitary inspector of the city is overpaid; that his salary be reduced from $1,000 to $600 a year the balance or $400 go toward the salary of a new official to be known as bacteriologist, an officer, in the estimation of Mayor Fox of as much importance as that of meat and sanitary inspectors.

Unless an additional sum of $20,000 is raised by taxation several of the city's departments will be lacking in funds for carrying on their work. This is one of the Mayor's recommendations in pointing out that the shortage of money during 1914 handicapped department work which had to be done on $90,000, the sum raised by taxation last year. The added sum of money would, the Mayor says, be used in rebuilding the bridge at True's mill, the construction and equipment of a detention hospital and in addition to city hall.

Salaries for Officials.

The Mayor would have the sum of $500 raised and expended for city advertising; and further, that a salary shall be paid to the Mayor and Board of Aldermen, the sum to be fixed prior to the election of such officials.

Mayor Fox believes that to secure new industries for this city there should be a revision of the system of taxation. He is of the opinion that a new era of prosperity is about to dawn upon Fulton, and for this reason it behooves the people to get busy. He therefore recommends that industries with "large payrolls should have the benefit of low assessments, and smaller industries in the same proportion.

The purchase of the Tilden springs is recommended, and the selection of a site for a new high school building by a joint committee comprising the Board of Education. The superintendent of schools, the Aldermen and the president of the Chamber of Commerce. Upon this decision will hang the confirmation of the selection by the voters.

"Champagne" Makes Holes.

A French officer, now in Paris, who has been through the entire campaign, says that the Germans are now using air or liquid carbonic acid gas. A bottle of this "champagne" makes a hole 50 feet deep.

Moslems Are Tired of War.

According to Swiss citizens arriving in Berne, the Moslems in general are highly discontented and ask nothing better than to see the war cease, if only because of the extremely heavy requisitions which are being made. Poor enough at any time, these people are now reduced to the extremity of misery, the Turks and Germans having commandeered all the chief necessaries, to say nothing of money. Whatever may be the result of the Turkish campaign elsewhere, it certainly has caused misery in Palestine and Syria.

SUPT. GARDNER MAKES REPORT

Says That Present Teaching Force in District is Best Since His Service Began

The Fifth Supervisory District of Oswego county comprises the towns of Hannibal, Granby, Oswego town and Volney.

Hannibal—An act passed February 28, 1789, authorized the commissioners of the Land Office to direct the surveyor general to lay out in the Military Tract townships of 100 lots of 600 acres each, enough to satisfy bounty claims of the officers and soldiers of the Revolution from the state of New York. The surveys were promptly made. The act directed that the first of these stownship begin on the eastern side of the Onondaga river, as the Oswego river was then called. These townships converged upon the river at the Falls. The southern was called Lysander and the northern was given the name of Hannibal.

The township of Hannibal included all the present county of Oswego lying west of the Oswego river except the north 33 lots of the township of Lysander. On April 20, 1818, an act was passed erecting the towns of Oswego and Granby from this territory, and giving Hannibal the boundaries it has ever since retained. These three townships comprise three-fourths of the fifth supervisory district.

The first school in the town of Hannibal was kept at Hannibal Center in 1800, the teacher being Laura Kent. From that time to the present educational matters have received special attention and today no rural community in the whole county excels this in its public schools.

The earliest record of school matters in the village of Hannibal dates back to April 13, 1813. On October 30, of that year, a meeting was held and Mr. Carter's at which Arvin Rice was made chairman it was resolved: That there be a school house built in the highway near the dwelling of Mr. Carter—that the trustees lay a tax not to exceed $100 to build a school house. The school house cost complete $60.48 and during the three months of that winter the teacher's salary amounted to $14.00. Laura Kent taught school two and one-half months in the early part of 1815 for $1.75 per week and boarded herself. This primitive school house was also used for religious meetings. To-day the village of Hannibal has one of the best high schools in the state employing nine teachers at salaries aggregating $4650 annually. The school gives courses in agriculture and domestic science.

During the year ending February 25, 1823, the town raised a total of $329.67 for school purposes. In 1914 $7,572.34 was raised by tax for the maintenance of the schools. n 1840 the teachers' wages aggregated $720.12, in 1914, $9972.

Oswego Town—The town of Oswego situated in the northwest corner of the county and lying wholly within the old Military tract was erected from Hannibal in 1818. The first school in the town was kept in a log cabin just south of the school building in what is now district No. 2. In 1813 the teacher was Susan Newell. The first regular school house was built in the town in 1816.

Oswego town at this time has 14 school districts including one Union school at Minetto. Seventeen teachers are employed in the schools. The town has the greatest valuation of any school property valued at $16,463. Much interest taken in school work in the supervisory district the figures for 1914 being $1,276,576.

Granby—The town of Granby was formed from the town of Hannibal in 1818. It is located in the southwestern part of Oswego county, wholly within the first and scond townships of the Military tract. The Oswego river forms the eastern boundary for a continous distance of 13 miles.

The first school in the town was a log structure built near the Oswego river at a point near Fulton in 1812. The school was taught by Benjamin Robinson. In 1828 a frame building was built on the high grounds west of the Oswego river. The town now has 18 school districts with school property valued at $18,409. There are 2,523 approved books in the libraries. The well equipped schools and the excellent state of repair indicate the satisfactory educational spirit which exists in the town.

Volney—The original town of Volney formed a part of Scriba's patent It was named in honor of Comte Constantin De Volney, the celebrated French author and traveler, who visited this locality very early, probably in 1808. He came from Montreal, and in a storm during the voyage lost many of his papers and came near being lost himself. He proceeded up the river to Oswego Falls and was entertained by a certain Mr. Whitney, who was so charmed with his noble guest that he proposed calling the town Volney, a suggestion unanimously approved and subquently adopted.

The principal stream of the town is the Oswego river which forms the western boundary for about ten miles. About equidistant above and below the center of Fulton, which was originally a part of the town, are what were called the "Upper and Lower Landing." These names are still heard, being respectively the head and foot of the rapids, and about one mile apart. The stretch of water between the two points was the "ortage of Oswego Falls." Around this all goods and merchandise and sometimes boats and bateaux were carried. Canoes and similar craft were frequently piloted through it, a feat preformed by Indians and immortalized by James Fennimore Cooper.

The Oswego river, especially within the limits of this town is rich in history. The trips of the Jesuit Missionaries, the discovery of the Oswego Falls in 1653 by Father Simon LeMoine, numerous expeditions of the Indians, French and English are well known to history.

School district No. 9, Volney, and district No. 17, Granby, are located very near Battle Island, famous in the French and Indian war. The English under Col. Bradstreet were attacked in force by a party of French and Indians. Bradstreet was near the head of the command, and when he reached a point near the island, the indian war whoop rang out on the eastern bank of the river followed by a volley of musketry. Several of his men fell dead. He rose to the emergency, ordered the main body of his command to land on the western shore while he took six men, Capt. Phillip Schuyler was one, and rowed to the little island above the point of attack. No sooner had he landed then he was attacked by a party of Indians, who had rushed through the water toward the island. They were beaten back three successive times by the little band. This engagement lasted about one hour, the French capturing a few prisoners.

The first school in Volney was taught at the "Lower Landing" in 1800. The first schoolhouse was built near Battle Island in 1811. In 1811 another school house was erected on Steen's location, now a part of Fulton. In 1817 a school house was built at Hubbard's Corners, now Mt. Pleasant. Another built at Volney Center in 1811. Sally Dean was an early teacher. In 1823 a school house was built at North Volney. In 1838 the town had nine whole and four joint districts. At the present time there are 14 districts in the town.

The school property is valued at $15,446, and all of the schools are properly equipped with library books and the necessary apparatus. Every teacher has had professional training and the people are deeply interested in the welfare of the children.

Closing Exercises

Closing exercises are held in all of the schools of the supervisory district. Soon after the Christmas vacation the pupils of each school organize for this event by electing from their number a school president, secretary and treasurer. In this election parlimentary rules are strictly adhered to, and the meeting is interesting and dignified. At a subsequent meeting the pupils of each school chose school colors a school motto and consider ways and means for raising funds to defray the expense of programs and ecoration. Many of the schools furnish printed programs, in others they are made by the pupils under the direction of the teacher. Invitations are sent out to the people of the district, and the school room profusely decorated for the event.

The pupil securing the highest average during the year is selected as valedictorian, and the next highest is prepares the program. Pupils who are to be promoted, and in small schools others, take part. Recitations and declamations together with drills and exercises are carefully selected. and each pupil given a thorough drill in preforming his part. The exercises are held in the evening thus making it possible for the men to attend. The visitors are met at the door by ushers, conducted to seats and given programs. People of the district outside of the school are often asked to furnish music both vocal and instrumental. At the closing exercises in district 17, Granby, last June songs were sung by a man who as a boy attended the school fifty years ago.

At the close of the speaking the promotion and reading certificates are presented to the pupils by the trustee of the district. The certificates are rolled and neatly tied with the school colors. Closing exercises have met with unusual approval from the people, and at nearly every school the building was filled to its capacity. It is the one great event of the year in each district and as a means of bringing the school and home together, it has proven of great value.

Teachers

The teaching force in the supervisory district is the best it has been during the nine years the schools have been under my direction. No elementary certificates have been issued during the past three years, and very few academic, consequently all of the teachers have had professional training or experience. Of the 70 teachers employed last year, 46 held training class certificates, 7 rural school renewable certificates, 15 first grade certificates, 6 normal certificates and one temporary license. With very few exceptions teachers are interested in their work and readily follow all suggestions made by the trustee and district superintendent.

School Entertainments

A large number of teachers arrange for an entertainment at least once during the school year. These entertainments consist of literary and musical numbers and an illustrated by the district superintendent. At the close refreshments are furnished at a small cost thus enabling the teacher to supply much needed equipment like wall pictures, books, clocks, water jars, book cases and organs. Twenty dollars is not an unusual amount received from this source. The district superintendent two of these entertainments last week and has three invitations for the week following. The people are interested in these gatherings and as a means of interesting the home in the school these entertainments are recommended.

The management of the Oswego County Fair offers liberal prizes for the best exhibits of school work, and the teachers have not been slow to take advantage of this feature. Many schools compete for prizes. The exhibit consists of geography, arithmetic, spelling, writing, drawing, paper cutting, nature study and agriculture and manual training. This year the pupils of district No. 1, Volney, were awarded $50.00 in prizes. A part of this exhibit won first prize at the State Fair, and the nature study exhibit was given first prize at Ithaca during Farmers' Week.

On November 25 a school exhibit and entertainment was held in school district No. 10, Oswego. An exhibit of school work and agricultural products was placed in the primary department. The school work was placed on the walls and the fruit and vegetables on the desks. Prizes were offered for the best work in all grades.

Nature Study and Agriculture.

This important subject is taught in all schools, and has aroused a great deal of interest. It is taught in all grades.

Teachers and pupils are very much indebted to the State Agriculture College at Ithaca for the valuable leaflet which is used in connection with this work.

School gardens have not been as successful as we would like owing to the fact that schools are closed at the time when the gardens need care. Home gardens have proven more of a success and some excellent work has been done. This year home gardens will be a feature of the school work, and agricultural contests will be conducted in all districts. Some of the boys have grown corn on quarter acre plots to compete for prizes offered by the Oswego County Fair association.

Last year fifty bird houses were built and placed on the school grounds. A prize was offered for this work which was awarded district No. 7, Granby. Many of the houses were real ornaments, neat in design and construction. Although some of the houses were completed too late for occupancy, many teachers report that the houses had tenants, wrens, martins, sparrow and blue birds.

When first introduced nature study and agriculture was criticised somewhat by a few of the patrons, but time has proven that it is one of the most important courses given by our schools.

POPULAR MECHANICS

Canadian Feldspar.

During the past four years the exports of Canadian feldspar to the United States have become prominent. The mining of feldspar was commenced in the Kingston district in 1890, when the greatest mined was 700 tons. The first trial shipment of fifty tons of feldspar in 1893 was not a success. The second shipment, 972 tons, occurred in 1896. This year the amount will reach 16,000 tons. The entire production of Canadian feldspar is from the district about twenty miles north of the city of Kingston. It is used in the large potteries at Trenton, N. J., and East Liverpool, O., and in recent years the cheaper grade has been employed in manufacturing low grade sand soap.—Commerce Reports.

Uses of Tungsten.

Tungsten is used principally as an alloy of high speed steel—that is, steel used in making tools used in metal turning lathes running at high speed—to which it imparts the property of holding temper at higher temperature than carbon steels will, according to the United States geological survey. Ductile tungsten is practically insoluble in all the common acids. Its melting point is higher than that of any other metal, its tensile strength exceeds that of iron and nickel, it is paramagnetic, it can be drawn to smaller sizes than any other metal (0.0002 inch in diameter), and its specific gravity is 70 per cent higher than that of lead.

Assembling Piston Rings Properly.

Faulty compression on a gasoline engine is due in many cases to the lining up of the piston rings—that is, all slots are located so that they are in line with the length of the piston. This forms a path for the gas to escape. Trouble of this nature can be easily avoided if care is taken when the engine is overhauled and reassembled. The slots of the rings should be staggered, and in addition the right and left slots should be alternated. Then even if the slots should happen to line up the path of the escaping gas is broken up more or less and very little compression is lost.

Where Our Nickel Comes From.

Although the United States refines more nickel than any other country, practically all the ore used comes from Ontario and New Caledonia, Australia. It is there reduced to matte, according to the United States geological survey, and then shipped to this country for further reduction to metal. The only domestic nickel produced is a small quantity obtained from blister copper as a byproduct in electrolytic refining, and even this small quantity is so mixed as to source that what part of it is of domestic origin and what part is of foreign origin cannot be determined.

Danger of Unclean Sod Pans.

Some automobile fires are caused by neglect to clean the machine carefully. In one instance what might have been a disastrous fire was caused by not keeping the sod pan clean, says Popular Mechanics. While cranking the motor a backfire ignited the oil in the sod pan, and great damage was avoided only by the quick action of the garage owners. It was apparent that the owner had not cleaned the sod pan for several months, and the accumulation was so great that it easily produced a large flame. It is well to clean out the oil dripping frequently.

Many Spring Wheels Invented.

An average of thirty-five patents on spring wheels for motorcars and trucks have been granted per month since early last year, says the Scientific American. Not in several years has the crop of inventions along this line been as numerous as at present. About one out of twenty gets a real test, and less than one out of a hundred survives the trial stage. There are at present ten spring wheel designs in commercial use, four of them being often seen in New York city. The rest are born, reared and die with unfailing regularity.

Restoring Color of White Shellac.

If kept in tin cans white shellac will often lose its color and turn a rusty brown. It can be restored in the following manner: Pour it into a wooden pail and stir with a long stick reaching to the bottom of the pail, at the same time adding dry oxalic acid, until the whiteness returns; then strain through cheesecloth into another can. White shellac, if kept in glass, stone or wooden jars, will not lose its color readily.

Alaskan Survey Finished.

The work of surveying and marking the boundary between Alaska and the Yukon territory, which was begun in 1904, has been finished. This line stretches approximately 1,000 miles over mountain ranges and torrential rivers and was one of the biggest and most difficult jobs of surveying ever undertaken.

New Paint For Ships.

Red oxide of mercury is now being incorporated in marine paints for coating ships' bottoms. The poisonous nature of the mercuric oxide prevents the growth of sea plants and other organisms which foul a ship's bottom and cause the vessel to lose speed.

Cheap Tubes Are Poor Economy.

It is false economy to purchase cheap inner tubes, for they will quickly put the purchaser out in the long run.

Extreme Suffering Relieved.

Mr. C. T. Chamberlain, New Durham, N. H., writes: "I am a farmer by occupation and have worked very hard. In 1905, I was taken with inflammation of the bladder. I suffered for a few weeks and grew worse. The best doctors gave me no permanent relief. I was so discouraged that I thought I never would get well. About this time I met a man who had been greatly benefited by Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy. I dropped my doctor's medicine and began taking it. I have taken over three bottles. I obtained relief soon after I began its use. It has also greatly helped my rheumatism with which I was troubled for years." Write Dr. David Kennedy Co., Rondout, N. Y., for a free sample. MRS. BELMONT IS AMAZED AT MISERY.

Sees Women Almost Naked and Starving Babies in Suffrage Line.

New York, Feb. 3.—"I didn't know there was so much misery in New York."

Mrs. O. H. P. Belmont rubbed her back as she said this, as if some of the misery had settled there. It was yesterday at noon, for three hours she had been packing rolls, tea, sugar, evaporated milk and fruit in paper bags, for the "Sunday packages" that were given out to every woman who applied at 13 East 41st st.

For two hours Mrs. William Jay and Mrs. Charled Child had been handing out the bags to a steady procession of women who poured through the rooms. And at the end of it Mrs. Belmont's two helpers echoed her when she said:

At 10 o'clock when the doors opened; ninety-nine women were waiting outside. By nooh nearly 300 had come, eaten their hot soup and rolls, taken their bags and departed. Twenty-five more bags were given out in the afternoon.

"Forty-first st., is the home of the bread line," Mrs. Belmont said. "On the West Side, at the Hotel Knickerbocker, is the men's bread line. Here is the woman's line."

Some one called her attention to the fact that a dozen hungry looking men had gathered outside the doors.

"They can go somewhere else," she said. "There are so many places men can go that women won't go. Women won't stand on the sidewalk in a bread line, and that is why we have arranged this so that they can come inside, eat in quet and receive their gifts where no one is looking on."

"She wants something stronger than milk" said the mother. "Give her soup. The baby is starving."

And more than a pint of rich soup went down that baby's throat. The children ate two quarts apiece. Then, with her bag of food for over Sunday, a pair of shoes and stockings for herself, some underwear and carfare, the woman went away with her brood.

"Some of the women," Mrs. Belmont said, "come with absolutely no clothes but a coat and skirt. They have newspapers tied around them under the coat. One girl who came here for soup got a job at dishwashing for $3.50 a week. The boss asked her why she didn't take off her coat. She couldn't, because there was nothing under it, and he said she couldn't work with a coat on, so she lost her job.

"We are negotiating now for four hundred shirtwaists, so we can fit out these women whose lack of clothes prevent them from getting work. We hope to have the waists Monday—good strong ones. We believe in having the best of material in everything, from soup to waists, that we give away."

Mrs. Belmont criticised strongly the Mayor's committee on non-employment and various other men's organizations formed for relief. They let the people starve while they decide what to do, she said.

"At the meeting in the Metropolitan Opera House last Tuesday for the unemployed $20,000 was gathered, and I haven't heard of a cent of it being expended for the poor. We went ahead with this soup kitchen as soon as we got $1,000 and trusted for more to come, and it has come. I think that the city should expend every cent it gets as soon as received. Starvation doesn't wait. But that is the way. The men commit errors, and the women patch them up. Some day," said Mrs. Belmont, with a look at a suffrage poster on the wall, "we shall fix politics so they can't commit errors."

NEW HIGHWAY ROUTES ADOPTED.

Supervisors Discussed Roads and Made Appropriations—New Members were Present.

Three new highway routes, roads of whose construction expense the state will bear two-thirds and the county one-third, were adopted at a special session of the Board of Supervisors yesterday afternoon in the county building. The roads, with their route, the total cost, the State's share and the county's share, are as follows:

Hastings-West Monroe-Constantia, 5.59 miles, $61,000, $41,480,, $19,520; Phoenix-Mexico, part 2, from Pennellville to Palermo, 5.1 miles, $62,000 $42,568, $20,032; Fulton-Hannibal, part 2, from the town line of Granby to Hannibal, 3.66 miles, $42,200, $28,696, $13,504.

The board made respective appropriations covering the cost to the county, a total of $53,056.

The county road map was somewhat modified, certain routes being curtailed and others added to for equalization purposes. The board then recessed for half an hour until 3.30 o'clock to await auditing of bills, and a report by a committee consisting of Supervisors Sivers, Pierce, Jackson, Riley and Pomphret. The new two supervisors, Clarence Soule of Constantia, who succeeds County Attorney W. M. Gallagher, and W. A. Harris of Mexico, who succeeds Sheriff W. M. Buck, were present at the session.—Times.

IN SURROGATE'S COURT

D. Page Morehouse, jr., was appointed guardian of Mrs. Sarah Cecelia McGill Pecoy by Surrogate Miller Monday. Mrs. Pecoy is just under 21 years old and has an interest of $2,000 in the estate of James Beatty, of New York, held in trust by the Guaranty & Trust Company of New York. She lives with her brother, Francis J. McGill, in this city.

William A. Reid and William J. Terrott were today appointed appraisers of the estate of Edward Sayer, deceased.

Letters of administration were issued on the estate of Cora A. Cole, late of Fulton, to Edward P. Cole. Value of estate $450.

Letters of probate were granted on the estate of William Scott, late of Constantia, to Rhoda L. Scott. Value $100.

The will of Mrs. Ella Bocko, deceased, was admitted to probate. A hearing had been set for yesterday afternoon for the objections to be filed by Alexander Bocko, but the hearing was not held and the will was admitted.

MT. PLEASANT.

Rev. Williams admitted a large class on probation here last Sunday.

Prayer meeting are being held on Tuesday and Thursday evenings. A cottage meeting will be held this Tuesday evening at Alford Clark's.

Mr. and Mrs. Bernard Howard are in attendance at the State Grange in Oswego this week as delegates. Haynes will also attend.

Edward Durfey is working on the ice for Wm. Sharp in Fulton.

Mrs. Arthur Lewis and son Carl and Mrs. Orlando Cole are victims of the whooping cough as well as a number of children in Rowlee school district.

Miss Velma Howard was a weekend guest of Miss Gladys Packham.

BREAK THE CRUST.

Rural mail carriers in many sections complain that farmers are neglectful of an important matter—one that may cause serious injury to the legs of horses driven by the carriers—that of breaking down the hard crust now formed on snow surrounding farmhouse mail boxes.

Carriers' horses have many miles to travel and they should be given as much assistance as possible.

When a horse is calked in deep snow, apply Hanford's Balsam of Myrrh. It will quickly relieve. —Adv.

NIFTY APRON AND CAP FOR THE GIRL WHO HELPS MOTHER.

Dainty and charming are these articles of practical use to the domestic girl. Made of percale, with red or blue dots, the apron is scalloped around the neck and bound with a color to match the dots. The cap is a mobcap, with a turned back ruffle of sheer scalloped lawn.

AN ITALIAN CHURCH.

John Lapetino, deputy sheriff, is interested in the establishment of an Italian Catholic parish in Oswego. Prominent Italians of the city have conducted a census, finding there are about 2,000 persons of Italian extraction there. A majority of these persons are communicants of the Church.

In case the church is not organized, arrangements will be made to have services for the Italian people with a priest from the Syracuse church officiating at least once a month.

The Italian people are scattered over the city and it is proposed to hold services in one church on each side of the river, probably at St. John's and St. Louis'. Many Italians are now members of these churches, although the other Catholic churches have Italian communicants also.

Do Not Try to Have a Sale Without the Help of The Fulton Evening Times

These Are the Reasons Why:

The Poster reaches at most only a few hundred people: The Evening Times is read each evening by approximately, 10,000 people.

The Poster is seen only by people when they are away from home. The Times goes into people's homes and finds them.

The Poster must be tacked up and distributed—a day or two of hard work for a man with a rig. The Times distributes the same information at every house in the city.

The Poster is not seen in bad weather, because people stay at home. That is just the time The Evening Times is read most carefully.

Under some circumstances it is advisable to have bills, but under all circumstances you should have advertising in The Evening Times. It is the advertising that does the business—every merchant will tell you so.

ALBANY LETTER DAY BY DAY

Cardozo Tells Times' Readers the Doings of Officials and Lawmakers

By FREDERIC T. CARDOZE.

Albany, Feb. 3.—Preparations for [illegible] state constitutional [illegible] decided to begin in [illegible] made here irrespective [illegible] the legislature is [illegible] number of the [illegible] The association of the bar of the city of New York has issued a preliminary report on what it has accomplished, and while the report may be amplified in a supplemental one, yet a comprehensive outline of the proposed changes which are likely to be made in the constitution can be obtained from this document.

The preliminary report indicates that a study of the subject of the election, appointment, removal, impeachment and recall of judicial officers has been made. It is recommended that judges of the courts of the state should not be chosen by election, but that they should be appointed by the governor by and with the advice and consent of the senate.

The report further recommends an appointive judiciary in the Court of Appeals and the Supreme Court. "If this system of selection by appointment is to be recommended by your committee it may be well to consider terms of office shorter than fourteen years," says the report. "The people might hesitate to authorize the executive to appoint for so long a term, a judge who in course of time might to prove to be or to have become unfit, or who, losing consciousness of the long-ago origin of his judicial power, might become self-sufficient or arrogant.

"They might, however, fell less objection were the terms to be shortened to eight years, as was the rule in this state from 1846 to 1895—or to seven years, which is now the rule in New Jersey. A life term for judicial officers is that which in the opinion of your committee is most desirable, but that proposal would almost certainly be rejected by the people, and the length of any lesser term is a matter not of principle but of expediency as to which no opinion is expressed by your committee."

On the subject of the recall and removal of judicial officers, the committee is of the opinion that "the principle of judicial recall runs counter to the instincts of the vast majority of minds trained in jurisprudence."

Concerning removal, the committee is of the opinion that the cumbersome system now existing, by virtue of Section II of Article VI of the Constitution, should be eliminated from the Constitution, leaving only the subject of procedure and hearing to be dealt with by the legislature. The proceedings might be initiated by the adoption of a motion calling upon the judges to appear and answer before a joint convention of the senate and assembly.

Other committees on intermediate Appellate tribunals, the Supreme Court, Surrogate's Court, inferior civil court and the Court of Claims, have submitted their reports. Relative to the Surrogate's court, one suggestion is made that it be abolished and that power be given to the Supreme Court to deal with matters concerning an estate. Changes in the inferior Courts to deal with matters concerning as estate. Changes in the inferior courts of New York city are also recommended.

The Phi Delta Phi club of New York has also put in a number of suggestions as to amendments to the judiciary article.

Only four delegates who attended the last Constitutional Convention are delegates to the impending one Elihu Root, Louis Marshall, Charles S. Mereness and De Lancey Nicoll.

"A PAIR OF SIXES"

Few people realize the extent to which a producing manager, of modern comedies and plays, will go, in securing suitable manuscripts for exploitation. It is a well known fact no manager will pay a higher price for a play, than will Manager Frazee, none will give it a more lavish production or cast it more carefully—everything that can be done to insure success, before it is produced, is done and money is often spent in a most lavish manner.

Being a producer of the modern school, the older managers are often amazed at the enormous outlay, and the high salaries Mr. Frazee will pay, to atttain the results he desires.

His determination to present quality, regardless of cost, is fast placing him at the head of the school of modern producers. Being one of the few who will not commercialize his art, and resort to claptrap or sensational features, makes attractions by both theater managers and the better class of actors.

His lavish expedniture, in producing "A Pair of Sixes" that has been running more than seven months in New York, and will be presented here at the Quirk Monday, Feb. 8, established a new scale of completeness and efficiency, in farcial productions.

TIGERS WIN MEDAL.

Amateur League May Not Reorganize; City League to Play Tomorrow.

The most exciting game of the season was bowled on the Onyx alleys last night with about 200 rooters looking on. The Pirates were obliged to win three games in order to get the medals, and after capturing the first two, tying the Tigers for first place, the excitement ran riot among the rooters.

The Amateur league will not be reorganized this season, the City league may reorganize after the deciding game tomorrow night.

The Onyx A. C. team is obliged to get two games in order to tie the Nondescripts, and three to win in the City league. The championship battle will be fought tomorrow night between the Nondescripts and the Onyx A. C. of the City league.

The standing for the Amateur league which closed last night was as follows:

	Won	Lost
Tigers	21	15
Pirates	20	16
Cubs	15	18
Onyx Colts	13	20

The standing in the City league follows:

	Won	Lost
Nondescripts	20	13
Onyx A. C.	19	13
Yacht Club	17	16
West Siders	10	23

The consistent bowling of Gardner and Rathburn of the Pirates in the first game helped to put life and strength into the hearts of the Pirates Rathburn bowled high single of 230, and Gardner rolled up a score of 220. The total for the first game 1014 is equal to that of the New York state league.

The score for last night's game follow:

PIRATES

Gardner	220	152	170	542
Gifford	184	169	163	516
ernett	193	149	182	524
Bowers	178	220	149	556
Rathburn	230	159	143	532
Totals	1014	849	807
Average				2670

TIGERS

Waterhouse	169	169	143	481
Mace	155	150	146	451
Hill	128	104	193	425
Durst	146	169	225	540
Pringle	191	179	211	581
Totals	789	771	918
Average				2478

It is expected that a large crowd will attend the championship game tomorrow night, and the favorites' rooters will be out in force to watch the games.

PLAINVILLE FARM SOLD.

Mrs. Hattie L. Bradt, of Baldwinsville, has sold through Whitaker & Bogardus, Inc. of this city, the very desirable farm of 100 acres 2½ miles southeast of Plainville, to Earl A. Reed of Cold Spring, N. Y.

This farm has many attractive features, the heavy loam soil produces revenue paying crops of wheat, barley, oats, tobacco and hay, carrying a good sized dairy. The buildings are exceptionally good, consisting of an 11-room furnace-heated house with bath; large cemented barn and other out-buildings for hogs, poultry and for the storing and curing of tobacco.

Mr. Reed was a former resident of this locality and has personal knowledge of the many advantages of farming in this section of Onondaga county.

VILLA'S CABINET GIVES CONFIDENCE

One Member, a Lawyer, Served Under the Martyred Madero; Fighting Has Not Ceased

By LEWIS T. MATSON.

El Paso, Tex., Feb. 4.—Gen. Francisco Villa's assumption of presidential power is being celebrated by his jubilant followers in Juarez today. Along the American border there is a general feeling of satisfaction over Villa's action in establishing a dictatorship, as he has long been regarded as the one man capable of crushing the small revolts in Mexico and establishing order throughout the Republic.

While Villa has not announced that he will accept the presidency it is expected that the convention will elect him to that position.

General Villa's message stating that he had assumed "The political authority" was received here late last night. A few hours later he telegraphed that troops loyal to the convention had defeated Carranzista forces in a three day battle in the State of Jalisco. The convention troops were commanded by General Augustin Estrada. They numbered 4,000 men. The Carranzista leader had nearly double that number, but were routed with heavy losses in killed and wounded. Estrada's forces captured a large quantity of munitions.

That Villa intends to establish a strong government is shown by his first cabinet selections. They are M. Diaz Lombardo, foreign minister and minister of justice; General Luis de la Garza Gardenas, minister of state and communications; Francisco Escudero, minister of finance and industry; Senor Lombardo, who is a lawyer, was in the cabinet of President Francisco Madero. Afterwards he was in the diplomatic service and when Villa became a power in Mexico he became one of Villa's advisers.

Senor Escudero was minister of finances in the first cabinet formed by General Carranza. After leaving the cabinet he returned to Mexico City to practice law. He became prominent in the affairs of the Liberal party and was one of a commission that tried unsuccessfully to patch up the differences between Villa and Carranza. When William Bayard Hale was sent to the border about a year ago by President Wilson, Eccudero conducted the negotiations on behalf of Carranza. Escudero was always a believer in Villa and when the latter broke with Carranza, Escudero went to northern Mexico to become an adviser of Villa.

General Cardenas was a member of the Chamber of Deputies from Chihuahua during the Madero regime. He has been attached to Villa's staff since the latter became a prominent figure in Mexico.

OBREGON REFUSES TO BE PACIFIED

By ARTHUR CONSTANTINE.

Mexico City, Feb. 4.—General Alvaro Obregon has opened a campaign against General Villa's troops north of this city with the purpose of driving the convention's forces into Northern Mexico and preventing them from reaching Tampico. It was announced today that several thousand Carranza soldiers had already arrived at San Juan del Rio, about 85 miles north of Mexico City in the State of Queretaro, and additional troops are being sent from the capital as rapidly as possible.

General Obregon will go to the front an dtake personal command in the whirlwind campaign against the Villa forces.

Only sufficient troops will be kept here to keep the hostile Zapatistas still lingering about the capital from making any raids.

FEDERAL AID SOUGHT BY TRADE BODY

Chamber of Commerce of the U. S. Would Have Government Control Shipping; At the Same Time Opposing President's Pet Measure.

Washington, Feb. 4.—The formation of a Federal shipping board and a marine development company, the company to be capitalized at $30,000,000, and to advance funds to buyers or builders of steamers and the board to supervise shipping, are advocated in the report on the committee on merchant marine submitted today to the meeting of the Chamber of Commerce of the U. S. The administration ship purchase bill is declared to be unwise and wrong in principle.

"Our committee considers that owing to the world's shipping conditions, government aid is absolutely essential to upbuild our merchant marine, and we recommend it to be freely and adequately given, says the report. "We believe the proposed government plan of purchase or construction even if operation is avoided by chartering to private persons, is wrong in principle and unwise if the result sought can be secured by private initiative supplemented by reasonable government aid."

The report also recommends that all ship lines, domestic or foreign, take out government to operate and that the law for carrying mail be amended to lower the speed of first and second class steamers and to provide adequate compensation.

The committee on maintenance of resale prices in its report declared against "price cutting" and advocated federal legislation to regulate the practice. It said:

"Your committee is convinced that legislation permitting the maintenance of resale prices, under proper restrictions on identified merchandise for voluntary purchase made and sold under competitive conditions, would be to the best interest of the producer, the distributor and of the purchasing public, or consumer."

An analysis of the new federal trade commission and a forecast of what it will accomplish in the business world was given by Joseph E. Davies, retiring commissioner of corporations.

"It holds promise of great aid to American business and of greater security for the liberties of our people," said Mr. Davies. "It is an attempt in an industrial era of great complication to translate the spirit of Faneuil Hall into terms of present day freedom. Conditions of the present and the freedom of opportunities in the long future for four children and their children demand that the highways of trade shall be kept open and fair."

VICTIM OF ADVERSITY.

Grantwood, N. J., Feb. 4.—Postmaster Carney today laid claim to the hard luck championship. His claim is based on the following adversities:

Robbed by yeggmen; sued by his wife; ordered to pay alimony; defeated for office.

WEATHER FORECAST.

German Mines Wreck Many Trenches

Paris, Feb. 4.—In a new attempt to cut their way to the coast the Germans are attacking the Allies along a 20-mile front in the region of Lens and Bethune. An official statement issued here this afternoon declares that the assault of the Kaiser's troops have been repelled by heavy firing of French artillery. The statement also makes claims for the French in the Champagne district, but admits that some of the French trenches north of Massiges have been wrecked by German mines telling of concentration of new field works. In the Voges region there have been encounters between outposts and patrols. In Alsace the French troops have made some progress northwest of Hartmannsweiler Kopf. The weather has turned warm in Alsace and thaw has begun.

French Airmen Have Crossed the Rhine

Berlin, by Amsterdam, Feb. 4.—Aerial warfare is being actively waged by German and French aviators at the southeast end of the great battlefront in the western theater. French aviators are daily making long flights over Alsace, dropping bombs upon German barracks and other military establishments. Some of the French airmen have even crossed the Rhine. No reports have been received as to the extent of damage done by them.

LATE WAR BULLETINS

Petrograd, Feb. 4.—Many German soldiers were killed by Russian aviators in an aerial bombardment of a position held by the Kaiser's troops southwest of Warsaw. Official announcement of the successful operation of the aviators was made here today.

Berlin, Feb. 4.—It was stated here today that Prince August Wilhelm, fourth son of the Kaiser, has practically recovered from an injury to the left foot sustained in an automobile accident in November and will soon be able to return to the front.

Athens, Feb. 4.—French aviators, operating from the international fleet at the west entrance to the Dardanelles, have bombarded the Turkish city of Adrianople, where they did effective execution, according to a wireless dispatch from Salonica.

GANZEL LIKED IN ROCHESTER

President Chapin Assumes Independent Attitude, Defying His Players

New York, Feb. 4.—"If my players think they can better themselves by jumping to the Federal league they can go ahead and make the jump with my full approval," said Charles Chapin, president of the Rochester club in the International league today. Chapin was at the Hotel Belmont where the American league magnates are meeting.

"I haven't signed a manager for the 1915 season and only one of my players is signed. That player is Outfielder Messenger, who was signed last year under a two year contract. The reason I haven't signed my men is because I am waiting to see just how things will develop and there is no hurry. Our season won't open until April 22.

"John Ganzel was our manager last year. He isn't under contract for this year, but when the proper time comes we may make an offer to Ganzel. If he sees fit to accept, it he will be our 1915 manager, for I consider Ganzel a mighty good man."

BOERS GIVING UP FIGHT.

Cape Town, South Africa, Feb. 4.—Boer rebels throughout South Africa are surrendering rapidly. It was announced here today that Commander Kemp and his force had yielded to the troops of the union without fighting while a dispatch from Pretoria tells of the surrender of Burgher Maritz's soldiers at Kokomas.

News Oddities

Moscow—Olga Krasilnikoff, 19, enlisted in the Russian army under a man's name. The deception was discovered when she was shot in the foot after taking part in nineteen battles in Poland. She has been awarded the fourth degree, Crown of St. George.

Metuchen, N. J.—One man was killed and another badly hurt in a freight train wreck near here today.

HE DIED TO SAVE A CHUM

They Coasted; The Girl Was Timid; She Was Assured and Reassured

New York, Feb. 4.—A little girl's heart is broken today. She is grieving for her boy chum—fourteen year old Ralph Weber—who gave up his like to protect her. No knight of olden times who fought for his lady fair showed more gallantry than did this schoolboy who died to save from injury the girl whose books he carried to school and whom he called his "best chum."

They were coasting on a Central Park hill. She was timid.

"Don't be afraid," said the young gallant. "I'll keep right behind you and look after you."

They started down the hill, the girl on her sled in front, the youth following on his. The girl lost control of her sled and rolled off. Ralph, in order to keep from running into her swerved, but the rapidity with which he was traveling forced his sled to run into a tree. His head struck a giant oak and he died instantly, with a broken neck.

Ralph's parents took the body of their son home. There the mother told of the girl's grief, but she would not give the name of her son's chum.

SIX-DAY BIKE RECORD MADE IN WEST.

Chicago, Feb. 4.—Beating the previous mark by twelve miles and ten laps, the team of Egg and Verri set a new mark for six-day bicycle races, when they completed the contest last night with 2,804 miles and eight laps to their credit. Moran and McNamara finished second, Carman and Corey, third; Drobach and Piercy fourth; Walthour and Bedell fifth; Mitten and Wiley, sixth, and Anderson seventh. The first five teams sprinted out the last hour of the race.

Horse Racing Bill Passes.

Carson City, Nev. Feb. 4.—The bill to permit horse racing, with betting under the pari mutual system, which passed the Nevada Senate, went to the House today. It probably will pass there.

GERMANS READY TO REPEL NEW ENGLISH TROOPS

Kaiser Determined to Crush British Rather Than French; Plenty of Convoys for Channel Transports

By HERBERT TEMPLE.

London, Feb. 4.—Within the past three days the British war office has sent about 4,000 fresh British troops across the Channel to meet a new offensive move which the Germans are expected to make all along the line on the West Flanders and northern France field. General Joffre, commander in chief of the allied armies, and Field Marshal Sir John French, commander of the British expeditionary forces, learned through spies and the allied aerial services that the Germans have been massing men and artillery along the northern front for about ten days.

The preparations made by Germans indicate that they are getting ready to launch the most terrific assaults yet made upon the Anglo-French lines. The severest attacks are expected near the Belgian frontier where a considerable portion of the English troops are massed. The Kaiser evidntly desires a victory over the British rather than the French for political reasons.

An armada of torpedo boat destroyers, swift cruisers and submarines guarded the British transports while crossing the Channel to protect them from German submarines which are prowling through the English Channel, the Irish sea and the North sea.

CANADIANS PROVE NETTLE IN BATTLES

By JOHN C. FOSTER.

London, Feb. 4.—Letters received from the front are unanimous in praise of the Canadian troops that have joined the British army in France. Princess Patricia's regiment has been under fire four time.

Captain Fitzgerald and Lieutenant Price were picked off by German sharpshooters in a recent engagement. The regiment has been holding an exposed position recently and fourteen of the privates have been killed and twenty wounded. Among those killed were Privates Roper, McLeod, McNish, Leach and Houston.

Captain Gray has been invalided because of a severe attack of rheumatism.

SERVICE MIXTURES ARE IN BATTLE LINES

By FRANKLIN P. MERRICK.

Paris, Feb. 4.—Attacks of the Germans to dislodge the French holding positions north of the old Roman road in the Champagne district, between Rheims and the Argonne forest, have been repulsed with severe losses. A number of German prisoners were taken, among them members of the land wehr, who had arrived at the front on Sunday from Mezieres. The hardest fighting in Champagne has been between the River Suippes and the River Tourbe in the vicinity of Perthes, Hurlus, Le Mesnil, Beausejour, Massiges and Ville sur Tourbe.

West of Rheims, along the Aisne, there have been artillery duels in which the French guns damaged a convoy carrying supplies to the advanced lines of the Germans.

Fighting of local importance is reported from West Flanders. A military officer, writing in the Army Bulletin, notes the unusual variety of the formations facing each other in the opposing armies in Belgium. In the trenches of the allies are British, French and Belgian infantry, cavalrymen who have been turned into foot soldiers, artillerymen, Indians, Turcos and marines. German marines are also fighting with the land forces on the German side, most of them being used in the artillery sections.

The French are consolidating their new positions in Upper Alsace.

FRENCH LOSE STRONG POSITION IN CHAMPAGNE

Berlin, By Wireless, Feb. 4.—The capture of the main French position north and northwest of Massigges in the Champagne region was announced in an official report of the German Staff issued here this afternoon. It states that three successive French trenches were captured by German troops yesterday along a front of more than a mile and these have been held in spite of counter attacks by the French. The report claims that in the fighting around Massigges the Germans captured seven officers and 671 soldiers, and 17 guns, together with a large amount of war material. The report denies the Russian claims of successes in the Carpathians and asserts that the Austria-Hungarian forces have made a series of gains in the mountainous district.

Cairo, Egypt, Feb. 4.—Skirmishes between Turkish and British forces are now almost of a daily occurence along the Suez canal. In a sharp conflict six soldiers were wounded, two martially.

While the main Turkish forces have not yet reached the canal, their advance guards are showing more daring and as a result the vigilance of the soldiers guarding the waterway has been redoubled.

Opinions

SUNDAY

Billy Sunday, the popular Evangelist, preaches in the language of the prize fighter and the barroom tough. The conservative ministers ventured to complain of his methods as vulgar. Billy replied by calling these ministers "grafters and stiffs, who talk bum bull con."

The supreme tragedy of the Christian religion, as told by Billy, is sure to set honest men and honest women thinking of what this brand of talk will actually accomplish.

Here is a sample:

"If we had been there, we might have seen the hill-tops and the tree-tops filled and covered with angels, and houses crowded, as Jesus hung on the cross and cried, 'I thirst,' and a man ran and dipped a sponge in wormwood and gall and vinegar, and put it on a reed and put it up to His lips. Then Jesus cried, 'My God, why hast Thou forsaken me?' Here He hung, feeling the burden of your guilt, you booze-fighter, you libertine, you dead-beat.

"'My God, hast Thou forsaken me?' He cried. And I imagine that the archangel cried, 'O, Jesus, if you want me to come and sweep the bowling, blood-thirsty mob into hell, lift your heart and look me in the face, and I will come.' But Jesus gritted His teeth and struggled on, and the archangel again cried, 'O, Jesus, if you want me to come, tear your right hand loose from the nail and wave it; I will come.' But Jesus just clinched His fist over the nails. What for? To keep you out of hell. Then tell me, why are you indifferent? And soon He cried, 'It is finished.' The Holy Spirit plucked the olive branch of peace back through the gates of heaven, from the cross, and winged his way and cried: 'Peace! Peace! has been made by His death on the cross.' That is what He had to do. That was His duty."

For the Business Men of America

We commend to all our readers the interesting article in the Special Feature Section of to-day's paper on "The Chamber of Commerce of the United States." Here is a clear and readable account of a new force in American business, an organization which, with proper support, can do a vast and far reaching work for the manufacturers and merchants of our country.

The nation has clearly reached the end of a great period of internal development. That development will go on; but we are no longer satisfied to American trade of every character sit down within our own boundaries. now looks overseas. Certain great industries have already organized for foreign commerce upon a scale and with a power typically American. The same cannot be said of the bulk of our industry. Our manufacturers have their eyes turned in new directions, but they have neither the evperience nor the proper aid to succeed quickly.

It is here, we think, that the first great need of a national chamber of commerce is to be felt. It is exactly the counterpart in the business world of the federal government. The local bodies have done and will continue to do important work. But united in the new federal body they can accomplish results which individually they could not touch.

The organization promises to be the mouthpiece of business America. It can look beyond local needs, beyond sectional needs, to the great problems of labor, finance and the development of industry, national and international. Its importance to every business man cannot be estimater too highly.—New York Tribune.

Why Not a Bundle Day?

With the advent of February the genuine brand of a northern winter begins. Winter during the present month should have its real compensation if we can be awakened by it to a sense of our obligation as a community—as friends living in one town—to those of our less fortunate brethren, to those women and children who suffer because of loss of employment, by the husband, father, son, brother or daughter. Small giving is the best giving. It is the device of the really good people. It is the successful giving, and it can be made to mean health or life itself to the shivering persons only a stone's throw from our warm firesides.

The workings of Fulton's Salvation Army corps are notable examples of what can be done by the collection and distribution of bundles of wearing apparel. The bundles of clothing received and disbursed by Ensign Fitzgerald and his soldiers are suggestive of a plan for setting aside one day, to be known as Bundle Day, when the contents of many an attic, trunk, drawer and closet could be tied into bundles and handed to the proper agents of a committee of citizens for distribution among deserving persons.

In a majority of homes there is sure to be found surfeit of left-overs, which in normal times figure as idle or waste material.

Now is the time to make these left-overs take on a new meaning. So let's have a Bundle Day in Fulton.

The Civil Service Commission

In making his appointments to the civil service commission, Governor Whitman has kept faith with his pre-election promises to the people of the state. The appointment of Messrs. Ordway, McKinstry and Rice gives assurance of the execution of the civil service law in accordance with its true spirit, and with no intent or purpose to evade.

Mr. Ordway has devoted years of his life to the subject of civil service. Mr. McKinstry served upon the civil service commission during the administration of Governor Flower and for some time thereafter, to the entire satisfaction of the people of the state. Colonel Rice is known as an independent Democrat, and was also related to the administration of Governor Flower. We congratulate the governor and the state upon the character and capability of this commission.

We especially approve of the appointment of Mr. McKinstry, of this city, and we extend to him our hearty congratulations. We are sure that the people of Watertown, and of Northern New York cordially approve of this selection. He has ever been devoted in his work to his work to the best things in public life, has tried to hold up high ideals and standards and while, in many things, we have been compelled to disagree with our brother, still we have always appreciated that his course was dictated by a high sense of public duty. We rejoice that this appointment has come to our friend and fellow townsman and we are glad to note that his appointment has received general approval throughout the state.

We again congratulate Mr. McKinstry and we congratulate Governor [illegible] the state, upon the selection of what, in our judgment, will prove to be a most excellent civil service commission.—Press, Utica.

DAVID M. PHILLIPS.

David M. Phillips of Granby, 61, died Tuesday afternoon after an illness of several years' duration. He has been a resident of the community from infancy as was his father before him. Mr. Phillips was held in high respect and his advice on all subjects was considered sound and valuable. He was a member of the M. E. church of Minetto.

He is survived by his wife, Mary A. Phillips, and five children, Mrs. E. B. Hawks of New York city, James M. Phillips of Princeton, Ill.; Fred A. Ray and Martha Phillips, all of this vicinity. Funeral will be held at the family home Friday afternoon at one o'clock. Burial at Mt. Adnah, this city.

SHOES AND CLOTHING RECEIVED AT CITY HALL.

[illegible] Young is the warden of a miscellaneous collection of shoes and clothing. He has a place set aside in City Hall for storage, and a surprisingly large number of articles of wearing apparel is received and disbursed at the hall each day, to the delight of many poor families of the city.

CHILD PROTECTION.

Forty Years of Great Advance in Care of the Unfortunate.

The first Child Welfare Society was organized in New York 40 years ago, under the title of the New York Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children. Before this date children in the hands of unnatural parents and relatives were without protection.

The story is told how one summer day in 1874 some charity workers visited a woman dying of tuberculosis in the slums of New York. She complained that she could not die in peace because of the almost constant cry of a child in an adjoining room. An investigation was made, and it was found that the cries came from a little girl, Mary Ellen by name, who was found locked up in a room denuded of all furnishings. Her head and body were covered with bruises and cuts, and in the room was found a pair of rusty shears, with which the child's mother had been in the habit of torturing her.

When an appeal was made for help to official organizations, the reply was: "We can do nothing unless the child is brought to us legally, and proof offered that an offense has been committed."

The story goes on to recount how finally the charity workers who had interested themselves in the case turned to the society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals. Accordingly, the first legal protection given to a maltreated child was accorded under the laws that protected dumb animals.

In the United States today there are about 450 societies organized for the protection of children. In other civilized countries there are at least 100 more.

Every State in the Union has its labor laws which affect the 2,000,000 working boys and girls between the ages of 10 and 15 which the National Child Labor Commission is endeavoring to make uniform throughout the Nation. There are children's courts to dispense justice to a large part of the 25,000 juvenile delinquents reported annually in this country.

There are homes for the crippled and the deaf and dumb, and there are creches where the working mother may leave her children during the day while she is outside of her home earning a livelihood.—The Churchman.

There are still left in the stove department, at the People's Hardware store, three stoves which any reasonable cash offer may tempt the proprietors to dispose of before inventory is closed, sale.—Adv.

FARMS OFFERED NEEDY BELGIANS

Vermont Corporation Will Give to Refugees Good Mountain Land

New York, Feb. 4.—A novel offer for the relief of war refugees was made here today to the Belgian Relief Committee. The Egg Mountain Orchards, a corporation owning two thousand acres of land, near Egg Mountain, Vt., will welcome Belgian farmers to cultivate its extensive fruit orchards on a liberal share basis.

There are several houses on the property, which the Belgians can use, and the settlers will be allowed to cut all the timber they need for additional buildings.

The corporations will pay wages to the Belgians at the standard rate and in addition give them twenty per cent. of the proceeds if they work on the planted orchards. If the settlers wish to cultivate the land for themselves they may do so, paying the owners 30 per cent. of the net returns.

The corporation employs an expert pomologist who will instruct the Belgians, but it is hoped that they will be men who have been employed on the land in their own country.

In addition to fruit raising the Belgians will find several streams stocked with fish and there are 20,000 rock maple trees which ought to net a profit of fifty cents a tree. There is a large deposit of slate on the land, too, which can be worked to show a profit. The company will tend to the disposal of the entire output of eggs, game, poultry, vegetables and fruit.

The Belgian committee has taken the matter under advisement.

FOR DEAN BARRY MEMORIAL.

Oswego, Feb. 4.—Chairman Thomas Burden of the Dean Barry memorial fund yesterday announced the following general committee on soliciting for the fund:

LITTLE OF PLAY FOR FRENCHMEN

Unlike U. S. Militia French Classes Get Some Idea of Real Warfare

Paris, Feb. 4.—The recruits of the 1915 and 1916 classes have been trained with a thoroughness not possible in time of peace because they could be shown actual battlefields. In order to fit the men for service in the field they have been taken in detachments to the front to observe the conditions which prevail there.

They study the trenches and are given practice in being transported from point to point as they will be in actual warfare.

The men of the 1915 and 1916 drafts in the Department of the Seine belonged mostly to 367 military societies and through these General Gillieni worked, because regular mobilization had been disorganized. He ordered a trial march, including a trip to the field of battle north of the Meaux. Here they made a study of French and German trenches and themselves dug trenches with the most modern implements.

There were 1,600 young fellows in the party I observed. They left for the Meaux by military train from Paris at 7 a. m. and returned from the east the following day. The entraining and transportation were strictly in conformity with military regulations.

Upon their arrival at Meaux the men were divided into five groups and each was guided by an officer of the General Staff under General Chapel, commander of the district, for a visit to the captured German trenches between Varreddes and Quea-Tresmes.

After a cold luncheon at Varreddes, a column was formed for a visit to the field of battle, and the men were told by the officers of the recent successes gained at this point by the French soldiers.

The return was made by way of Panchard, on the Meaux, where an encampment was made. The following morning the party left the Meaux and made intrenchments under the direction of active officers. This work done, the 1,600 young men, forming in marching columns, returned to Paris.

Perfect discipline was maintained throughout the whole march. This was made easy because of the enthusiasm of the boy soldiers. General Gallieni, who has since gone to Alsace, was present in person to inspire his men.

GAS MANAGERS HAVE BEEN IN ANNUAL MEETING

The local managers of the gas companies comprising the W. E. Moss & Company syndicate, held their annual meeting at Detroit January 25. Those attending were: D. A. Barnes, Winston-Salem, N. C.; F. A. Tippy, Hannibal, Mo.; George C. Turner, Coldwater; Homer M. Eaton, Columbus, Ind.; L. G. Adams, Fulton, N. Y.; Guy J. Kull, Monroe; C. S. Wright, Grand Haven, and Robert Wiseman, Hillsdale.

The purpose of the annual meeting is to exchange ideas for the betterment of service in communities where the plants are located. At the meetings manufacturers of gas appliances exhibit and contracts are made for the ensuing year. In purchasing in this manner the consumers of the different companies are afforded the benefit of co-operative buying. About 40 manufacturers were represented this year. W. E. Moss and B. O. Tippy, consulting engineer, were in charge on the meeting, which was considered the best held in recent years.

The benefit of the co-operative buying will be very apparent in the prices charged consumers for ranges and appliances the coming year.

PIANOS
The test of the Henry F. Miller piano by those who know. It is hard to describe the Miller tone, it is higher, it is deeper, more delicately playful than the voice of any other musical instrument.
The Miller tone has an underlying richness, simple music takes on a new charm when played on the Henry F. Miller piano, very classy and in a class by themselves.
For singing and voice work you have the real ideal piano, for orchestra and critical work it never has been excelled.
Wearing qualities never questioned. Case work refined and delicate and marvelously constructed in polished and dull finished cases.

GRANGE OPPOSES CONSTABULARY

That and Other Resolutions Indicate the Progressive of the Organization

Oswego, Feb. 4.—The State Grange will go on record against the formation of a state constabulary, it was said at the Armory yesterday, as many of the grangers are in favor of the resolution, noted for reference and offered by C. O. Warford of Orange yesterday, which is in opposition. Much interest centers around the resolutions offered and which have been referred to the committee and discussion on them in the session when they are taken up promises to be keen. The reform movement objects to the use of the State Highway Department as a political football and takes up many other matters of interest.

Influential members of the Grange, are working for the adoption of a resolution requesting Governor Whitman to use his influence towards securing from the attorney-general of the State a ruling on the commission men's bill in regard to the inclusion of live stock in the list of farm products which come under the protection of the act. The bill was drawn to include all farm products and while live stock was not specifically mentioned, that was the intent, those interested claim, and they want the attorney-general to state so in a ruling or legal opinion. The commission bill provides that all merchants selling goods on commission : for farmers must be bonded and licensed and be under State supervision to insure for the consignee an honest accounting of the products sent to the merchants for sale, and the ruling would create at Buffalo a large market for live stock under State provision, as all of the live stock there would then come under the provisions of the bill.

United States Senator-elect James W. Wadsworth made an informal talk at yesterday's session. He will remain in attendance at the convention until tonight.

Among the important resolutions introduced yesterday were resolutions favoring the repeal of the full crew law and giving the public service commission authority in the matter of train equipment; making the state law conform to the Federal law relative to the shipment of stock; to place the regulation and control over the milk business under the authority of the Department of Agriculture; opposing the proposition to abolish present school districts and adopt the township unit; asking laws for the protection of dairying; favoring woman suffrage; limiting the age of persons taking grange scholarships; recommending the organization of juvenile granges.

A delegation of four from the Woman's Political Union of Syracuse was present to co-operate with the local officers of the Oswego Suffrage Association and they did effective work along with the local committee. The Syracusans included Mrs. W. H. Blauvelt and Mrs. J. P. Shanahan and both made strong talks on the suffrage question. Miss Portia Willis of New York was busy throughout the afternoon greeting callers, explaining the suffrage cause, and handling the voiceless speeches from the window of the headquarters. Miss Willis paid her first visit to Oswego over three years ago, when busy corner open air meetings were first inaugurated throughout the State. At that time she came here from Rochester with Miss Harriet May Mills and spoke in both the downtown section and in the west park. She is an attractive speaker and an enthusiastic organizer.

One of the most active, as well as the oldest members of the grange attending the session, is Dwight Stone of Scriba. Mr. Stone is past 83, but still enjoys good health. He is not feeling the cold either, for he is wearing a fur coat that has a history. Years ago Mr. Stone raised a colt. The colt grew into a horse and became a pet. Years went by and the horse started to decline. He was placed in pasture and when he ended his days his covering was long and silky. Today that hide is made into a coat and the hoss is still doing good to its original owner.

SUPERVISORS AUDIT BILLS AND ADJOURN

At Tuesday's special session of the Supervisors appropriations for county roads were made and a number of accounts audited.

The total of the bills was $2,038.45 and the principal ones were as follows:

M. A. Stranahan, livery and expenses as sheriff $14.11; board of prisoners at county jail, $316.45; W. H. Workman, plants for county jail, $29.75; M. D. Bond, auto hire for district attorney, $10; George Gregory, auto hire for district attorney, $25; Robert Downey and Co., coal for jail, $386.30; coal for court house, $28.50; Frank Massaro, services as interpreter for district attorney, $28; Hunter Furniture Co., furniture for county building, $311.60; Hanlon and Son, sprinkling streets around county buildings, $52; Oswego Fuel Co., coal for county jail, $162.50; Benz and Son, furniture for sheriff's office, $28.50; T. M. Osborne, warden Sing Sing, shoes for prisoners at jail, $46.80; Fulton Times, printing, $28.50; Z. D. Stanton, expenses of county clerk's office, $110.92.

MAYOR FOX'S FURTHER RECOMMENDATIONS.

Yesterday's Evening Times contained a resume of Mayor Fox's annual message. These recommendations in the message were omitted:

Amend charter to tax pool, billiard rooms and all places of amusement, not now taxed.

Amend charter to permit raising of money to meet emergencies.

Offer inducements to industries desiring sites.

Put chamberlain's office under civil service, paying that official an annual salary of $1,500.

Build harbors, docks and shipping facilities along new barge canal.

Eliminate unnecessary lights on Broadway bridge.

MONTH'S RECEIPTS $61,723 IN CHAMBERLAIN'S OFFICE.

City Chamberlain George Washburn reported Wednesday that the total receipts of his office for January were $61,723.25. His payments amounted to $47,838.28.

The Water Department turned over $5,982.27 to him.

For 1915 taxes and fees and payments on back taxes he collected $32,163.52 and on the various street improvements for the past year he collected $23,463.78.

In his annual message Mayor Fox recommended that this department be put under civil service and he suggested a $1,500 salary.

At last night's meeting of the Common Council it was moved by Alderman George Gardner and passed that the City Chamberlain present a trial balance sheet of the books in his office at each monthly meeting of the council.

FULTON POLICE ARREST 26 PERSONS IN JANUARY.

Chief of Police Edward J. Dyer, has reported twenty-six arrests for January.

Twenty-three were convicted, one case was not disposed of and two were held for the Grand Jury. Fines of $93 were imposed and $45 collected.

FIRE LAST NIGHT.

The fire department answered an alarm from box 9, at 8 o'clock last night. The firemen were not needed, as Patrolman Branigan, assisted by a few patrons of Dennison's lunch room succeeded in extinguishing the flames before they arrived.

A quantity of excelsior had been left in a hallway at 186 Cayuga st. by tenants of apartments there and the material was in some way set afire.

Indiana Has the Center.

The center of the entire population of the United States was shown by the thirteenth census to be in Bloomington, Monroe County, the southern part of Indiana. In the two decades beginning with 1890 it has moved west 53 miles. The center of foreign-born population moved eastward 4.3 miles to Defiance County, Ohio.

ALBANY LETTER DAY BY DAY

Cardoze Tells Times' Readers the Doings of Officials and Lawmakers

By FREDERICK T. CARDOZE.

Albany, Feb. 4.—After a months of waiting, owners of cattle slaughtered by the State Department of Agriculture, are about to learn what they are to receive for their slaughtered stock. Hundreds of animals have been condemned and destroyed because they were found to be victims of the foot and mouth disease.

It may be necessary to appropriate over $1,000,000 to pay the State's share for the cattle are ordered seized and slaughtered by the Federal and State government, to prevent the spread of disease, the cost of settling the claims presented by the owners is to be divided.

Senator Henry M. Sage, Chairman of the Senate Finance Committee before which body all financial matters must come, is in favor of dealing liberally with cattle owners who have suffered because of afflicted stock.

"I believe that stock owners who have had their animals slaughtered should be repaid in full," said Senator Sage. "As yet no specific legislation which seeks to reimburse those who have had their cattle destroyed by the state has come to my immediate attention. I am looking for a measure of this nature any time now."

Assemblyman Alexander Macdonald, chairman of the Assembly Ways and Means Committee, is of the opinion that the best method of making an appropriation for the payment of cattle owners who have suffered because of foot and mouth disease outbreaks, is by introducing a special bill.

"I have received a petition from the supervisors of Franklin County, my home county, asking that something be done at once to repay the farmers who have lost valuable animals slaughtered by the state. I am giving the matter close attention. As I understand it, the Federal government has appropriated $2,000,000 to reimburse cattle owners; I do not know the amount is that this state must raise to meet obligations of a similar nature."

From Long Island, where there was a serious outbreak of the foot and mouth disease, to the northern extremity of the state, many cattle have been slaughtered by order of the Agricultural Department. In some instances men who had mortgaged their farms to purchase cattle, not only lost their stock, but had the mortgages on their farms foreclosed.

There being no fund on hand with which to immediately reimburse these men, they have no other alternative than to wait until an appropriation is made to pay them back for their loss. These unfortunates cannot present their claims before the Board of Claims, which has been legislated out of office, nor can they appear before the new Court of Claims, for the reason that it has not yet been organized.

State Commissioner of Agriculture Huson has not as yet made known the exact number of cattle destroyed because afflicted with the foot and mouth disease, but it is known that the number is large and that some choice stock has been slaughtered belonging both private owners and stock farms.

Commissioner Huson has had several conferences with the Chairmen of the Senate Finance and Assembly Ways and Means Committees regarding appropriations for the cattle owners.

CLAIM OF PAPER COMPANY TO BE HEARD SOON.

Albany, Feb. 4.—The $1,800,000 claim of the Battle Island Paper Co. of Fulton will be one of the first to be heard by the new State Court of Claims on its organization. This statement was made after W. P. Gannon, attorney for the trustees in bankruptcy of the company, and David F. Costello, one of the trustees, held a conference with Attorney General E. E. Woodbury and Deputy Clark.

The chief reason advanced for making the claim perferred on the calendar of the new court was that the company is in bankruptcy and the settlement of its affairs is being delayed.

BOY GETS $50,000 ESTATE.

London, Feb. 3.—A verdict establishing the legitimacy of the four-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles R. Slingsby, thus insuring the boy's right to a Yorkshire estate worth $50,000 per annum was handed down in the Probate court today. Brothers of Mr. Slingsby had alleged that the real heir to the estate was still-born in San Francisco in 1910 and that another child was substituted. Mr. Slingsby, who was formerly a lieutenant in the British navy and his wife petitioned the courts to establish the legal rights of their child.

SHIPPING BILL GETS A BOOST

Democrats Believe Success Shall Crown Efforts to Win Brother Bolters

Administration by the Administration forces to prevent a roll call to decide the Ship Purchase bill was decided upon at a conference of Administering Democrats in the Senate today. Senator Kern of Indiana, the majority leader, announced there would be no roll call today on the motion of the opposition to send the bill back to committee. Other Democrats said they would caucus against time until enough Democrats arrive to pass the bill.

Washington, Feb. 4.—Democratic leaders in the Senate made a final effort today to win over some of the seven party bolters on the shipping bill. They were not confident of success, however, and intimated that they were ready to accept the compromise amendments of Senator Norris, of Nebraska, to win his vote.

Three points stood out in the situation when the Senators gathered for the day's fight.

First—The agreement of Senator Norris to stand by his offer to support the bill if it were amended to virtually prohibit leasing and to forbid the purchase of interned ships where questions of neutrality might be raised.

Second—The readiness of the Democratic organization by amending the motion to recommit the bill today, to adopt the Norris amendments and thereby obtain the one vote they said was required to save the bill.

Third—The determination of the Republicans, in view of the Norris bargain, to keep up their filibuster against the shipping bill.

The return of Senator Lewis of Illinois is eagerly awaited by administration forces. It will give them another vote. Senator Poindexter of Washington, Progressive, has decided to support the measure.

Van Horn Tried This Afternoon

Vanceboro, Me., Feb. 4.—Werner Van Horn the German bridge wrecker was placed under arrest today in the immigration room at the station here upon a warrant issued by Justice Smith of this town. The charge is "Wilful and wanton injury an defacement of buildings and certain parts of buildings." The young German officer was tried at 3 o'clock this afternoon. Local action has changed the status of the case as it came when everybody was expecting the prisoner's release. State and Federal authorities had not given Deputy Sheriff Ross any instructions and he became so impatient that he telegraphed the Attorney General that he would free Van Horn immediately unless the company advised to the contrary. The Attorney General wired back to hold Van Horn under all circumstances. The warrent was then made based upon the damage caused to the bridge by the explosion.

VanHorne's Fate Rests With Solicitor

Washington, Feb. 4.—Canada's application for the extradition from the United States of Werner Van Horne, accused dynamiter of the international bridge at Vanceboro, Me., was reconsidered today by Cone Johnson, solicitor for the Department of State. If the application is found valid, Van Horne will be ordered taken to the United States commissioner at Vanceboro, where he will be tried. Canada will be represented by counsel and if a prima facie case is made out against Van Horne, his extradition will be ordered. Then Van Horne's next move will be to appeal direct to the State department. The charge against Van Horne is "wanton destruction of human life" through the wilful destruction of the St. Croix bridge. Van Horne's contention is that his deed was an act of war. To prove this, it was suggested by International law experts, Van Horne must show that he was acting under orders of higher authority. Such evidence, it was argued, might involve Germany.

RUSSIANS NEARING THORN'S GREAT FORT

By FRANCIS LAVELLE MURRAY.

Petrograd, Feb. 4.—Important successes for the Russians in East Prussia and northern Poland are announced in an official statement issued here today. In East Prussia the Czar's troops, despite desperate resistance by the Germans, have succeeded in crossing the Angerap river and captured the town of Skempe, only 33 miles from the great fortress of Thorn.

West of Warsaw, in the vicinity of Belimow and Goumine, the Germans are making terrific attacks on the Russian lines. In their operations there the Germans are using about 42,000 men in their furious attacks. The Germans are suffering heavy losses, but are bringing up fresh troops to replace the killed and injured.

Fighting is still going on in the Carpathians. The Germans helping the Austrians there have also been reinforced.

The official statement follows: "The Russians in East Prussia have occupied fortified positions at Gross Medunishken on the left bank of the Angerap, which our troops have succeeded in crossing after obstinate resistance. Fighting is becoming more frequent there and also more extensive.

"On the right bank of the Vistule (northern Poland) fighting is proceeding on the Lipno-Biezun front. The Russians have captured Skempe and repelled the enemy from Blino with heavy loss. We captured the commander of a German battalion, three other officers and 100 men.

"Vigorous fighting is in progress on the second Vistula front, which runs through Borzhy, Goumine, Wolaszye-Lowiczka, Tartak and Belimow (west and southwest of Warsaw). The enemy's first line here consist of more than fourteen regiments (42,000 men), together with large artillery. The heavy artillery is shelling our positions day and night.

"The fighting at Goumine is especially stubborn. The enemy's hand-to-hand attacks have been repelled, but in spite of his enormous losses he is introducing fresh forces."

"Fighting in the Carpathians is progressing. The Germans have been reinforced in this region."

The capture of Skempe shows that the Russian drive toward Thorn is meeting with success, while the crossing of the Angerap river in East Prussia brings the Czar's troops within striking distance of Insterburg, the capture of which would permit the launching of a campaign against Koenigsberg.

The Russian offensive in East Prussia has driven the Germans back more than thirty miles.

BRITISH READY TO BOMBARD OSTEND

Amsterdam, Feb. 4.—British warships have prepared for a bomabrdment of Ostend and many inhabitants are fleeing in panic to Brengee, according to a dispatch from the Dutch frontier published here today. The report also says that extreme distress prevails in East and West Flanders as a result of requisitions made for German troops. According to the dispatches which are unconfirmed the Germans have seized a big sugar refinery at Noerbeke and sent the stock of sugar to Germany.

CHILD WELFARE STATION BUSY PLACE IN JANUARY.

Three Hundred Quarts of Pure Milk Dispensed.

Batavia Feb. 4.—January was a big month at the child welfare station in the Bird building at Ellicot square. Three hundred quarts of milk were dispensed as food for infants. The nurse, Miss Olive Hart, made 139 visits to well babies and 78 visits to sick babies, a total of 226.

Twenty-two mothers were instructed and there was a total attendance at the station of 290. Fourteen visits in pre-natal cases, of which two were new ones, were made. The enrollment of infants at the station during the month was 86.

A Question of Liability.

An action for damages with the same issues as will arise in the cases growing out of the Lackawanna wreck at Granby last October is scheduled to go to trial in Watertown this year, Walter C. Mahon, a former New York Central fireman, suing the company for $50,000 for injuries sustained when a train was wrecked at Camden in 1912 by William Cassidy, who is now in the Matteawan Asylum for the Criminal Insane for the crime. Mahon was a fireman on the train and the engineer, Michael Stumpf, was killed.

A BUILDING BOOM ARRIVES IN OSWEGO.

Oswego, Feb. 4.—Twelve handsome bungalows, designed by a Buffalo architect, are to be built on the site of the old State Normal school the coming summer, if present plans of the Buffalo House Wrecking Co., who own the property, go through. It is then the purpose of the company to sell the bungalows.

The plans call for three bungalows in 7th st., three in 6th st., and six in Seneca, st. Each building is to occupy a site 33 1-4 by 66 feet. This plan leaves in the rear of all of the buildings a large court eighty feet square.

The buildings are of handsome design and can be built of wood or brick or a combination of both, though the plans upon which the builders are figuring call for frame construction.

The locations are all desirable, but some will be more so than others and the prices will be graded.

Local builders and contractors do not see much work in sight at this season and they are all anxious to give the Buffalo firm the best possible price for doing the work.

PRIZES FOR BOYS.

A number of Oswego county boys won prizes at the Farmers' Show at Canton last week. Robert Harrington, of Mexico, was given second money in the Dent corn class; A. W. Vickery, Fulton, third for a single ear in the ten-twelve row flint class and William Hubbard, of Fulton, fourth, in the sweepstakes acre contest. In the stock judging contest the banner went to Pulaski High school, Herbert James standing highest. Fred Cohen also won honors for the Mexico school.

New Motor Bill.

Aessemblyman Flaniman has introduced a bill of interest to autoists amending the highway law, in relation to the licensing of persons operating motor vehicles. The term "operator" is to mean any person operating or driving a motor vehicle. Chauffeur's licenses are changed to operators' licenses. No person is to operate a motor vehicle who is under eighteen years of age, whether accompanied by a licensed chauffeur or not.

CAMPAIGN FOR SUNDAY FUND BEING RAISED.

Syracuse, Feb. 4.—Billy Sunday, evangelist, yesterday notified S. B. Groner, secretary of the committee chosen by the Ministers Association to bring the celebrated religious worker to this city, that he would be ready to open his campaign in Syracuse November 1.

The Executive Committee will meet tomorrow noon to formulate some of the preliminary plans, including that of financing the campaign. It will require from $15,000 to $18,000 to start the campaign which will last six weeks. This money will be raised by selling bonds at $1 each, and these bonds will be cashed by one of the banks of the city. As soon as the collections begin to come in the bonds will be taken up and returned to the original purchasers.

It is expected that the tabernacle will be built late in the summer on a site selected in Taylor street near S. Salina st.

The Executive Committee is made up as follows: Rev. Dr. Charles E. Hamilton, Rev. Dr. Thomas A. Fenton, Rev. J. Herbert MacConnell, Rev. Dr. Albert C. Fulton, Rev. Dr. J. B. Knappenberger, Rev. Dr. W. W. Dawley and S. B. Groner. The General Committee will meet the election of officers in the near future. After completing his work in Philadelphia, Mr. Sunday has two more meetings before coming to Syracuse. One of these will be at Des Moines, Ia.

OVERDRAFTS PROHIBITED.

National Banks Can't Honor Checks That Would Cause an Overdraft

If in the past you were a pretty good customer at a national bank you could write a check for, $25 say, when you only had $22.50 in the bank; the bank would honor the check and then send you notice you were overdrawn $2.50 and tell you to come in and settle.

But all that is changed now, for Comptroller of the Currency John Skelton Williams has issued an order to the national banks of the country absolutely prohibiting overdrafts.

The order of the Comptroller was peremptory. "The granting by some banks of accommodations in the form of overdrafts is objectionable and can not be counteanced by this office," it said. "This practice should cease entirely. You are requested to adopt a resolution directing that no officer or employe of your bank shall pay or charge to the account of any depositor any check of such depositor when there are not sufficient funds on deposit to the credit of the drawer of the check to meet the same. Please forward a certified copy of the resolution to this office as soon as it is adopted. Let the resolution show the names of the directors present at the meeting."

HOT LINERS.

By FRANK G. MENKE.

"The minor leagues are the Belgians of baseball."—John M. Ward.

The minors are the Belgians in our National game of ball,
Their specialty is sunrise and a bullet
spattered wall.
The moguls roam in submarines to take them by surprise,
Or sail above in Zeppelins to shoot
them from the skies,
The magnates sure are war lords of the very deepest dye,
They swot the minor leaguers on the nose and in the eye.
So, while you're giving sympathy to folks across the foam,
Do not forget the minor leagues
amongst us here at home.

According to organized baseball, a white slave commission ought to investigate the Federals because "they are leading young men astray."

VIEWS EXPRESSED ON COMPULSORY EDUCATION

Buffalo, Feb. 4.—Buffalo employers, educators, labor men and persons interested in child welfare at a conference at the Hotel Statler this afternoon presented their views on the proposed compulsory continuation school law for boys and girls between the ages of 14 and 18 Dr. Arthur H. Dean, chief of the State education department's division of vocational schools, heard what was said and will present the data he gathered to Dr. JJohn H. Finley, commissioner of education of New York.

Among those who appeared to express their views, for the employers, were Herbert A. Meldrum, president of the Chamber of Commerce; William R. Heath, vice-president of the Larkin Co.; J. C. Dold, president of the Dold Packing Co.; Henry R. Ford of McCaythy Bros. and Ford; W. Grant King, president of the King Sewing Machine Co.; J. P. Higginson, treasurer of the Lackawanna Steel Co., and Henry W. May of the Pierce-Arrow plant.

PATRICK McCRISKEN.

Patrick McCrisken, one of Oswego's best known citizens, died yesterday at his home, 64 W. 3d st., from a complication of diseases after an illness of two weeks. Mr. McCrinsken had been retired from business for several years and for the past year or more had been in poor health. Two weeks ago he was taken ill and confined to his room.

Mr. McCrisken is survived by two sons, William, of this city, and Henry, of Newark, N. J., three sisters, Mary, Jennie and Eliza McCrisken, of this city, seven grandchildren and three great-grandchildren. The funeral will take place Friday.

Utica Couple Died Before Relief Came

Scranton, Pa., Feb. 4.—The police began an investigation today in the deaths of Daniel Moran, 35, and a woman whose name is believed to be Mildred Edwards, 30, of Utica, N. Y.

The couple were found dead by a charity worker who had called to inform Moran that work had been found for him. The couple came from Schenectady, N. Y., a week ago.

The two were clasped in each other's arms and the police believe they had entered into a suicide pact as the gas was turned on. A note addressed to W. G. Edwards, of Utica, N. Y., strengthens the suicide theory. It read:

"Please think kindly of two shipwrecked souls, stranded on the rocks of love. Kindly remember that for Mildred I have laid down my life and that she has laid down her life for me. Pray for us."

This is the third attack made upon Zeebrugge by British aviators since ... Germans began assembling their submarines there.

...RUSSIANS PRESSING GERMANS IN HUNGARY

By FRANCIS LAVELLE MURRAY.

Petrograd, Feb. 5.—Driving back the German and Austrian troops in the Carpathians, the Russian armies are forcing their way rapidly into Hungary. It was announced officially here today that the Czar's forces had reached the River Laborc on the south side of the mountains, taking in their advance from Dukla Pass, 2,000 prisoners and ten machine guns.

West of Warsaw the Russian troops are continuing their offensive and are gaining ground despite the heavy reinforcements and big guns that the Germans have brought up to maintain their positions. After driving back the Germans who attempted to recapture Goumine, the Russians pressed forward and took Wolaszye-Lowiczka. Hard fighting is still going on there and also about Berjimow, where the Russians have taken two lines of the German trenches. The Germans have rushed 100 batteries to the front west of Warsaw.

The campaign in East Prussia is also developing with the Russians ... the Inster river in the region of Lasdehden, northeast of Gumbinnen. ... are advancing despite the German's obstinate resistance.

The official report from the Russian general staff on operations in Hungary, Galicia, Poland and East Prussia follows:

"East Prussia—The Russian troops have made progress on banks of the Inster in the district of Ladechden.

"Poland—On the left bank of the Vistula the Russians have captured two lines of trenches held by the enemy near Birmijow. The enemy was repulsed in an attack on Goumine, and we have occupied Wolaszye-Lowiczka. The enemy is still in possession of the distillery in Wolaszye-Lowiczka, but we hold the rest of the town.

"The enemy is continuing his obstinate resistance to our attacks and is trying to break through our lines in this region over the front of seven miles. He has brought up seven divisions and 100 batteries. As a result of our successes the fighting line has been shortened a mile.

"The Russian counter attacks began on Wednesday night and have been continued night and day since that time. Desperate fighting has been raging along the entire front, but our offensive has compelled the enemy to assume the defensive.

"Galicia and Hungary—The encounters in the Carpathians are developing along the line from Dukla Pass to Wyszkow (100 miles). The Russians have advanced to the River Laboro, capturing two thousand prisoners and ten machine guns. Russian troops, who heroically repulsed bayonet attacks at Lupkow and the Beskid Passes retired to net positions, but the enemy's advance at Wyszkow Pass and Tartaroff was repulsed with heavy ...

FRANCE PRAISES ITS DUSKY WARRIORS

Paris, Feb. 5.—Brilliant work by the African troops of the French army resulted in a decided gain for the Allies to the east of the road between Arras and Lily, is reported in an official statement issued by the War Office this afternoon. After the explosion of a mine Zouaves and Turcos dashed forward and established themselves strongly where a mine had blown up a German trench. All the German soldiers in the trench were taken prisoners. The statement also claims marked success for the artillery. In the ... two counter attacks made by the French resulted in their gaining ground previously lost to the Germans and also in advancing beyond the location of their first position.

Berlin, Feb. 5—A blockade of the French Coast was decreed today.

GERMANY'S PRESS UPHOLDS RIGHT TO BLOCKADE PORTS

Berlin, by Amsterdam, Feb. 5.—While the German Admiralty anticipates protest from neutral countries against its action in proclaiming a blockade of England and its warning that ships of neutrals might be endangered maintains its rights to take the step without any violation of international law. The admiralties action is endorsed by Government newspapers today. They have said that England's alleged order to its merchant vessels to use the flags of neutral nations was the cause of the Admiralty's declaration of a blockade.

WASHINGTON STIRRED UP OVER WARNING

Washington, Feb. 5.—Legal experts of the State Department today concentrated their attention on the edict of the German Government declaring a blockade of English waters on Feb. 18 and warning neutral ships not to enter these waters on penalty of being sunk. It was said that representations may be made to Germany in behalf of American shipping to Ambassador Gerard at Berlin. Acting Secretary of State Lansing would not discuss the subject today, but it can be stated with some assurance that the United States does not intend to reliniquish its trade with Great Britain because of the declaration. The full significance of the situation including the possibilities of an American merchant ship being blown up in British waters by a German submarine is understood clearly in official circles. Some officials hold that Germany's declaration is contrary to international law.

BRITISH WARSHIPS SHELL TURKS' POSITION AT SUEZ

Cairo, Egypt, Feb. 5.—The main Turkish forces have reached the Suez canal and a general battle is developing east of the waterway. Between Turkshead and Suez the Turks have thrown up their earthworks a few miles east of the canal. These were shelled all night by the British warships and the Turks were compelled to retire. As soon as the bombardment ceased we occupied their trenches. British aviators reported that the Turks number about 45,000 men. They were well equipped and have many guns.

MRS. FALCKE WILL NOT SUE

Case Settled Out of Court; Widow Retains Her Young Son

London, Feb. 5.—Details of the Romance of William Waldorf Astor and Mrs. Alice Alexandra Falcke will be kept from the vulgar public. It was learned today that the suit brought against the expatriated American by the beautiful widow in behalf of herself and her baby has been settled out of court.

While the provisions of the agreement are kept secret, it is understood that Mrs. Falcke will receive a sum in the neighborhood of $60,000. The widow sued for $25,000. Mrs. Falcke has agreed to abstain from further proceedings against Astor and to drop the present suit. She will receive in a lump sum the money given her by the terms of the agreement and will assume the responsibility for the rearing of the child. Though it will be brought up in a manner suitable to its parentage, the mother will not associate with the name of Astor.

VILLA GETS NO REST; OBREGON MAKES HIM MOVE

El Paso, Tex., Feb. 5.—Gen. Villa's troops have occupied Queretaro and will give battle to the forces of Gen. Obregon sent north from Mexico City to aid in the defense of Tampico according to reports received at headquarters today. Gen. Villa is reported to have gone to Queretaro.

JAPANESE ARE SAFE.

San Diego, Cal., Feb. 5.—Although no advices have reached here today as to the fate of the crew of 500 on the Japanese cruiser Asama, which is on the rocks off the Southern coast of California, it is believed their position is not dangerous. The U. S. cruiser Raleigh is expected to reach the scene today.

WEATHER FORECAST.

Rain tonight and probably Saturday. Warmer tonight.

GORE BILL SAME AS FLETCHER'S

Filibusters Will Be Continued Continued By Friends of Rejected Measure

Washington, Feb. 5.—With their full strength in camp, Senator Penrose, the last absentee having returned to Washington, Republican senators were ready today for any maneuver of the Democrats in the ship purchase fight.

The Democratic leaders conceded that the measure would have to go back to committee for amendment, but they appeared to be more hopeful than yesterday of finally getting it through. Their hope laid in the Gore compromise bill. This measure, the leaders stated, would win a sufficient number of senators opposed to the present bill to insure its passage.

The Gore bill includes all of the features of the Fletcher measure but adds the provision that the shipping corporation in charge of the administration of the law shall not charter or lease ships for periods longer than twelve months and shall fix the maximum of rates and fares to be charged on the vessels so leased. The measure also provides that during the present war no ships shall be purchased "in a way which will disturb the conditions of neutrality."

Meanwhile the Democratic Senators planned to continue their filibuster against time until they have mustered enough recruits to put through their program. The Republican leaders also were prepared to go on with filibuster should the Democrats break the lines of the "allies" on the question of sending the bill back to an indefinite sleep in committee. They were confident they could talk without interruption until the present session ends on March 4.

LINER ASHORE.

San Diego, Feb. 5.—A wireless despatch from the U. S. cruiser San Diego says that the American steamer Colon struck the bar at the entrance of Cocolobamto, Mexico. The cruiser Maryland and the gunboat Annapolis have gone to the oClon's aid.

BRITAIN WARNS NEUTRAL SHIPS

United States Included in Warning; Admiralty Shows Little Alarm Over Germany's Threat

By HERBERT TEMPLE.

London, Feb. 5.—Germany is making extensive preparations for the blockade of England that has been decreed to go into effect on February 18. A dispatch received from Amsterdam today stated that several submarines had arrived at Zeebrugge, the German naval base on the Belgian coast. It is expected that these will be used to attack British transports and merchant ships.

While a wild storm of criticism of German strategy was raised in England by the bombardment of the coast towns of Hartlepool, Scarborough and Whitby, this was only a mild flurry as compared with the tempest aroused by the warning that neutral ships will be endangered if they enter the blockade zone.

The newspapers declare that this warning is directed toward the U. S. in an attempt to prevent ships of that country from bringing supplies to England.

"This is an effort that American should treat with the scorn it deserves," says one newspaper. "Now the United States knows the methods of German warfare, if there has been any doubt as to them before."

No concern was apparent at the British admiralty, however, as to Germany's declaration of a blockade.

"It is one thing to declare a blockade," said one admiralty official. "It is another thing to make it effective and enforce it. While the German submarines have acquitted themselves well in the war thus far, they cannot maintain a blockade alone. They need the help of warships and this they cannot have, as no German warships can maintain themselves in these waters."

The admiralty understands that Germany's proposed plan of campaign in declaring a blockade of English, Dutch and French waters is twofold:

1. To cut England's food supply off by sinking ships of commerce.

2. To prevent the sending of more British troops to the continent by destroying transports carrying English troops.

It is admitted that the Germans first aim may be successful for a time, but not long enough to bring any danger of famine. The second is believed to be hopeless. The transports plying between England and France have traveled through lanes of mines, submarines and warships since the war began. They have been effectively protected.

COMMONS ASKED FOR HEAVY APPROPRIATIONS

London, Feb. 5.—England is going to put at least 3,000,000 men in the field to fight the Germans.

An idea of the plans of Earl Kitchener, secretary of state for war, revealing the strength of the British forces, was given today when the new army estimates were issued in revised form by the war office.

The House of Commons will be asked to vote, not the actual sum of money requested by the war office for the equipment and maintenance of the forces, but to appropriate a sum in round figures. The actual figures will be reserved in order to prevent the information from reaching England's enemies.

A sum sufficient for 3,000,000 men in round numbers will be requested.

This is an increase over the number of men originally requested by the war office for the subjugation of Germany.

GERMANS FAIL IN CUTTING WAY TO FLANDERS COAST

By FRANKLIN P. MERRICK.

Paris, Feb. 5.—German aviators bombarded Verdun, the French stronghold on the Meuse, after a perilous trip over three of the forts defending the city on the northwest, but their machine was shot down and the airmen were made prisoners when they tried to escape. One of the Germans was wounded and the aeroplane showed marks from more than 100 bullets and shrapnel fragments. So severe was the bombardment from the French high angle guns when the German Taube approached Verdun from the direction of Varennes, that it was lost to view for a period owing to the smoke from the bursting air bombs.

It is reported from Belfort that Thann and Cernay have both been almost destroyed by fire and shells.

East of Amiens and in the neighborhood of Arras the Germans have renewed their efforts against the French and British. As was pointed out in these dispatches some time ago the Germans have undertaken to cut through the coast in a straight line from Arras in order to cut off the French, British and Belgian troops operating east of Arras in northern France and in West Flanders. Despite the fury of the German attacks and the valor of the German soldiers, the assaults so far have resulted in failure. At points where the Germans made gains they soon lost their captured ground before the terrific counter attacks of the British.

Severe artillery cannonades are reported from the Aisne and West Flanders. Contrary to their usual custom, the Germans have been cannonading at night near the North seacoast. This is regarded by French militarymen as an extravagant waste of ammunition as dispatches from St. Omer say that the night bombardments have done no damage.

Religion Astir

One of the subjects that the great war has brought under lively discussion is religion.

At first there was a cry that Christianity, the accepted religion of all except some of the European peoples engaged, would have prevented them from getting into such a wholesale quarrel, and that since it did not, it has failed. But since Christianity has been at work for nineteen centuries, in all of which war has been constantly recurring, it seems either too soon or too late to condemn it because it has not abolished war.

Now the idea is common that out of the immense upheaval that Christendom is undergoing there may come far-reaching changes in the apparatus of Christianity. If such changes do come, they will come up from the bottom, as a result of a great awakening of the spirit, after the sorrow, distress, and bereavement that will so abound in Europe, and that will send millions of people in search of consolation wherever they may find it.

There is already a marked revival of interest in the soul. Along with the great growth of efficiency in machines for destroying the bodies of men, there comes this awakening of concern about the immortal, bullet-proof part of us. Two writers as far apart as Munisterberg, the Prussian, and Maeterlinck, the Belgian, have lately written of it, both with confidence that there is a soul, and that it is worth considering.

After all, that is at the foundation of religion. A form of religion that is merely ethical, that merely qualifies men to meet the ordinary difficulties of this world, is not enough. That is no more than a philosophy. But when men realize that they have souls, and that there is a life after death for which they must make ready, then comes real religion, and it is coming very fast to this world just now.—Youth's Companion.

A Virginia Example

Virginia is showing the far-reaching results for good that follow when teachers, school boards and parents work together for the welfare of the schools and for other worthy interests of the neighborhood. Throughout the state there are seven hundred school and civic leagues that a state association, which works with the state department of education, has organized in country school districts. Each league is a neighborhood club that meets weekly or fortnightly in the schoolhouse.

The improvement of the school itself is, of course, the chief aim of each league. At their meetings the leagues discuss subjects related to the schools—good roads, public health, improved methods of farming, and so forth. They also hold spelling bees, musical entertainments, and purely social gatherings.

During the school year 1912-13, the seven hundred leagues raised $65,000, which they expended for school libraries, pictures, pianos, window shades and other improvements. One league raised $2,500 for the improvement of the roads that lead to the schoolhouse. As a result of the new interest model scholhouses now stand where a few years ago stood wholly inadequate buildings.

All this means, of course, that the communities have accomplished much more than the bare statistics tell. It means that men and women have been trained in a practical citizenship adapted to rural needs.—Youth's Companion.

The Case of Van Horn.

Abortive and feeble as was the attempt of the man Van Horn to blow up the St. Croix River bridge of the Canadian Pacific Railroad, the case in its legal aspects is one of considerable international importance. It concerns both the United States and the Dominion Governments that there shall be no repetitions of the outrage with which this German subject is charged, the belligerent Dominion overament because by what ever name the offence is called the danger to Canada's means of military [illegible] ation, the United States Government because it must perform its duty as a neutral.

The Canadian statute makes the destruction of a railroad bridge, or an attempt to destroy one, a felony that may be punishable with a long term of imprisonment; such a crime is extraditable by treaty, and in normal times there could be no doubt of the extradition of Van Horn. But the fact that Canada is at war with Germany, while the United States occupies a neutral relation to both belligerents, brings to the front the question whether the United States must not deal with the dynamiter for a violation of the neutrality laws.

Section 5286 of the Revised Statutes provides that "every person who, within the territory or jurisdiction of the United States, begins, or sets on foot, or provides or prepares the means for, any military expedition or enterprise, to be carried on from thence, against the territory or dominions" of any State with which the United States is at peace shall be deemed guilty of a "high misdemeanor" and be fined not more than $3,000 and imprisoned for not more than three years. A hearing in Van Horn's case should determine whether he planned in New York, Vanceboro or elsewhere in American territory a military enterprise against Canada. It would not matter whether he was alone concerned or conspired with others. If he carried explosives to Vanceboro, took them across the river and discharged them with intent to blow up or damage the railroad bridge on the Canadian side as an "act of war" it is not a case for extradition; it is a case for the enforcement of the neutrality laws by the United States Government. The Dominion of Canada ought not to be allowed for its own purposes to construe such an offense as an extraditable felony.

The fact that punishment by the United States for a violation of neutrality is lighter than punishment by Canada for the felony defined in its statutes has nothing to do with the case. It is the duty of the United States to compel respect for its neutrality laws, lest its territory be made a base for warlike operations on any scale against a friendly State.—Sun, New York.

WHY AN ASSET

There has been of late much expression on America's greatest asset—the immigrant. He has come upon us and has taken his place in the land of opportunity. Fulton has her share of the Old-World people who are seeking their place in the sun.

America's greatest asset we are told these are by big thinkers, and as we meet them on the streets in little groups, chattering in their own native tongue, we ponder on the value of our "asset" as we are being elbowed or crowded to the wrong side of the path, or, mayhap from the very walk.

Here they are among us—our asset. What do the immigrants mean to Fulton as an asset? To be sure the man who sells tea, or shoes, or hats or meat understands from the selling point what "asset" means. But to the man who just "lives in his house by the side of the road," do these people, living their own simple, frugal, industrious lives spell "asset?"

The more one grasps at the truth the wider it slips away? Unless the opportunity to lift, and help and learn along with our newcomers is the asset, the value soars on. Perhaps the new blood, sturdy sinews, simple mind, willing work, and true integrity, coupled with the sheer joy of freedom is our stimulus. How do we see our "Asset"?

THE BOY SCOUTS

Soon we older fellows will be hitting the trail over the Great Divide. Soon all the pony tracks for us will point one way. Soon the boys of this country will be in command, in charge, in power. And what we do with the present boy generation is of imperative importance to this country. Many people seem to think that the Boy Scouts of America are military cadets. They are nothing of the kind.

The first thing a Boy Scout learns is to be trustworthy. And this means that you can believe him. The next thing he learns is loyalty. Then he is expected to be helpful, and do one good turn every day. His next move is to be always friendly, and the next move to be always courteous. He is expected to be brave enough not to be ashamed to be polite. A Scout is no beggar, and will not take "tips" for being polite or for doing an act of kindness; but a Scout expects pay when he works for it.

His next move is to protect all harmless life—to be kind. Rule Eight requires that he be obedient to parents and to the law. His next obligation is to be cheerful, and when he can't smile he is expected to grin. He is always on the lookout to protect property, always expected to be brave and face defeat. Soap and water are one of the rules. A Boy Scout is expected to be always tolerant, and to never make fun of other people's religion or religious customs.

There are thirteen laws or rules for the Boy Scouts, and every one of them points toward a better man.

Then beside the moral teachings, there is a lot of fun in being a Boy Scout.—Silent Partner.

OSWEGO CHORAL CLUB.

On Monday evening at a joint meeting of the Chaminade and Glee club the Oswego Choral club was formed. The meeting was held in the studio of Mr. Byron D. McCloskey and the following officers were selected to serve during the coming year: President, Miss B. M. Whitney; Vice President, Frederick Crandall; Secretary, Mildred Tyler; Treasurer, Mrs. Marion Stewart.

1912 FORD CARS.

Automobile experts have always held that the 1912 Ford was the best model ever built. Whether or not this is true, the Van Wagenen Corporation has for sale a 1912 Ford in fine shap and the price is low if bought soon.—Adv.

MOTOR BOATS IN COMPETITION

Little Cruisette, Elco 45 Foot Cruiser and Big Luders Popular

New York, Feb. 4.—Just what the popular vote would be on the craft at the Motor Boat Show in Madison Square is hard to determine. Many favor the Cruisette because it is dainty, pretty and petite. Others who want a larger boat would vote for the Elco 45 foot cruiser. Still others who believe in size with plenty of room would take the Luders boat, which is a big cruising craft, and so comfortably arranged that it is almost like a houseboat, but with all the characteristics of a yacht and reasonable price.

H. R. Sutphen, head of the Elco Company of Bayonne, announced that the Cruisette, which was built by the Bayonne concern, will start May 15 on a trip to Hamilton, Bermuda. Capt. Thomas F. Day, who crossed the Atlantic in the 17 foot yawl Seabird, will sail the Cruisette and will be accompanied by the designer of the boat, Irvin Chase. It is expected the trip will be made in three days. The distance is 675 miles.

E. H. Croft, the popular sales manager of the Winton Co., made his appearance at the show yesterday and was busy talking business for the engine that last season was placed in the majority of the large yachts built in this country. The Winton engine is attractive looking, artistically designed and coated with white enamel, which gives it a very pleasing appearance. It also has shown that it is reliable and powerful, and—what is pleasing to the owner of a cruising yacht—it is absolutely silent. These engines are made in various sizes ranging from 200 horsepower down. Tiny copies of the big motors are built for use in launches. These little engines are of six cylinders each and develop 7½ horse-power. They look almost small enough to be carried as a charm on a watch chain.

One company is showing a new 25 footer called the Speedabout, which will make eighteen miles an hour. It is an open boat designed for use on either river, lake or open water and costs $1,500. The engine is in the forward part of the boat, a four cylinder Speedway, then there is a thwart seat for the helmsman and aft of that is a roomy cockpit. Another boat is the 1915 model runabout, which will make nineteen miles an hour and costs $2,000. This is larger than the Speedabout, but built on the same lines. The firm also is showing a gasolene engine of entirely new design that belongs to the noiseless and oilless class and is not of the extra heavy type. All the working parts are entirely inclosed and not a drop of oil can get out of the engine and find its way into the bilges.

CONDITIONS IN POLAND

Oswego, Feb. 4.—Father Pniak, pastor of St. Stephen's Roman Catholic church, Oswego, speaking of conditions today in Poland and her appeal for aid, said: "The Poles all over the United States have been doing all in their power to alleviate the sufferings of their countrymen. Only a short time ago the Poles of this city sent a good sized amount to the Polish relief fund in Chicago and they are going to send more. I learned today that the people in the Mohawk valley sent large amounts of clothing and money. The suffering over there must be awful, and without doubt they deserve all that can be sent to them.

WATER POWER WOULD NET WATERTOWN BIG SUM.

$675,000 a Year for the City Say Commissioners.

Yesterday's Palladium contained an article relative to the proposed water power development in Watertown.

Six thousand horsepower at Watertown, which the Board of Water Commissioners wants the city to develop and sell, would net the municipality $675,000 a year.

The statement of the commissioners follows:

To the Citizens of Watertown:

You own a water-power upon Black River, at and about the pumphouse. There can be developed upon it, all of the head between 470 and 500 feet above tide water datum, or thirty feet. Our engineers tell us that 200 horse power can be produced during the average flow of the river for each foot of fall—or 6,000 horsepower in all. One horsepower is equal to 3.4 of a kilowatt. Therefore you have 3-4 of 6,000 or 4,500 kilowatts of power.

Some part of this power must be developed to meet the present demands of the city for water purposes. The development of all of it can be made for practically the same cost that a part can be made for.

A kilowatt of power now sells in this city for nine cents per hour, for lighting purposes maximum, and much of it is used twenty-four hours during the day. However, much power is sold here for a smaller sum. Human experience indicates that the demand for power is growing at an almost incredible rate, and that its value is increasing proportionately. At ten hours a day, use, you have 45,000 kilowatt hours. At nine cents per hour its income would be $4,050 a day. The power is sold in a great many localities for less than three cents per kilowatt hour under conditions no more favorable than exist here for its production. We must assume that it is sold at that price at a profit, or it would not be sold. No one whom I have ever heard speak claims that its cost of production would be more than four cents per kilowatt hour, or $1,800.

Therefore, the present net value per day of your water power at that rate would be $2.250, and for 300 working days in the year it would amount to the net sum of $685,000.

The water board have some small appreciation of what this means to you. They have stood to prevent its being taken away from you. There are certain individuals in town who say it is not good for you to own this power; it is not good for you to develop it or have the benefit of it. Clarence E. Kinne, Virgil K. Kellogg, H. E. Harmon.

...TIES MEET ...N BALTIMORE

...ttending War Will Be ... With; Real Charity the Issue

...go, Feb. 4.—Announcement ...ade here today of the preliminary program of the forty-second National Conference of Charities and Correction which will meet in Baltimore, Md., May 12th to 19th.

...making the announcement, Secretary William T. Cross pointed out that the Baltimore meeting will probably be one of the largest and most important conferences of the kind ever held in America, owing to the fact that social and charity workers throughout the entire United States are having to face this winter, most serious questions in relation to the relief of destitution, unemployment, ...re of children, public sanitation and ...ted problems, many of which are ...nt to industrial conditions caused by the European war. These workers as well as public officials and ... private citizens who contribute money and time to the support of ...ritable and social agencies, are ...ling the necessity of getting together to discuss ways and means ... the resources of the country may be made to go as far as possible in the alleviation and prevention of suffering at home.

One of the most important discussions thus far planned will be opened by Prof. Charles R. Henderson of the University of Chicago, who will present a report on "Outdoor Relief in the United States with the Considerations of Some of the Lessons to be Drawn from European Experiences." This discussion will be in charge of the section on Public and Private Charities of which George S. Wilson of Washington, D. C., is the chairman.

"Outdoor Relief with Especial Reference to the Rural Sections of the Country" will be discussed by Amos W. Butler of Indianapolis, Ind.

Dr. Edward T. Devine, Professor of Social Economy of Columbia University, will discuss "The Policy of Granting State Subsidies to Private Charities" and Robert W. Kelso of Boston, "The Policy of Granting State Charters to Private Charities."

This section of the Conference will lay stress upon the increasing magnitude and importance of public charity work. The need for effective co-operation between public and private charities will be emphasized.

Prevention of Vice.

The known fact that large numbers of immigrant women have come to America following every recent war makes the program of the section on Social Hygiene under the leadership of Mrs. Martha P. Falconer of Darling, Pa., of unusual interest. The general topic announced by this section is "How Shall We Prevent Prostitution?" Among the speakers will be Dr. Katherine B. Davis, Commissioner of Correction of New York City, Miss Maude E. Miner, Secretary of the Probation and Protective Association of New York and C. C. Carstens, Secretary of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children of Boston.

Coupled with this section, the program of the Committee on Health, of which Dr. Richard C. Cabot of Boston is chairman, carries the discussion through the social responsibility of the hospital. Prominent speakers announced on this topic are Dr. William H. Welch of the Johns Hopkins Hospital of Baltimore, Miss Katherine Tucker of New York, Mr. Joseph Lee of Boston, Dr. Charles P. Emerson of Indianapolis and Miss Ida M. Cannon of Boston.

Under the chairmanship of Prof. Demarchus C. Brown of Indianapolis, the section on Corrections will discuss the Toronto plan and the parole law affecting prisoners sentenced to county jails. These subjects will be discussed by Warden J. T. Gilmour of the Central Prison of Toronto and Judge A. C. Backus of Milwaukee. "The Payment of Funds to Prisoners" will be presented by K. L. Schreiber of Kansas City," "The Treatment of Inebriety in a State Institution" by Dr. Erwin H. Neff, Superintendent of the Foxborough State Hospital of Massachusetts, and "Inebriety and Crime" by Dr. G. Milton Linthicum of Baltimore.

Problems relating to children will be reviewed in section meetings in charge of C. C. Carstens of Boston, those relating to Education for Social Work by Chairman Porter R. Lee of New York, and "State Care of the Insane, Feeble-Minded and Epileptics" by Chairman, Dr. Walter E. Fernald of Waverly, Mass.

Unemployment.

Under the chairmanship of Prof. Henry R. Seager of Columbia University and the vice-chairmanship of Prof. John R. Commons of the University of Wisconsin, the Conference will endeavor to determine some of the causes and remedies of unemployment as they have appeared throughout the United States during the present winter. The function of free public employment offices will also be gone into, as will the "Need and Practicability of Illness Insurance in the United States."

Mr. Fred C. Leubuscher, President of the Lower Rents Society of New York will lead a discussion on the "Shifting of Taxation to Land as a Means of Relieving Congestion and Poverty."

The Rev. W. Russell Dowie, D. D., Rector of St. Paul's church, Richmond, Va., will preach the Conference sermon.

MAY POSTPONE CONCURSUS.

Statement Made by a Prominent Catholic Priest Today.

Oswego, Feb. 4.—Due to the scarcity of priests in the diocese, it will probably be some time before the concursus is held in Syracuse to select a successor to the late Dean Barry, at St. Paul's church in this city. This statement was made by a prominent Catholic clergyman this morning. Several vacancies have occurred in the past three months, which has completely exhausted the reserve list in the diocese and on account of that fact it will be necessary to have the concursus put over for a couple of months at least.

The Rev. Father Moore, stationed temporarily at St. John's church, in this city, as an assistant to the Rev. Father McLoghlin, will probably be stationed as a permanent assistant in that parish. Father Fowler will also be retained for some time to come as assistant at St. Paul's church also.

W. D. CARR WILL ADDRESSS THE SCOUTS

William D. Carr, recently returned from Alaska, will be present at the meeting of Troop 1, Boy Scouts of America, at the next regular meeting of the Troop, Tuesday evening, Feb. 9, in the Brotherhood rooms of the First M. E. church.

Mr. Carr's talk should be of just the kind to interest a Scout. At the same meeting plans will be made for the hike on the following Saturday, the semaphore drill and the exhibition of fire building without the use of matches.

James N. Robinson, Scout Master, impresses upon members of the Troop the importance of his attendance.

WOULD PUBLISH THE PICTURE OF CANDIDATES.

If a bill introduced in the state senate by Senator Hamilton goes through the board of elections or county clerk will have to get out "a catalogue of information" for the voters each year before election. These must be mailed to the voters and the best part of it is that the catalogue must contain a picture of the candidate, three by five inches and information concerning the candidate, furnished by himself, not exceeding 500 words, must be in the catalogue opposite the picture of the candidate. The bill has been referred to the committee.

VANT—KELSEY

The marriage of Don H. Vant and Miss Edna J. Kelsey was solmenized Wednesday evening at the State st., Methodist parsonage by the Rev. Mr. Holmes. The bride was attended by Miss Ruth Dutton and the groom by his brother Frederick Vant. Miss Jessie A. Hill of 319 Cayuga st. served the bridal party and a few of the immediate relatives with an elaborate dinner. Mr. and Mrs. Vant left on an evening train for Boston. Their many friends extend best wishes and congratulations.

About Sports Generally

By FRANK G. MENKE.

New York, Feb. 5.—"Wild Bill" Donovan, who is serving time as manager for the Yankees, uttered a few kind words recently and thereby made a mistake that may cost his employers about $7,000 in regular money.

Here is the story as it comes to us:

When Ban Johnson coaxed Colonel Jake Ruppert and Captain Til Huston to buy the Yanks he made a number of promises. Included in the list was one whereby he guaranteed that Frank Navin who owns the Detroit Tigers would turn over to the Yankee owners two players for the small sum of $3,000—"a bargain price, believe me, gentlemen."

"Fine, fine," said Huston and Ruppert. "We accept."

The players involved were Messrs. Pipp and High. Mister High never was held in high esteem in Detroit and Pipp graduated from the minor leaguers at the close of the 1914 season. But when "Wild Bill" heard about getting those two players, he got very excited about it.

"Gee, that's great" said "Wild Bill." "Those boys are birds. That fellow Pipp is some slugger. I watched his work in the International league last season. Lordy, how he can hit. He's a jewel. I predict that in a year or so he will rank as one of the greatest players in the game."

Going further, "Wild Bill" said:

"That boy High is a great ball player. He's a diamond in the rough. He didn't have much of a chance to develop in Detroit, but I'll give him a chance and you'll see him develop."

"Wild Bill," as you may notice from these remarks, was quite a booster.

Well, in due course of time, "Wild Bill's" kind words about High and Pipp trickled into Detroit and got into Frank Navin's ears. Navin pondered over those words, recalled the fact that he had agreed to let these players loose for the small sum of $3,000 and promptly figured that he had been "stung."

"Gosh, I didn't know these fellows were such good ball players" Navin is said to have mused. "Let 'em go for $3,000? Nothing doing. Those boys must bring in more money."

Navin then is said to have boosted the price to $5,000. While the Yankee folks were debating about that boost, Navin boosted it another $2,500, bringing the price to $7,500. And said that the end ain't yet.

"Wild Bill" in the meantime, is tearing his ear. He figured that the deal was all closed up just like a clam and that what he said about High and Pipp would not be used against the owners by Navin.

"I could just as well said those fellows were bushers" says "Wild Bill," "but how the dickens should I have known that because I said a few kind words about them that it would cost thousands of dollars more to get them than it would have cost if I hadn't said anything. I thought the sale of these fellows had been completed."

HOT LINERS

The gent who has ambition
For to make his darling boy
Into a king of finance
Ought to hail this news with joy.

"The profits of the University of Michigan football team last season were $30,000 and from a financial standpoint, it was one of the best years the Michigan football managers ever had."

The inference is plain as day,
It stands out full of force:
Just send the lad to Michigan
To take the football course.

By Jess Willard.

Chapter 3:

"Johnson never has done anything to make me think that he is a wonderful man, and I am not a bit bluffed by his threatries. I went into the fight game with the intention of whipping Johnson and I am going to do it."

THE QUIRK TONIGHT

Amateurs will hold forth tonight in conjunction with the feature photoplay, "The Woman in Black," which is a 4-reel, K and E, offering of intense dramatic interest, and 2 others. It is this class of motion pictures that fills a long felt desire on the part of lovers of the very best in motion pictures as the daily attendance at this house proves them to be just what is wanted. Good music, comfortable seats, just right temperature and, again, the very best in pictures are provided at a price of admission within the reach of all. Tomorrow, a Selig feature, "The Story of the Blood Red Rose," with Kathlyn Williams of "Adventures of Kathlyn," in the lead. Three other reels of quality with amateur acts complete a real programme.

KILLED HIMSELF RATHER THAN BECOME A CHARGE.

New York, Feb. 5.—Because he feared he was going blind, Frederick Johnson of Port Richmond, S. I., jumped from the fifth floor of the Manhattan Eye, Ear Nose and Throat hospital today, killing himself. Johnson had been watched for the past few days, but he overpowered his guards when they tried to prevent him from taking his life.

McDONALD'S
$1.00 Waists
After Seeing the Waists We Sell at $1.00 We Doubt if Anyone Would Ever Go Elsewhere For an Inexpensive Waist

These Waists are so much superior to what you have usually been sold at one dollar, that we doubt if anyone, after seeing them, would think of going elsewhere for an inexpensive Waist. Each week we place on sale four new, distinctive styles, and each week they sell so readily that many who deferred calling after the announcement of their sale appeared, have been disappointed. This week's models are so very attractive that they won't last long, and we therefore advise an early visit on the part of anyone who desires to procure one or more of these very desirable Waists. The new models will go on sale tomorrow morning.

A widespread in- has overtaken the public in agriculture, as evidenced prominence given to the dis- in the public and agricultur- of such subjects as rural cre- the extension of agricultural ation, experiment farms and ex- ment stations, vocational instruc- co-operation and the like. More more it is becoming evident to the generally and to those who shown no special interest in the heretofore, that all prosperity dependent upon the men and wo- who lived upon our farms. The measure of prosperity is not in- dicated by our increasing population great cities, but it is the pros- of the country which makes the prosperity of all. If cities con- stantly grow and country populations decline ruin is ahead. There are various tendencies at work which seek to deprive the individual farmer of his particular rights, but he should control his own products and regulate their prices. Some go so far as to say that the Government should forbid the American farmer from exporting his products, but the determination of this matter should be left with the farmer, and the Government should not interfere. Only as the American farmer maintains his independence and demands his rights shall our Government be what I believe it is destined to be, the most successful experiment in government that the world has ever seen.

WOODMEN HAVING FUN.

The pool tournament which began Wednesday night in the Woodmen's hall is proving to be as exciting as it is laughable. The amateurs prove to be marks for the professionals, or hard luck seems to be in the wake of some of the members. Wednesday night Cole beat out Roy with a score of 50 to 26; last night Capt. Barker won against his opponent Capt. Ives by a score of 50 to 43.

The teams appointed to secure new members are captained by Hyde and Middleton. Capt. Hyde presented three applications last night for admittance of new members.

The score board will be closely watched for results.

In Local Court

The case of Frank L. Porter vs. Peter Massaro was in court today. The plaintiff is suing to recover a judgment $189.03 for goods delivered Oct. 10, 1913. It is claimed that Porter sold Massaro lime cement, etc., amounting to the above sum. Porter now sues to recover the amount with interest and costs which totals $211.48.

Attorney A. T. Jennings represents the defendant and Attorney F. S. Spangle the plaintiff. The case was adjourned until Feb. 26.

Buy Postoffice Building.

A sale was effected today whereby F. M. and L. P. Cornell of the Patriot became proprietors of the building now occupied by the post office. Whitaker and Bogardus were the agents.

NEW SCHOOL OPENS MONDAY

Miss Marguerite Rankin Chosen as Teacher; Ideal Spot for School

The open air school will be opened in the southwest corner of Falley Seminary on Monday morning. Special clothing to be worn by the children has been received. While sitting at study a bag like arrangement protects the lower portion of the body. A special hood, or cap, is also worn during school hours.

The tempature of the room will be about 50 degrees which is 20 degrees less than that which the average school room now has.

The high school boys of the manual training department, under the supervision of Mr. Lawton are busily engaged making frames for the windows. The frames will be covered with a netting that will admit air into the room. About 25 pupils from the 4th, 5th and 6th grades, with their parents permission have sent in applications for admitance into the new school. At a meeting of the committee tonight 15 of the applicants will be selected for admittance. The children apparently in greatest need of the open air will be the ones selected, for it is for the benefit of such children that the school is to be a factor in the cause of education.

A large cooking range is to be installed in a room adjoining the study room, that the children who wish may cook their own food. Open air gives appetites and warm broth, etc., is relished.

Back of the kitchen, and in the rear of the building is a room that will be fitted out for a dining room, where the children may fill their "tummies" and coax red checks.

Opening from the dining room are the two rooms which will be used as cloak rooms.

Falley Seminary seems to be the ideal place for an open air school. The rooms selected and the arrangements now undergoing completion is ideal, and the committee is to be congratulated for the efforts put forth in the behalf of the little "pale faces."

Miss Marguerite Rankin, of Richfield Springs, will have charge of the school. Miss Rankin was in charge of the open air department at the Oswego Normal school last term. She is grand daughter of Rev. Mr. Rankin, who for several years was pastor of the Presbyterian church of this city.

Miss Rankin will no doubt prove an ideal teacher; she comes highly recommended by the Oswego Normal school faculty.

There is no question but what the kiddies will both enjoy and benefit under this new system.

Many papas and mammas are especially grateful to Dr. Gladman, who has been a leading light in this new movement.

WILLIAM MONTE.

William Monte, 61, of Granby died this morning at the home of his sister, Mrs. John Livingston, of this city from a complication of diseases. Mr. Monte has been in poor health for some time, and yesterday he was to be taken to the Lee Memorial hospital but when the ambulance called at the house, it was found that Mr. Monte was too weak to be removed.

Besides his wife, he is survived by three children, Andrew, of Hannibal Center, John, of Hastings, and Mrs. Eva Brown of Michigan, also three sisters, Mrs. Sarah Wood and Marie Salisbury and Mrs. Livingston of this city. Two brothers Fred and Charles Monte also survive.

Funeral arrangements will be announced later.

It Is to Laugh.

NON-DESCRIPT THE CHAMPIONS

Big Crowd Watched Finish; Stauring Bowled Best; Dinner for the Champs

The championship game between the Non-descripts and the Onyx A. C., of the City League was watched last night by a large crowd. The Non-descripts earned the first two and the Onyx A. C. captured the third game. Hill of the Non-descripts bowled the high single of 234, Stauring bowled the best three game total of 611.

The League will entertain the Non-descripts with a supper to be held sometime within the near future. The winners also receive $10 in gold.

The game last night closed the schedule for the season. The standing of the teams follows:

	W.	L.
Non-descripts	22	14
Onyx A. C.	20	16
Yacht Club	17	16
West Sides	10	23

The score for last night's game follows:

Average				2635

The Nationl Bowling Association will hold a tournament in New York, city some time within the near future, and Manager Stauring of the Onyx Ally will organize a team to compete for the prizes.

Last year Stauring took a team to Altantic City and where he and Rear jumped into 4th place in the doubles. Their names in connection with Fulton became world wide. Two years ago Stauring and Carlin captured one of the prizes in the doubles.

CHIEF DYER SURPRISED.

Chief Dyer last night was given a pleasant surprise at his home by those members of the police force who were off duty. The occasion was the Chief's 37th birthday and he was presented a handsome suit case as a token of esteem and goodfellowship.

Supper was served and Officer Bray entertained the guests with a number of vocal selections. Prof. Stiles Allen and his selection of sentimental and ragtime music also was a decided addition to the program.

Chinaman Given Extreme Penalty

Ossining, N. Y., Feb. 5.—Walking to their deaths with the stolid indifference that is characteristic of their race, Yee Dock and Eng Hing, two Chinese gunmen, were electrocuted in Sing Sing prison this morning for the murder of Lee Kay. Kay was a nephew of Tom Lee, the aged head of the On Leong Tong. The slayers were members of the Hip Sing Tong. The murder took place February 17, 1912, and grew out of one of New York's Tong wars.

The executions passed off without a hitch. As each was being strapped in Yee made a remark. Eng Hing was understood to protest against the United States killing a Chinaman. Yee Dock called "P. K." meaning "Principal Keeper."

Each man received three shocks of varying lengths. Eighteen hundred and fifty volts at ten amperes were used. Eng Hing was the first to die. Yee Dock was declared dead at 6.23.

Wanted—Young man, about 10 to 20, to learn a trade that pays well. Write W. G. care Fulton Times. 41c.

DOMESTIC ECONOMY DEPARTMENT

A Department Conducted to Meet the Demands of the Alert Home-Makers who Number Among our Readers.

Shrove Tuesday this year falls on February 16, and with the dawn of Ash Wednesday the sombre Lenten weeks begin.

The traditional pancakes sacred to Shrove Tuesday night were supposed to strengthen those who ate them for the ordeal of confession, but in latter days the night is taken as an excuse to admit the common pancake into the festive repast. At midnight it is banished and sinks into oblivion for another year.

Pancake parties are celebrated in different fashions. One of the jolliest is to have the guests seated, at small tables, with a large table in the center, where three expert pancake cooks are at work, cooking over the solid alcohol grills, keeping the covered dishes filled with the hot cakes as fast as they are emptied. Each table is supplied with a dish of soft butter, a bowl of whipped cream and a pitcher of hot maple syrup or honey. Coffee is served with the cakes, and later in the evening, during dancing, wafers are served with the punch.

To those who prefer the more formal dinner before the dance, the French pancake with jelly, or the German pancake with lemon juice and sugar may form the dessert, but when the pancakes are served in the evening it must be alone, or the feast is not typical of the day.

Aluminum Griddle Preferable

If aluminum griddles or grills are used, they require no greasing, but a small amount of butter is added to the cake batter instead, which prevents them sticking. Thus the smoke which has always been objectionable from the greasy griddle is avoided.

The raised griddle cake made with yeast has most entirely lost favor, since modern baking powder or whipped eggs seem to have raising powers superior to the yeast and are infinitely more time-saving. The heavy cake would not be tolerated to-day, but the properly made cake is a delicious food, healthful, appetizing and nutritious.

French Pancakes

Sift one cup of flour, a teaspoon of salt and teaspoon of baking powder together, add to it a little sugar and a pint of milk, mix into a thin batter, adding a teaspoon of melted butter. Make the cake rather larger than ordinary and spread the cake with jelly, rolling it; sprinkle with powdered sugar and serve in a napkin.

One cup of flour, teaspoon of sugar, teaspoon of salt, yolks of three eggs beaten with a pint of milk; mix the batter and beat it smooth; just before cooking the cakes blend in the stiffly beaten whites of the eggs. Make the cake the size of the griddle; do not turn it. Sprinkle with powdered sugar and serve a little tureen of lemon juice with it.

Venetian Bread Cakes

Remove the crumb of a five-cent loaf, soak in warm water two minutes, then wring dry in a towel; beat two eggs with the bread, two teaspoons of brown sugar, teaspoon of salt, one and a half teaspoons of baking powder; sift one pint of flour, and, stirring the mixture, carefully add three-quarters of a pint of milk. When the batter is thoroughly smooth, if it seems too thick add a little more milk and a teaspoonful of melted butter. Cook the cakes on a well heated griddle; serve with them whipped cream, to which a little powdered sugar, a few drops of vanilla and two teaspoons of finely ground walnut meats have been added. Some people enjoy a hard sauce, such as is used with puddings, on the cakes.

MRS. DE SILVIA CHARMED THE WOMEN'S C. T. U.

Earnest Workers for Temperance Endorse the Cause of Suffrage; 126 at the Meeting

The women forming the W. C. T. U. met yesterday at the Baptist church and discussed matters relative to their cause, including woman's suffrage.

Among the honored guests were, Mrs. Dr. Silvia, president of Onondaga county W. C. T. U.; Mrs. A. D. Clark, president of the local branch of the Women'c Suffrage Association; Mrs. William Sylvester, president of the Fulton W. C. T. U., and Mrs. Harvey MacMurphy, treasurer of the Suffrage association.

The first speaker to be introduced to the 200 women in the audience was Mrs. Gardiner, who organized a branch of the W. T. C. U. in this city 25 years ago.

The speaker, after going over the wonderful changes that have been made in the W. C. T. U. during the past quarter of a century asked: "Are you wearing the white ribbon on the lapel of your coat? Don't wear it, where it cannot be seen, but in plain sight that every one may know your colors."

A motion was made, and seconded, that at least two dollars be donated to the Francis Holmes relief fund.

Mrs. Gardiner said:

"The mothers are the most loving creatures on earth today; there is no love like the mother love, and it gives me great pleasure to be here this afternoon with the children of the W. C. T. U. that I mothered 25 years ago.

"The old church in which that first meeting was held has long since passed away, and this beautiful new one has this beautiful new has taken its place. But it was on this corner that the Fulton branch of the W. C. T. U. first saw the light of day, and as each year succeeded its predecessor the breath of life was breathed into its system that has caused it to grow and expand until now we stand upon a foundation that for strength and endurance cannot be surpassed in any other city of its size in the state of New York.

"Just as the world has advanced in its scientific mastery over electricity, machinery, methods of inventions, so has the temperance question improved itself. I am working and praying for the cause of temperance; I can see it in the sky and that sky is cloudless of all discouragements.

"Today we can hardly see a person that is not ready to listen to temperance if we go about it in the right way. It is not so long ago that the newspapers could hardly be induced to print anything about temperance, but that day is now past. The many different periodicals published throughout the country are glad to get facts and often send reporters to our meetings that they may get the news at first hand. We learn from this that our fight is right when we can get the newspapers to favor us, and quote our speaches.

Pray for the Cause.

"The W. C. T. U., in connection with the Woman's Suffrage association, is to hold a convention in Fulton September 28, and an increase of 157 new members between now and then will increase our percentage 900.

"You will meet people every day at the market, shop and store who are not in sympathy with our movement and temperance, although they do respect and honor the women belonging to the W. C. T. U.

"Immigrants are arriving in this country every day who have but little clothing. They have thrown it over board from the ship upon which they came, or they have had but little when they started, and the secretary of the W. C. T. U. in New York is in need of articles that will clothe those persons. If you have any articles about the house that you no longer need, I am sure the secretary will be grateful to accept and receive all shipments sent to her.

"The financial situation is also lacking, and as the warm weather will be here soon, and many of us will be scattered about at different resorts, be sure and get your dues in early.

"Say a little prayer every day for our cause. Take a few minutes to do this and you will be strengthened both in body and soul to do wonderful things for the cause of temperance."

The speaker then told a story of a boy who went west, and was tempted to drink, gamble and do worse things, but when he remembered that his mother back home wore a white ribbon, and a W. C. T. U. pin, he drove the temptation from him, and led a life of honesty and sobriety.

Continuing the speaker said: "We want our children to have a good time; let them love a little fun if they want to, let them play a little, but above all other things, let us teach them to have a temperance home."

The speaker mentioned the Grange meeting just held in Oswego attended by 1,200, and the speakers, both men and women, spoke of temperance and Suffrage.

Mrs. Gardiner was applauded at the close of her address, and after a duet by the Misses Lillus Wall, and Mildred Hart, the speaker of the day, Mrs. DeSilvia was introduced by the president, Mrs. Sylvester.

Mrs. DeSilvia put her audience in good humor from the very first.

The speaker said: "I have so much to say to you, and such a short time to say it in, that I hardly know where to begin, nor where I am to end. But as I have a clock in front of me that I can watch, I won't take up any more time than what is allowed me, I assure you."

The speaker at this point looked at the reporter in the gallery and mentioned that some time ago while addressing a meeting in Utica, she said in a part of her speech: "That she had to be a Prohibitionist in order to be a Christian. The papers printed the address the following day and stated like this: 'That I had to be a Christian in order to be a Prohibitionist."

Mrs. DeSilvia warned the Times' reporter against errors of the kind.

Suffrage and Temperance.

"Woman's Suffrage has grown in all parts of the world. Nowadays you can't talk about prohibition unless you talk about suffrage, for the two go together and it is impossible to separate them. When you go down the street you will meet the corrupt politician and the brewer, the saloonkeeper and the white slaver, but if you are shielded with the W. C. T. U. pin, and the suffragette badge the wrong doer will be seen to take to his heels, for he will be too scared to face the wearer of these two insignias, when they are worn together.

"The women who gain the right to vote must vote against the liquor traffic if we are to succeed in driving it from the State. The saloonkeeper will say, 'put your foot on woman's suffrage or it will be a hinderance to our trade;' certainly we will be a hinderance to the saloonkeepers' traffic and all other things that lead to vice and crime. That is what we are organized for, and if we live up to the by-laws we can't do else than prove a hinderance to evil."

The speaker then told a story of a scene that came under her observation last year while attending the New York State Fair at Syracuse. An old lady, who had a tent close to the entrance, sat in front of it surrounded by a group of grown up boys, and she was busily engaged preaching a temperance sermon to them. Across the street stood two large men trying to listen to her talk, but closely watching her. As they could not hear from where they stood, they moved closer, and closer until they were as close to the old lady as were the children. The men proved to be brewers and when they discovered her line of talk they said: 'Why here madam; you don't want to talk like this; don't you know that you are hurting our business?' The old lady turned to the men and said: 'Your boys some day will be fathers and for every one that I can convert from the drink habit now that seed will bear fruit in years to come. Mothers do not want to raise children for salons to get and now is the time to preach against the stuff you manufacture.'"

"Well what are you going to do about it?" asked the brewers.

"Well, some day we are going to gain the right to vote in this state, and when we do, we will drive such men as you out of business."

Wipe Out Every Form

Mrs. De Silvia: "The interest of our country is at stake and we don't want intemperance in it.

"Now, why have the liquor dealers assumed this attitude toward us? Because we are against its every form, from the manufacture to the consumption.

"Anything I say here, or in any other city, will never frighten the brewers as they have been scared too often,"

The speaker asked whether in elect-

PLOTTED TO BLOW UP LINER; GERMAN ARRESTED

Paris, Feb. 6.—A plot to blow up the French liner Champagne in mid-Atlantic with dynamite bombs was frustrated by a wireless warning to the Captain of the ship, according to a dispatch in the Paris Journal today. A German passenger was arrested and five high power dynamite bombs were concealed in his baggage. The Champagne was bound from Vera Cruz, Mex., to a Spanish port. The Journal says:

"An attempt to blow up the French liner Champagne liner in mid-ocean was frustrated. The captain of the Champagne, which was bound from Vera Cruz to Corgne, Spain, was notified by wireless of the conspiracy. He arrested a German passenger in whose luggage five dynamite bombs were discovered."

According to the information the German was prepared to sacrifice his own life to destroy the merchant ship.

La Champagne sailed from Havana for Corunna, Spain on January 18, by way of Vera Cruz. She carried both passengers and freight.

VON BERNSDORFF RIDICULES TALK OF GERMAN BLOCKADE

Washington, Feb. 6.—Count Von Bernstoff, the German Ambassador, today in a statement says it is absurd to describe the German proclamation as a paper blockade. "Germany does not intend to seize or molest American ships laden with food stuff for the civilian population of any country," the Ambassador says, "and she does not intend to close the English channel to neutral commerce.

LATE WAR BULLETINS

By STEVEN BURNETT.

Vienna, via Berlin, Feb. 6.—By wireless—The Austrian war office announced today that the Russian attacks against the Austro-German army in the Carpathians have broken down with heavy losses. The following statement was given out:

"In Poland and Western Galicia the situation is unchanged. The renewed Russian attacks in the Carpathians have broken down with heavy losses to the enemy. Our attacks in the forest regions continue. We have taken 4,000 more prisoners."

London, Feb. 6.—Assurances for the safety of the Suez canal were received today from Cairo. The dispatches stated that the Turks have been defeated by the British forces in Egypt, and that among the prisoners taken by the English were some German officers attached to the Turkish army. The prisoners told their captives that they had underestimated the strength of th British forces defending the canal.

M. Augagneur, French minister of marine, has made an offer to the British admiralty, to land marines from French warships in the Mediterranean to help the Suez canal if their services are needed.

Petrograd, Feb. 6.—Three German companies of infantrymen were annihilated by Russian artillery fighting on the Skeirwork-Boliw front on the Rawka railway after they had crossed on a barrel bridge to attack the Russian line. This information was contained in an official statement, issued by the War Office today. The statement says the Germans have massed some of their heaviest guns on the Rawka front with which they have been bombarding the Russian lines.

Liverpool, Feb. 6.—The Cunard lined Lusitania, which was reported in the United States to have been sunk by a German submarine, arrived here today and landed her passengers. She was upon the Atlantic when the Germans launched their submarine warfare against British mercantile shipping and fears were felt for her safety, but these were all dispelled by her safe arrival. It is reported that a British cruiser met the Lusitania about 200 miles off the Irish coast and escorted here through the danger zone.

Paris, Feb. 6.—The official report issued this afternoon by the French War Office was very brief and mentioned only artillery duels. French artillery set fire to a German wagon train east of the Argonne district and other French guns destroyed a German observation baloon north of Somme. There were no infantry engagements.

Amsterdam, Feb. 6.—Hostile airmen flew over the German city of Cologne and dropped bombs, then escaped in the direction of Duesseldorf, according to a dispatch from Berlin. The raid was made on Wednesday while a great number of German reinforcements were passing through Cologne.

The Lizard, Eng., Feb. 6.—R radiogram from the steamship Poland states that the British steamer Brandon foundered off Penzance, Eng., last night. One member of the crew was picked up. It is believed that the vessel was either torpedoed by a German submarine or else struck a mine.

OFFICIALS ARE IGNORANT.

Washington, Feb. 6.—The Navy department and all other Government sources today were without advices to confirm the rumor that the liner Champagne had been sunk by Germans.

DR. CARNEY DEAD.

Baltimore, Feb. 6.—Dr. Thomas Carney, one of the leading physicians of Schenectady, and a major in the N. Y. N. G., died in the John Hokpins hospital this morning, following a sudden attack of illness at the Hotel Emerson. Gastritis which took the form of violent hemmorhages caused the death of the distinguished doctor. Edgar Smith, proprietor of the Navarre Hotel, of New York tried to save the doctor's life by permitting a blood transfusion, but the effort was of no avail.

CUNARDER IN DISTRESS.

London, Feb. 6.—The Cunard line steamship Phratiab is drifting helpless in the North sea with a broken propeller. News of the steamer's mishap was received by wireless today. She carries a $5,000,000 cargo.

WEATHER FORECAST.

Snow flurries tonight and Sunday. Much colder with strong west winds.

More Than 250,000 Picked Men Fighting on Short Battle Line That Sways as the Dead Fill Frozen Trenches

By FRANCIS LAVELLE MURRAY.

Petrograd, Feb. 6.—More than a quarter of million picked troops and more than 1,000 heavy guns are engaged in a terrific battle in the region of the Bzura and Rawka rivers in Poland and upon the result of this conflict hangs the mastery of Western Poland. For a week the heavy artillery has been shaking the blood-soaked earth with its thunder and the attacks of the Germans and the counter attacks of the Russians have left the battlefield carpeted with corpses.

General Von Mackensen, one of the most brilliant commanders in the German army, was selected by Field Marshal von Hindenburg to smash the Russian center and open up the way for the drive the Germans are trying to make against Warsaw. With 100,000 picked infantrymen and 600 big guns under his immediate command Gen. Mackensen has locked with the Russians in a death grip, the ferocity of which has not previously been known in the present war.

But in the present conflict, which is raging over a front not more than ten miles long, the Russians have to reckon with the reckless valor of the Germans. The first line German troops have been dubbed the "death brigade," and each man has been warned that death must be expected. In spite of the blasts from Russian rifles, machine guns and heavy artillery the Germans have attacked time and again with a bravery which compels the admiration of their foes. Trenches have literally been filled with corpses until they offer no further protection and the Germans and Russians battled with bayonets in hand-to-hand fighting over the bodies of the dead. Over the frozen soil of the battlefield, now plowed with shrapnel and sprinkled with corpses, the tide of battle has swung backward and forward, but official dispatches from the front now declare that the German offensive has been checked. Inspired by the presence of Czar Nicholas, who has gone to the Polish front, the Russians are countering all along the line.

The losses of the German legions are enormous. Within the past five days, it is estimated, 50,000 Germans have been killed, wounded or taken prisoner. The Russian losses were necessarily heavy, but no figure were given out. Again the superiority of numbers has come to the aid of the Russians. Tens of thousands of fresh Russian reserves have been hurled against the Germans in the past 48 hours to break down the resistance of the Teuton troops whose endurance has been taxed to the utmost by the fighting of the past week.

In East Prussia the pressure of the Russians continues unabated. In Galicia the artillery duers are reported and in the Carpathians the Russian and Austro and German forces are again at grips battling for strategic ground. Near Oujok (in the northern Carpathians) the Austrian defensive broke down under the drives of the Russians, who took nearly 5,000 prisoners and some war materials. The Austrians retreated after blowing up their trenches. Southeast of Oujok the Austrian lines still hold, thanks to the the advantage of their artillery.

The artillery dueling in the vicinity of the Borjimow and Goumine, in Poland, is spoken of as the most terrific of the war.

Attempts of the Austrians to launch an offensive movement on the Nida, in order to prevent any flanking movement against the German center has failed. However, an Austrian attempt in that region is looked for immediately.

GERMANS MOVING TROOPS TO FLANDERS

By FRANKLIN P. MERRICK.

Paris, Feb. 6.—After a comparative lull, caused by heavy snowstorms, hostilities in Alsace-Lorraine are increasing in violence. As a result of a German flanking movement south of Altkirche, fighting is in progress upon the Swiss frontier and it is reported that a number of projectiles from both French and German artillery have fallen upon Swiss soil, although no damage was done to human life or property. The French line now extends in a great semi-circle in front of Muelhausen. The Germans attempted to encircle the southern end of the French line, but were beaten off.

German airmen are very active along the German left. Following a bombardment of St. Die, 45 miles southeast of Nancy, a German aviator sailed over the city and dropped bombs which are reported to have killed and wounded half a dozen noncombatants.

On the northern end of the battle front the Germans are still pressing against the French and British lines between Lille and Arras. Cannonades and infantry attacks have been taking place in quick succession.

Despite the furious German resistance, French troops have made another gain the Champagne district, between Rheims and the Argonne forest.

Along the Aisne river the accuracy of the French cannoners has played havoc in the German trenches. The Germans are moving some other troops from the Dutch frontier to reinforce their line in West Flanders.

Rotterdam, Feb. 6.—An airship believed to be a small type of Zeppelin passed over Kempe, Holland, on Friday bound for the west.

Opinions

Airships Not War Vessels.

Secretary of State Bryan yesterday made public a correspondence between the German Ambassador and himself relative to the building by American manufacturers of hydro-aeroplanes for England and Russia. Ambassador von Bernstorff wrote that that there was no doubt that such airships must be regarded as war vessels whose delivery to belligerent states by neutrals should be stopped under Article 8 of the thirteenth convention of the second Hague conference of October 18, 1907. The Ambassador pointed out that hydro-aeroplanes were not mentioned by name in the convention simply because there was none in 1907 at the time of the conference.

In his reply Secretary Bryan said that he did not regard the obligations imposed by treaty or by accepted rules of international law applicable to aircraft of any sort. He pointed out that according to the latest advices received by our Department of State the German Government includes "baloons and flying machines and their component parts" in the list of conditional contraband and that in the imperial prize ordinance, drafted on September 30, 1909, and issued in the Reichs-Gesetzblatt on August 5, 1914, appear as conditional contraband." "It thus appears," said Secretary Bryan, "that the imperial Government has placed and still retains aircraft of all descriptions in the class of conditional contraband, for which no special treatment involving neutral duty is, so far as I am advised, provided by any treaty to which the United States is a signatory or adhering power. As in the views of this department the provisions of convention 13 of the second Hague conference do not apply to hydro-aeroplanes, I do not consider it necessary to discuss the question as to whether those provisions are in force during the present war."—News, Ithaca.

Newspapers and Crimes.

In a book he has just published entitled "The Individual Delinquent," Dr. William Healy, director of the Psychopathic Institute of Chicago, says plainly that in no single case has he been able to trace criminality to the reading of newspapers.

Crime is really only a small element in the news. Whenever it is displayed the glamour is all taken away. The criminal always gets the worst of it in the story. The majority of criminal careers are begun before the newspaper reading age is reached. Actual inquiry shows that young offenders hardly ever notice anything in newspapers except comic pictures. They show no interest in newspaper reports of crime, and no trace of hero worship or romantic sentiment as attached to criminality was found to arise from newspaper articles. In a word, the budding criminal is not infatuated by anything in the papers, and to those of older growth the newspaper treatment of the topic must be sobering and admonitory. The only direct bad effects of newspaper reading are found in occasional unbalanced minds, and in such cases the result is more likely to be false self-accusation of some crime that is attracting public attention than any attempt to imitate it.

Far different is the influence of the cheap crime sory on the younger generation. Its pernicious influence, Dr. Healy says, can be proved by numerous cases. Along with morbid pictures of all sorts, bad literature is a fertile source of criminal inspiration. The difference in effect from the newspaper reports is due to the different treatment. In the bad crime story the crime is the thing; in the newspaper it is the pursuit of it. In the bad story the criminal is the defiant and successful hero; in the newspaper he generally is the downcast victim of his own wickedness.

The dividing line between good and bad literature may be drawn for penological purposes upon this one matter of the treatment of the criminal. Stories of adventure, activity, excitement are not apt to be harmful if the moral aspect be not distorted. Dr. Healy instances "Treasurer Island" as the type of work that gratifies unquenchable instincts of youth without a trace of evil stimulation. But the cheap trash written from the vicious point of view enhances the depraved taste. The habit grows like the passion for alcohol or cigarettes.

Commonly such books are found on youthful offenders and from questioning it is learned that their effect often becomes obsessional. But even so there remains ground for doubt as to whether they are a direct, causative element in creating crime or only a secondary one helping to stimulate into activity natural failings, or tendencies developed from bad surroundings or other special conditions. On the whole, the effect of Dr. Healy's researches is rather to lower the degree of importance to be attached to literary or representative causation of crime and to concentrate attention on the actualities of life, home, school, the streets, neglects of education and privation of such strong interests as congenial work and healthy amusement.—Dispatch, Utica.

Mr. Taft: A Possibility.

It is curious to see how the name of ex-President Taft keeps cropping up in the gossip about the next Presidential nomination—usually defended by some apologetic phrase such as "stranger things may happen," or the like. But, defensive or not, the talk persists; and it is to be found in newspapers in widely separated parts of the country, and is apparently spontaneous. Here, for instance, is the Augusta (Ga.) Chronicle discussing the subject and reaching the conclusion that.

"A straw vote at this moment might show that the most popular and influential Republican in the United States is William Howard Taft. Grover Cleveland, it will be recalled, 'came back' after four years as a 'sage.'"

Up in Pennsylvania Representative J. Hampton Moore discusses the question in an article in the Philadelphia Public Ledger. Says he:

"Because they say he was right in many of his policies, which have been proved by the Wilson administration, old-time friends of President Taft mention his name as a return possibility."

He adds that there is "no indication of an organized Taft movement," and there certainly is not. The thing has not yet got beyond the gossip stage. At the same time, with the dearth of Presidential material on the Republican side, and with a manifest casting about on all sides for some likely candidate, which has led even to the suggestion of such improbable possibilities as Governor Willis of Ohio and Representative Mann, gossip is a thing to be reckoned with. Gossip may at any moment harden into action.

Mr. Taft's conduct since he left the White House has made him hosts of friends and has even affected the faction of the party that was hostile to him while he was there—though that hostility was not directed so much at him as those around him. His good temper, the wisdom of his public utterances, and the service he has performed in directing public opinion have gone a long way toward clarifying the popular impression of an honest president who suffered for sins that were not his. It is probable that many different parts of the country will increase rather than diminish.—Times, N. Y.

EVIL ODORS

If anything could surpass the evil odors that have been arising from the decaying mass of vegetables, etc., that have been dumped into the old canal bed, it cannot be imagined. To say such a custom of dumping refuse matter in the heart of our city, that decays and fills the air for blocks with a foul stench, is a way that is barbaric and belongs entirely to the Dark Ages.

To rectify this disgrace upon the city it is but necessary to suppose the Board of Health should become busy at once—not waiting for a signed complaint to arrive and go through certain form.

Indeed, activity in an open-air school is honestly funny when the open air is laden with contamination. Again, as in charity, let's have common sense and not mere sentiment that "eternal fitness" may be the watchword for Fulton's growth.

THIS HAS THE RIGHT RING.

No question under discussion in education is so fraught with consequences for the future of democracy as the question of industrial education. Its right development will do more to make education truly democratic than any other one agency now under consideration. Its wrong treatment will as surely accentuate all the undemocratic tendencies in our present situation by fostering and strengthening class divisions in school and out. It is better to suffer for a while longer from the ills of our present lack of system till the truly democratic lines of advance become apparent than to separate industrial education sharply from general education and thereby use it to mark off in the interests of employers a separate class of laborers.—Prof. John Dewey, Columbia University.

Helping the Small Business Men

The Chamber of Commerce of the United States gave an appreciative welcome to President Wilson's plea for a change in the anti-trust laws which would permit the small business men of the country to co-operate in seeking foreign trade. The proposal is exactly the sort of work toward which the new organization is bending its energies. It is admirably expressive of the new spirit which seeks to secure the benefits of common council for the mass of American manufacturers and merchants.

The large trusts of America are already accomplishing great things in foreign markets. They have the organization, they have the capital, to create the demand which must be created before American goods can sell in competition with the produce of other nations. The lesser manufacturers lack all this equipment. They find themselves fighting single handed intrenched foreign rivals. The new way, the better way, is that outlined by President Wilson. Laws must be passed permitting union of allied interests and the co-operative marketing of goods. If Congress will do its share we can rely upon the Chamber of Commerce to do its share toward organizing these new fighting units of militant business American.—Tribune, New York.

JUST PLAIN YANK

By O. B. Morey

If as I see in the evening news
That preaching is in store,
The match is lit to touch the fuse
As twice we did before.

The game we played at Bunker Hill
Was neither H (y) de nor seek.
And Sacketts Harbor filled the bill,
Canucks were very meek.

On the battle field at Lexington
The British soldiers bold,
Just ran so fast before the Yanks
Their "cuds" they could not hold.

The crimans will not lose their cuds cuds
Because of English fear;
They're holding well their own it seems
Though great the odds appear.

Who snubs the nose of Sammy's babe
And makes that youngster squall
Will hear the Yankee Eagle scream
For the opening of the "Ball."

In all the battles we have fought
Our courage never sank
'll let them know where e're I go,
I'm just a "blawsted Yank."

WITH THE SUFFRAGISTS.

"Mother Jones, incidentally," so ran the press report of an interview with this redoubtable champion of labor, "gave woman suffrage a body blow." This was what she said: "Those fifteen hundred women that marched to Denver and yelled to the Governor to 'telegraph for federal troops made mischief instead of good. We had the strike all but won and they ruined everything."

My dear Mother Jones, to you it may be an argument against woman suffrage that Colorado women insisted that federal troops stop the lawlessness in the strike district, but to the millions of law-abiding people in this country there could be offered no better argument in its favor. At this particular time, when the public mind is focussed on the failure of the government of Colorado to preserve order, we welcome your "body-blow" because it permits us to call attention to the fact that it was, after all, the women who forced the Governor to ask for federal troops which stopped the anarcry and that Colorado women were able to render this service to law and order, because they were voters.

Being voters the women of Kansas have discussed with renewed interest in their clubs the laws they would like to have passed. In the first three days of the present Legislature twenty of these measures were introduced.

Was there a similar rush in the first few days of the present Legislature in New York state to introduce bills asked for by the club women of the state? If so the papers have failed to mention it. During the last Legislature more than 2,000 bills were introduced and of the very few that related especially to the interests of women but three became laws.

With the election of Kathryn Clarke to fill a vacancy in the Oregon Senate, Oregon, Colorado, and Arizona have a woman member in each branch of their legislatures. The dread of the woman office holder need deter no man from voting for woman suffrage. Whatever they do or do not do with the ballot, they don't elect themselves to office.

It has been left for a minister, Rabbi Stephen Wise, to declare that the women of New York would be justified in throwing bricks if the men did not give them the vote in a reasonable time. He was speaking at the Suffrage Shop of the Women's Political Union and he continued, 'As to militancy, in the light of what is happening in Europe now, the struggle of that brave band of women who fought for the vote in England seems mild and tepid. All that is back of the great war today is not as serious as the cause Mrs. Pankhurst and her daughters headed."

"I am unwilling as a southern man" said Congressman Webb of North Carolina, "to force woman into the vortex of politics, where her sensitiveness and her modesty will often be wounded."

And Alice Duer Miller comments in the New York Tribune, "The women of his state are trying to raise the age of consent for girls above fourteen years. We feel sure that in the struggle their modesty and their sensitiveness will often be offended. The question is should they protect their sensitiveness or their daughters?"

Only Merit Can Win

Merit in any business or profession is, after all the only thing that brings lasting success. Especially is this true of entertainment. Embellishment may for the moment detract from lack of merit as well as enhance quality, but it is the real old "Simon Pure" that becomes permanant.

It is the real complications that create the wholesome fun found in the farce, "A Pair of Sixes." The clever twists of the author that cause the actors to becofne enmeshed in turmoils and trouble, so serious to them, yet as purely funny to the observer.

Not a moment is dull not a character overdrawn, not a thing happens that could not happen, there are no funny falls, no stale jokes, no unnatural faces, just a series of complications that came about naturally, and dialogue bristleing with satire, the production, like all New York production must be these days, is elaborate, the rooms with their contents are complete, the costuming modern, in fact ladies interested in the latest styles, and how to wear them, will enjoy seeing the gowns for, while they are not advertised they have been much talked about and will be in Fulton Monday, Feb. 8, when the production will be seen at The Quirk.

Bound to Occur.

"And no one has ever been found for the Sahara desert?"

"No; but I am confident it is only a question of time when some enthusiast will come along and lay it out in golf links."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

COME DOWN TO EARTH

FULTON

AND now we find bread has got a swell head; he's trying to climb higher up. His coat will not fit; for down we will sit, and munch Johnny-cake for our sup'. Now, what is the use for wheat to seem that he's so much better than corn? He's a chip of the block, he's a bird of the flock as from the same sod when molded from wheat. But, we can't let you run the whole show. You'll have to come down if you live in our town; or, you can't build your house in our row. You've put on a bump, you think you will stump the coin from our pockets to flow. Again, you may guess. You'll have to confess that Fulton housewives are not slow. We've studied the art, we're up to our part, the cost of high living to cope. Right now you may know. You can't run our show. He can't; Can he girls? please say—"nope."

Communicated

Editor Evening Times:

Having been guilty of working off a number of jokes on very dear friends at Chamber of Commerce meetings and elsewhere, I feel like telling one on myself—that they may know the spirit in which I have considered these innocent occurrences. Yes, I should feel guilty of trying to present a good laugh, because it would be at my expense.

On my recent trip to Rome a little incident occurred that brought chagrins for the moment—and later a good laugh. My former life as commercial traveler was brought back on my little journey in a railroad train—almost a novelty after two years of quiet home life. Possibly it was this unaccustomed, of late, excitement that led me to neglect the inspection of my attire—wherein lies the source of this chance to laugh.

Hurrying to catch a train back to Syracuse, I decided to make a few calls on friends identified with large business interests, my object being to get a line on the true business conditions, that our flour mill owners need not shine alone (after I came forth with my carefully gathered and authentics predictions).

I was received in the private office of Dey Brothers, under whom I had received my boyhood tutoring—and from whose influence for righteousness and honorable dealing I acquired whatever there is of good in me. Later I was ushered into the office of another prominent citizen, a leading attorney and a teacher of large bible classes—one in particular at Centehary M. E. church.

In all I called on half a dozen, among them a young lady stenographer who had served me in that capacity. Now in each of these places I had carefully remembered to remove my hat.

Finally after lunching with a friend and arriving safely at home my pride and satisfaction in my achievement—was completely crushed by the discovery—made by simply looking in the looking-glass—that I had gone since Sunday afternoon without having touched a comb to my head—and the sight was very displeasing.

I still maintain, notwithstanding a seeming insinuation from the president of our Chamber of Commerce that some one or more of a committee on which I had served as a member had been full, I am ready to swear that I abstained from drink (of anything stronger than tea) while on this trip. Rome has an old saying "when in Rome do as the Romans do," but I do not wish to infer that they neglect to comb their hair—nor go calling on distinguished people in a plight that would heighten the suspicion of our beloved Chamber of Commerce executive.

"He laughs best who laugh last"—so laugh at my expense good friends.

ROUNDS MAKES OBJECTION.

In a letter to The Palladium, W. W. Rounds comments upon the Board of Supervisors in this fashion:

"By resolution of the last Board of Supervisors, request was made that the Legislature pass a law increasing the pay of the members of the Board of Supervisors, and Senator Brown has introduced such a bill in the Senate.

"Now, as can be seen by the records of the Board, increase of salaries was the most prominent of any business of the Board, ending with a request that the Legislature increase the pay of the Supervisors themselves.

"I believe, and know, that there is no good reason why this increase should be granted. There is not a member of the Board, neither has there been in my recollection, that is worth to himself what he is now getting from the county for the time spent. If there is a good reason for the increase, why did not the Board come out in the open and make it a flat salary, so that the people would know just what they had to pay? It is the mixed salary and fee system that has led to all of the abuses that the Comptroller's Office has always complained of.

SMART FASHIONS IN NEW YORK

Mourning Models, Ribbons, Pockets, Military Types, Veils and Fixings

New York. The wearing of mourning no longer considered obligatory as a mark of respect for the dead, or protection for the living. Many families taboo such sable attire and even those who wear it, endeavor to get away from the terribly funeral styles formerly worn. One seldom sees a veil of heavy crepe or anything in the way of crepe trimmings outside of a few folds on hats or gowns.

Any dull black fabric is suitable for mourning wear. Serge, gabardine, broadcloth, faille silk, and satins with lusterless surfaces, and a small simple outfit is both in better taste and more practical, than a variety of frocks that must either be discarded or made over at the end of the six months or a year when the dress is lightened. For indoor wear many women use all white, which is also mourning, and is both less depressing and more sanitary than the black.

A Practical Suit

A suit suitable for present wear under a fur wrap, and that could be used throughout the rest of the year, except in mid-Summer, is of black silk poplin, combined with black moire velours. The skirt has a deep flaring flounce of the moire, and the short Eton coat has a wide cape collar and cuffs of the moire.

A blouse of chiffon cloth over net, with touches of moire in its trimmings goes admirably with this, and can be varied by waists of white linen or lawn with hemstitching as the only garniture, or of white chiffon made in the simplest possible style.

All modish hats are reproduced in combinations of dull silk and crepe, or chiffon. The new type of veil that falls loosely to the line of the choulders, is admirably adapted for mourning wear, and is usually bordered with one or more rows of black grosgrain ribbon. This same ribbon is also much used for hat and dress trimmings, in bands, or as narrow pleatings that finish the edges of the blouse or skirt folds.

Ribbon Trimmings

Ribbon trimmings are very much to the fore for all sorts of costumes, black and white plaids are especially attractive as girdles and accessories with dresses of pongee and of white or colored crepons.

The fad for slitting the fabric of a blouse or fichu and running ribbon ties through these, after the style familiar in lingerie, is notable in advance models for the coming Spring.

Pockets have come increasingly to the fore and are an important feature of new get-ups.

They are of all sizes and shapes, patch pockets leading and furnish such an effective trimming note to coats and skirts that the wonder is that they have been out for so long.

Before a great while, if this development tontinues, the fashionable woman will have to institute some sort of a stowing system in order to know to which pocket she must go for her various belongings. Then she must remember to transfer her appurtenances every time she changes her dress, or else have a lot of duplicate fixings. It looks like trouble ahead rather than convenience but no doubt some satisfactory solution will be found.

Military motifs appear in nearly every new model shown for the coming seasons, and these new styles demand a carefully fitted well-poised figure, straight and trim.

Last year's "slouch" is hopelessly out, a cause for thankfulness to most well bred people. Whatever the garment worn this Sring, be it high waisted dancing frock, flaring skirted suit, sporty outdoor rig, or dainty "bridge" dress, the lines of the figure beneath must be trig and neat and well defined if a stylish appearance is desired.

Corduroy in any of the fashionable tones, white, putty, grey, coral or verdure green, makes very smart extra skirts cut to flare at the sides, and having a hemmed overlap front and back, the front ornamented with self-covered buttons. Very wide girdles similarly buttoned go with this model.

Viels and Fixings

Loose hung viels, their edges bound with satin or velvet, or with borders of narrow ribbons or designs wrought in the mesh, are worn in an infinite variety of styles. White viels are more apt to have black bindings than those that match. White bindings on black or brown nets are smartly endorsed; and worn by the girlish contingent that a short time back tabooed veils as too matronly for their use Whatever the style of the veil affected, it must hang loose and full, and reach anywhere from the line of the collar to the shoulder or lower. Anything trig and tight in the adjustment of the veil is hopelessly out just now, through a few stylish women cling to the accustomed neat arrangement.

Uninjured Spots of a Man Are Few

Frederick, Md., Feb. 6.—Life has proven one trouble after another for Lawson A. Dubel, 59, who believes the bad luck "jinx" has followed him persistently than any other man in the country. He must undergo an operation for a growth on his eye. Recently a growth was removed from the other eye. His other mishaps since childhood have been: Left hand almost cut off, right arm broken, severely scalded, jaw broken, trampled upon by a horse and three ribs broken, one ear torn off and a hole pierced in his head, left foot nearly cut off, kicked by a horse and leg broken, pinned beneath a 1,500 pound derrick and every rib broken and both hips injured.

THE PAINTER OF LINCOLN DEAD

New York, Feb. 4.—Alban Jasper Conant, who painted the first oil portrait of Presdient Lincoln, died yesterday. For thirty years he lived at the Studio Building, 51 West 10th st., where John La Farge worked. Here he spent the last hours of a life that nearly spanned a century, for he was in his ninety-fourth year. Death, due to old age, was hastened by a severe cold which the artist contracted a week ago. With him were his only two surviving children, Alban Jasper Conant, jr., and Mrs. C. C. Smith.

Conant, who won fame as the painter of the famous "Smiling Lincoln," which brought $3,700 at an auction sale four years ago, was one of the links that connected modern New York with theh past. When he first come to the city as a young man with $40 in his pocket, Edgar Allan Poe was a conspicuous figure and the novels of Charles Dickens were being published. Nathaniel P. Willis, poet and writer, was then in his prime and the fashionable place of resort in the summer evenings was Battery Park. That was back in 1844, but Conant was then twenty-three years old.

Of all the portraits which Conant painted—and these included those of Henry Ward Beecher, which now hangs in the chapel at Amherst College; Dr. James McCosh, president of Princeton University Major Anderson at Fort Sumter, and a host of justics of the Supreme Court and Cabinet secretaries—that of Lincoln remained the most celebrated.

It was two months before the election that the artist met Lincoln. He had received the commissin to paint the candidate from William McPherson, of St. Louis, where Conant was then living. Armed with letters of introduction, he entered Lincoln's office in the State House at Springfield, Ill. There he found the candidate surrounded by his friends, his face alight with interest and pleasure, smiling and genial.

Painting the portrait in Lincoln's office during the excitement of a campaign was not without its difficulties. Finally Conant solved the problem by putting a bench in the rear of the easel where visitors could sit and talk with Lincoln while he was posing. When the famous "Smiling Lincoln" was finished Mrs. Lincoln was called upon to pronounce judgment. She considered it good, and according to the artist expressed the hope that Lincoln would look that way after the election.

GIANT ELECTRIC MOTORS TESTED

They Are By Nature Locomotives, and the Dream of Their Inventor.

Bluefield, W. Va., Feb. 6.—What was a day dream of a great inventor has just been realized by a tent made here on the most powerful electric locomotive ever built. Fourteen thousand horsepower was used to start a single full tonnage train, while nearly eight thousand was used to propel it, on the Elkhorn Division of the Norfolk and Western R. R. which has just been electrified.

These giant locomotives were built especially to haul the heavy freight trains over the steep mountain grade of this division.

The locomotives are used on each train, one at each end, because otherwise the enormous strain on the car coupling from concentrating at one point the enormous amount of energy required to aperate the train would be dangerous. Each locomotive weighs 270 tons, or over 1,000,000 pounds per train. Their capacity exceeds that of any steam or electric locomotive ever built, or enough to move a 250-car train, or one 2 miles long, on a level track.

The train moved by these locomotives weighed nearly 4000 tons and consisted of cars each carrying 100 tons of coal. It was started and handled with perfect ease on the two per cent grade of what is known as one of the most difficult pieces of construction in America.

A test was also made on the electric braking of the train down the mountain grade, resulting in the electric engines holding the train at a steady speed without the use of the train brakes. This is accomplished by the mechanical energy by the motors acting as generators. This energy is then returned to the system for use by other trains. This is the first time that this system of regaining energy has been put into use in this country, and is destined to be far reaching in its effect.

The enormous energy utilized in operating these trains is fed to the locomotive from a single-phase alternating current system over one wire no larger than a lead pencil in 13,000 volts, a pressure 20 times greater than that used in the New York Subway. The energy is generated by steam turbines in a special power house by the railroad company to operate this division. It is located by the railroad tracks near the mines at Bluestone, from which coal can be economically secured.

The electrified zone of the Norfolk and Western, one of the heaviest coal carriers in the world, consists of nearly 100 miles of track, and is not only the heaviest and most extensive electrification of a freight line railroad in the world, but is the most noteworthy electrification under way today. Up this heavy grade are carried 50,000 to 100,000 tons of coal a day. It is also the first electrification in the world that will replace the heaviest steam locomotive service, which on this division is regarded as the heaviest in the world. An interesting fact in connection with this installation is that the Mallet locomotives replaced embody all the latest improvements in steam locomotives including superheaters and mechanical stokers, the latter of which was absolutely necessary since the locomotive were so big that one man was unable to keep them supplied with coal, and even with three of these monsters, a speed of only 7 to 8 miles per hour is obtained, while with two of the electric locomotives a speed of 14 miles per hour is steadily maintained over the entire grade, thus practically doubling the capacity of the line.

The importance of this installation can hardly be over estimated in marking an advance in the electrification of steam railroads. It is interesting to note that this electrification is the practical realization of the ideas which the late George Westinghouse, inventor of the air brake, had nourished for many years, and its successful conclusion is due in no small measure to his activity along these lines.

It is confidently expected that the excellent results obtained on this installation will lead a number of other roads to adopt electricity as a means of increasing their capacity.

SUPT. ALLEN STEPS DOWN

Resigned Yesterday As Head of County Hospital at Orwell; Successor Appointed

Oswego, Feb. 6.—For some time affairs between the Board of Managers and Dr. J. Roy Allen of the Oswego County Tuberculosis hospital at Orwell have been in an unpleasant state. The trouble came to a head Wednesday and yesterday. Wednesday Dr. Allen appeared in Oswego and retained an attorney. A meeting of the Board of Managers was afterward held an offending nurse was suspended. The Wednesday session was a stormy one, resulting in the board rising in defense of the suspended nurse.

At that meeting it is also asserted that Dr. H. S. Albertson, one of the board, introduced a resolution calling for the resignation of Dr. Allen. The resolution, however, it is said, was not seconded and finally was withdrawn to await the action of the hearing yesterday.

Dr. Allen takes the position, it is said, that he has entire authority over the employes of the institution under the state law and that the Board of Managers has no right to review any action he has taken in regard to any of his subordinates. The nurse, on the other hand, made a demand that her case be heard and retained District Attorney Culkin to represent her interests.

Yesterday's meeting was held at the Orwell hospital to hear charges which Superintendent Allen made against one of the nurses for insubordination.

At the same time the nurse in question was, it is stated, suspended by the superintendent, and the hearing yesterday followed a decision of the Board of Managers to review such suspension.

Successors to Dr. Allen and Miss Kavanaugh have not yet been appointed. Nearly every employ of the hospital resigned, including Miss Kavanaugh who left Richland on an afternoon train.

The Evening Times was informed last night by Dr. Allen that two patients had left the hospital and gone to their homes.

THE QUIRK TONIGHT.

CUMMINS LEADS PURCHASE FIGHT

Republicans Swing in Line for Popular Ownership to Block Democrats

Washington, Feb. 6.—Deadlocked in the fight over the shipping bill the Senate Democrats and the "allies" spent today in looking about for possible new moves to bring them the victory. The Senate did not meet, having recessed until Monday noon, but the Senators were at their offices and conferences from room to room were almost continuous.

The revelation of the day was the agreement of the Republicans to accept a straight out government ownership and operation scheme, under control of the navy department, as a substitute for the Democratic measure. This substitute, perfected by Senator Cummins, of Iowa, provides that the navy department shall use $30,000,000 worth of Panama canal bonds to purchase and construct vessels shall be operated by the department in the ocean-carrying trade of the United States. The previous substitute offered by Senator Cummins provided that the vessels of the naval auxiliary should be leased out to private concerns.

Senator Cummins stated today that his new measure would command the entire Republican vote in the Senate, as an alternative to the administration bill, unless the latter should be so amended as to get the support of Senators Norris and La Follette. He predicted, however, that the fight would continue indefinitely.

WOULD CONVOY U. S. SHIPS

Washington, Feb. 6.—Administration officials today awaited the arrival of [illegible] of Germany's blockade declaration which has been requested of Ambassador Gerard at Berlin, before determining upon the exact nature of the representations to be made to the Kaiser's government. That this establishment of a restricted zone, including the waters of England, Holland and France, will place American, as well as other neutral ships, passenger and freight in jeopardy generally is assumed in official circles.

The American government's program as tentatively outlined today, is said to be to ascertain the real extent of the war zone edict and then to ask what arrangements can be made to convoy American merchant men through the closed area. Great Britain most likely will be requested to say whether she is permitting her trading vessels to fly neutral flags as charged by Germany. If England should deny this, the State Department may be expected to inquire of the German foreign office for proof of this accusation.

A NOTABLE ENGAGEMENT

"A Pair of Sixes," described by New York and Chicago critics as "the world's funniest farce," will be seen at The Quirk Monday, Feb. 8. The engagement is the more notable in that the London cast, which would now be playing in London had it not been for the outbreak of the European war, will be seen here, Amsterdam being one of the few eastern cities which will see this company before it enters upon its Boston run. The play is a farce in three acts by Edward Peple, author of "The Prince Chap" and "The Littlest Rebel." The story concerns the quarrel of two young men, proprietors of the Eureka Digestive Pill company, each of whom claims the credit for the success of the business. Their lawyer, unable to assist them to an amicable settlement suggests a hand of poker to decide which shall conduct the business unmolested by the other. A pair of sixes is the winning hand. Under the agreement the loser becomes involved in a series of complications, from which he ultimately is rescued by a scheme of his sweetheart.

8 DEATHS IN AS MANY MONTHS

Suspicions Aroused; Arrests Made in Odd Fellows' Home at Yonkers

New York, Feb. 6.—With four persons held in connection with alleged wholesale murders in the German Odd Fellows' home, near Yonkers, and other arrests in prospect, Coroner James P. Dunn of Westchester county, today took steps to have the bodies of the victims exhumed. A rigid and widespread investigation is being made of the story of Frederick Mors, a former orderly in the institution, who is said to have confused to Assistant District Attorney Murphy that he chloroformed aged inmates to put them out of their misery. Mors is detained in the psychopathic ward at Bellevue hospital as a lunatic.

"They were so old they were a nuisance," Mors is reported to have said in his confession.

Adam Bangert, superintendent of the German Odd Fellows' home, was locked up incommunicade in the White Plains jail, and two orderlies, Max Ring and Fritz Reicher, are being held as witnesses.

Frank Schmidt and Amelia Buonopoma, the latter a fourteen year old girl, who had charge of the medicine chest, were paroled by the authorities for further examination. District Attorney Weeks of Westchester county, said he would present the case to the grand jury Monday. It was said a warrant had been issued for Mors, but Weeks refused to reveal the charge.

"From my investigation so far I have no doubt that eight aged persons were put to death with chloroform," said Coroner Dunn. "At the time, death was supposed to be due to natural causes."

The deaths all occurred within the last eight months.

COLLEGE WOMEN'S BANQUET

The Fulton college women will hold a banquet at Lewis' on Thursday evening. The committee in charge states that if there are any college women in the city who have not been interviewed and who wish to attend the banquet, places will be reserved if notice is given Miss Ruth Adams, 4th and Buffalo streets, or at Roberts and Woods.

The affair promises to be one of the most enjoyable features of the season. The leading women's colleges and co-education institutions will be well represented.

Girls Saved From Death in Factory

New York, Feb. 6.—Twenty girls were more or less seriously hurt in a fire which today swept the seven-story loft building at 103-105 Avenue A, occupied by Wolf and Abramson, manufacturers of babies' clothing, and the United Furniture Stores' Co., and spread to the seven-story building occupied by M. Tannenbaum a furniture manufacturer adjoining.

Early reports had five girls burned to death but all employes were later accounted for.

Girls, panic-stricken, flocked to the upper windows, and were about to jump into the life nets below, when cooler heads restrained them and there were taken to the roof and rescued.

The flames spread to the seven-story building occupied by M. Tannenbaum, a furniture manufacturer, and this is believed to be doomed.

Ambulances from all nearby hospitals were summoned. Parents of girls employed in the clothing factory fought the police reserves to get by the fire lines.

LIVES LOST ON COAST.

ing such men as Judge Lindsey of Denver, and other men equally as influencial in the cause of suffrage, was wrong. Mrs. De Silvia said that she is often consulted upon matters concerning the laying of sewer pipes, the erection of buildings, etc. "And if my opinions is worthy of notice in such matters why not in the question of the saloons?" she asked.

"Sometimes I work day and night. I work hard every day but when that work is finished, I could like the privilege to cast my vote for an honest, upright man,"

She said that the W. C. T. U. is not looking for sympathy, but wants an equal right to vote with fathers, brother and husband, and to vote for men having reputations that are unapproachable.

Mrs. DeSilvia further said that the reason some women don't want suffrage is because they are afraid they'll have to work too hard. During a suffragist parade in Syracuse, not long ago, the speaker marched in the parade in which her husband and a man just discharged from Auburn prison marched.

"I have no right to send a substitute in my place to a meeting," said the speaker. "I have no right to send my husband to fill my place, so I must go myself and do my best to satisfy the party I represent."

The speaker mentioned the fact that at least one mounment was erected to the memory of a woman, Frances Willard. She paid a handsome tribute to Miss Willard's memory and closed her address by reciting the words inscribed upon the mounment.

Rev. Mr. Holmes and Rev. Mr. Buck were allowed five minutes each to address the meeting, and both stated that they favored the cause of suffrage.

After the speaking covers were laid for 140 of the guests, and after luncheon 12 new members were enrolled in the W. C. T. U. There were also 40 signers that volunteerer to uphold suffrage in the future. 126 women attended the meeting.

ALBANY LETTER DAY BY DAY

Cardoze Tells Time' Readers the Doings of Officials and Lawmakers

By F. T. Cardoze

(Albany Manager of the International News Service.

Albany, Feb. 5.—Considerable interest is rife relative to the examination which probers from the office of State Comptroller Travis are making in the department of the State architect. There are those who predict that a clean bill of health will be granted State Architect Louis F. Pilcher, the prediction being based in some instances upon the fact that his department was thoroughly purged during the Sulzer administration.

Under the Democratic regime the regulations governing the department of the State architect were thoroughly scrutinized and altered, salaries were raised and the manner of awarding contracts for the restoration of the burned portion of the Capitol changed. The amendments to the law, subsequently carried out by a Democratic senate and Republican assembly, were recommended by a committee of three, representing the American Institute of Architects consisting of Messrs. Holland of Buffalo, Waid of New York and Brockaway of Syracuse. This fact, it is claimed, takes away a large share of the sting which might otherwise go with the investigation now under way.

When William Sulzer became governor and appointed John N. Carlisle, John A. Delaney and H. Gordon Lynn as his triumverate of probers, one of the first departments to be delved into was that of the State architect. Then appeared the committee of three representing the American Institute of Architects.

As a result of the activity of the special committee a report was made to Governor Sulzer as to its findings. Certain recommendations were made as to needed changes relative to the method of awarding contracts and it was strongly hinted that a demoralized condition prevailed. Another thing touched upon in the report was the belief of the committee that a new State architect be appointed.

Chapter three began with a personal investigation of the department in question by John A. Hennessey, executive auditor. Mr. Hennessey publicly exposed looseness in the carrying out of electrical and plumbing contracts in connection with Capitol reconstruction work. Then ensued four months of deliberation during which a bill was prepared to reconstruct the department.

Charles A. Sussdorf, who had served under Former State Architest Franklin Ware, was named by Governor Sulzer as temporary State architect, in spite of the fact that he was a Republican, but meanwhile the work of investigating continued and this, with the holding up of appropriations, made it almost impossible to administer the affairs of the department.

It was then that Louis F. Pilcher was summoned by Governor Sulzer. Mr. Pilcher was called as an expert to tell the best method of handling the business accumulating in the State architects department. He conferred with Mr. Hennessey and the committee from the American Institute of Architects, the result being that his name was brought into consideration and he was subsequently made State architect. One of the first steps he took was to abolish the system of awarding construction contracts on the Capitol upon the percentage basis.

By the time Mr. Pilcher had familiarized himself with his duties, the bill reorganizing the department over which he presided was introduced and passed. Far larger appropriations than had been asked for in previous years were secured to meet the needed repairs at the various state buildings over which the State architect has jurisdiction. The salary roll was increased to $475,000.

One of the things the new bill did which appeared to meet with the approval of architects in general was to give to the State architect powers which a service bureau should have and took away ministerial powers that should be enjoyed by boards of managers of State institutions. It was ordered that no contracts of over $500 should be hereafter let without advertisement for bids and that the lowest bidder should be awarded the contract.

Criticism which is directed at the department of the State architect because he has an office in New York city is explained away by the statement that such office is maintained for the benefit of contractors and representatives of boards of managers of hospitals and charitable institutions. By examining plans and specifications there, expensive trips are made unnecessary, resulting in a greater number of bidders and consequently cheaper construction work because of competition.

Irrespective of the predictions of those who are in State Architect Pilcher's corner, Comptroller Travis believes that there has been a waste of the State's money in his department. The probe he is conducting salaries that are too high and needless employees.

CANADIAN BRIDGE REPORTED BLOWN UP BY GERMANS.

St. John, Nova Scotia, Feb. 6.—Excitement was caused here today by reports that an attempt had been made to blow up the suspension bridge over the St. John river, between St. John and Fairville. Since the blowing up of the bridge near Vanceboro, Me., a feeling of nervous tension has existed over the possible presence of German spies in Canada. When a watchman found a package of nitro glycerine at the base of one of the piers of the bridge today a report was circulated that the attempt was successful.

The package contained a substance resembling tar soap. It was taken to police headquarters for analysis. Armed guards are placed around the bridge as well as around other bridges in this section.

War: Pathos and Humor

Paris, Feb. 5.—Among the beneficient results which may come from the great war is the realization of the project for a tunnel under the English Channel, connecting the allies of France and Great Britain.

This was discussed first just before the Franco-Prussian war. After that conflict the British strangely feared that the tunnel would be a military danger, inviting invasion from the Continent.

It is now generally realized that the tunnel, instead of a danger, would be England's greatest bulwark. It could easily be destroyed if the enemy captured the French end; in fact, a thousand men could hold it against ten million. On the other hand, it would enable reinforcements to be thrown quickly between France and Great Britain.

If England were invaded, several French corps could be sent through the tunnel in one quarter the time that would be taken now. The trains could be made up in any part of France and discharge the troops and their impediments at a point in England near the battle front.

The advantage which the tunnel would have been to General French's expeditionary force last August are too obvious to need emphasis. If the tunnel had been in existence, Northern France, and even Brussels, might have been saved.

Albert Gauthier, a former member of the French Chamber of Deputies, has just addressed the following appeal to the English people on the subject of the tunnel:

"You have won greatness in history by your intrepidity and your strength. It seems that your intellect shines forth more clearly and your will power is heightened in times of peril.

"We are now together passing through one of those grave crises in which the destiny of the world is decided. You English are in the best position to comprehend the lesson of the events that are occurring and to take action accordingly.

"Consider what power would be ours if your boundaries were eliminated, if our armies could be made but one, thanks to the facilities and rapidity of communications by rail.

"The present war has already dissipated a great many prejudices and misunderstandings. We have learned to know and to love one another, and the mutual feeling of high esteem which some among us already harbored has, at the present time, penetrated to the very hart of the great masses of our two nations.

"On the other hand the first cannon shot fired by the enemy at the English coast has destroyed the illusion that England owed its safety to its isolation.

"If our military forces were connected by railway lines, our heroic soldiers could, with in a few hours, render each other support without ever having to risk the possibility of being shut off or delayed by the fitful sea.

"You know what force and what daring Germany can show through its ability to transport millions of people from one end of its empire to the other. It would have been defeated already, if it had not possessed that netswork of communication lines. One cannot conceive of any effective military strength without full freedom and speed in its operations. Our own strength would become tenfold. If our armies could combine their forces, without incurring any danger whatsoever, through a tunnel under the Channel, which would make London only four hours distant from Paris.

"You are not ignorant of the fact that the submarine tunnel project has been abandoned several times for reasons the inanity of which is now apparent and fills our spirits with dismay. If that work had been carried through our united strength and intangibility would have been such that the German barbarians never would have dared to defy us. It was the Franco-German War of 1870 that caused the suspension of work on the submarine tunnel. It is the Franco-German War of 1914 which will, providentially, impel us to resume that work and to carry it speedily to a successful end under the eyes of the thwarted and terror-stricken barbarians themselves. For thereon depends our future safety.

"They wanted Calais. Of course, because the conquest of that city would have prevented the realization of this project, the great importance of which they have fully comprehended! Well, we will just the same, open our first shafts at Dover and Calais, before peace has been signed, right under the enemy's fire. We must give this demonstration of our union, of our strength, just before the time arrives which will see the birth of a new Europe.

"While waiting for my proposition to take a practical form, with the aid of the press, the authorities and experts, I now simply ask of you English, our friends, our allies, our brethren in arms, What do you think of it?"

In mentioning the work on the tunnel before 1870, Mr. Gauthier referred to the project of a French engineer, J. A. Theme de Gamond. In 1867 he showed specifications of a tunnel scheme at the world's fair in Paris. William Lowe, an Englishman, had been laboring on the same problem and they combined forces, finally inducing the French and British governments to appoint na international commission.

It was reported by the commission that the tunnel would cost $50,000,000 and take about twelve years to build. The scheme seemed to be making satisfactory progress when the blight of the war settled upon it.

Swimming Record

100 Yds., 1.13 2-5

Chicago, Feb. 5.—Four new world's records and several new American marks were set at the Central A. A. U. swimming contest last night.

Michael McDermott, in retaining the 200 yards breast stroke title, set a world's mark of 1.13 2-5 for 100 yards and for the 200 yards made a new world's record of 2.38 2-5. The best previous mark for 100 yards was 1.14 2-5.

Perry McGilliwray, in defending the 300 yard open swim title, set a new world's mark of 2.50 1-5 for the 250 yards and created one of 3.26 1-5 for the 300 yards. The old records were 2.1 for 250 yards and 3.26 2-5 for 300. Harry Hebner, in the 800 yards broke no less than ten American records, starting with the 330 yard mark and passing all the records for intervening distances up to 880, at which points his time was 11.14 1-5, the best previous record being 11.29 1-5.

REMEMBERING DATES.

Mark Twain Had a Good Scheme and He Didn't Patent It.

"Dates are hard to remember because they consist of figures. Figures are monotonously unstriking in appearance, and they don't take hold. They form no picture, and so they give the eye no chance to help. Pictures are the thing. Pictures can make dates stick. They can make nearly anything stick, particularly if you make the pictures yourself. Indeed, that is the great point—make the pictures yourself. I know about this from experience. Thirty years ago I was delivering a memorized lecture every night, and every night I had to help myself with a page of notes to keep from getting myself mixed. The notes consisted of beginnings of sentences and were eleven in number, and they ran something like this:

"'In that region the weather'—

"'At that time it was a custom'—

"'But in California one never heard'—

"Eleven of them. They initiated the brief divisions of the lecture and protected me against skipping. But they all looked about alike on the page. They formed no picture. I had them by heart, but I could never with certainty remember the order of their succession. Therefore I always had to keep these notes by me and to look at them every little while. Once I mislaid them. You will not be able to imagine the terrors of that evening. I now saw that I must invent some other protection. So I got ten of the initial letters by heart in their proper order—I, A, B, and so on—and I went on the platform the next night with these marked in ink on my ten finger nails.

"But it didn't answer. I kept track of the fingers for awhile; then I lost it, and after that I was never quite sure which finger I had used last. I couldn't lick off a letter after using it, for, while that would have made success certain, it would also have provoked too much curiosity. There was curiosity enough without that. To the audience I seemed more interested in my finger nails than I was in my subject. One or two persons asked me afterward what was the matter with my hands.

"It was now that the idea of pictures occurred to me; then my troubles passed away. In two minutes I made six pictures with a pen, and they did the work of the eleven catch sentences, and did it perfectly. I threw the pictures away as soon as they were made, for I was sure I could shut my eyes and see them any time. That was a quarter of a century ago. The lecture vanished out of my head more than twenty years ago, but I could rewrite it from the pictures, for they remain."—Harper's Magazine.

COWED THE BAD MEN.

A General Who Didn't Fear Risking a Shot in His Back.

General Franks, a leader of many a dashing charge in India, held a unique position among his soldiers. They loved him for his courage, but were sometimes irritated by his strictness. Yet in spite of this exacting severity he was unexpectedly lenient when a large occasion demanded it.

One day when the regiment was "firing blank" a bullet whistled by him. He did not stop the firing, but when the number of rounds ordered had been completed he rode up to the line and said:

"Boys, there's a bad shot in the Tenth. He nearly shot my trumpeter, and what should I have said to the boy's mother? I don't want to know the blackguard's name. The officers will not examine the men's pouches."

This was on the eve of a campaign, and before action the senior major came to him and said: "Don't put yourself in front of the regiment tomorrow, sir. You know there are always one or two bad men in a regiment."

"Thank you, major," was the reply. "It's very kind of you. I might have given you a step."

When the Tenth was drawn up for the final advance he put himself at its head and called:

"Boys, I'm todid ye mane to shoot me today. Take my advice and don't shoot Tom Franks until the fighting's done, for ye won't find a better man to lade ye!"

The regiment answered with a cheer and carried the Sikh batteries with the bayonet rather than run the risk of shooting the beloved old fire eater at their head.—Washington Star.

More to Be Feared.

"Don't you get tired of finding fault?"

"No," replied the patient man of responsibilities. "I suppose people have a right to discover faults. What I object to is the man who assumes that faults exist and never troubles himself to investigate."—Washington Star.

THE CUNNING OF CROWS.

In India These Birds Have Been Labeled "Shreds of Satan."

Travelers in the orient have much to say about the Indian crow, a bird that for uncanny knowingness and prankish audacity has perhaps no equal. Corvus splendens—thus have ornithologists flatteringly labeled him. But a naturalist who knows the Indian crows at first hand has called them "shreds of Satan, cinders from Tartarus." To give these impish creatures their due, however, it should be said that life in India is not a little enlivened by their presence. A correspondent witnessed the following incident:

A small hawk had seized a little bird and perched on a leafless branch to devour his prey. The spectacle drew two crows to the spot. They hopped and flapped from branch to branch, noisily discussing the strategy of their intended raid.

Then one of them quietly slipped away through the surrounding foliage. At the same time his mate flew in front of the perching hawk and, hovering within a foot of his beak, maintained a bustling menace of snatching the titbit. That effectively compelled the attention of the hawk. His prey firmly grasped beneath his feet, he angrily hissed and lunged at the hovering nuisance. So lively was the skirmish that the human onlooker forgot the existence of the second crow. But now that wily bird reappeared some distance in the rear of his destined victim. With stealthy sidlings and short, noiseless flights, he drew near. Then he made a swift dash, seized the hawk's long, barred tail by the tip, hung on it with his full weight and toppled the luckless hawk in a complete back somersault from the branch! The released titbit was instantly seized by the first crow, and the clever pair bore off their booty with much triumphant cawing.—Youth's Companion.

THE GREATEST RAILROAD.

Africa's Famous Cape to Cairo Line Will Be Unique.

When all the great railroad trunks of the world have been built, a decade or two hence, four of them will appear upon the map in heavy black, indicating that they surpass all others in importance. These will be: The Pan-American, from the arctic wastes of Canada to the strait of Magellan; the Transsiberian, from the Atlantic to the Pacific across northern Europe and Asia; the Transpersian or some other line, from the southeast of Europe to India, and the Cape to Cairo.

The Pan-American and the Indo-European railways may surpass the Cape to Cairo as commercial arteries, and the Transsiberian will doubtless figure more potently as a strategic line, but for the sheer interest of the country traversed—for the picturesque variety and romantic appeal of the panoramas running like double cinematograph films past the car windows—the great African trunk can never know a rival.

Six thousand miles across 65 degrees of latitude; a score of climates, and the lands of a hundred different peoples or tribes; the second longest of the world's rivers and two of its largest lakes; the greatest dam ever built, conserving water for the world's richest lands; the most imposing and ancient of all temples; the greatest waterfall, and the most important gold and diamond mines, and finally one of the last great expanses of real wilderness, the only place in the world where the wild beasts of the jungle may be seen in their primitive state from a train—all these seen, traversed or experienced in twelve days! Surely there can never be another such railway as this.—Lewis R. Freeman in World's Work.

About Sports Generally

New York, Feb. 6.—The lifting of the draft rule from the American Association and International league wouldn't make them major league propositions. President Tom Chivington of the American association, President Ed. Barrows of the International league and the magnates of these organizations may think so but they are practically alone in their belief.

A major league is a league made up of top notch ball players. There are very few top notchers in the American association and the International league; certainly not enough to give a major league ranking. It is a safe wager that not more than 5 per cent. of the players enrolled now in the American association and the International league could stand the major league test.

Take the happenings of the past 10 years for an example. Each year the American association and the International league have sent from 50 to 100 of their players—their very best players—up into the majors. Of that number about 85 per cent were chased back each year to the minors.

If only 15 per cent of the very best players that these two leagues produced are of major league players in the American association and International league now averages little more than 5 per cent. The best players in the American association and the International league during 1914 already have been drafted or sold and these leagues face the 1915 season with nothing but the left overs.

In time those leagues might become pretty well cluttered up with major league players with the draft rule lifted because the Amrican and National leagues could not grab the stars each year. But that condition wouldn't come about for three, four or five years. Even then the American association and International leagues hardly would be able to establish a major league status in the eyes of the baseball public.

To convince that they are major leaguers, the team of these two leagues would have to show that they are capable, of beating the team on the American and National leagues. They might do it—if they got a chance. But these chances, looking at things from this angle, are very, very remote.

The magnates of the American and National leagues want to monopolize the major league fires. They don't care how many minor leagues there are but they do not yearn to see any other major league in operation. If the American association and International leagues became major leagues they would act as competitors. It would split the interest of the major leagues four ways not including the Feds.

Therefore, it seems fairly certain that the magnates of the American and National leagues would duck any plan that would call for a series of games between their clubs and those of the American association and International league. Such a series would give the American association and International league team a chance for victory. A decisive victory for them would convince the baseball public that those leagues really were major leagues.

If the teams of the American association and the International league never met those of the American and National leagues, there would be no real chance for the fans to "get a line" on the relative powers of the teams. The A. A. and International teams might set up high sounding claims. Their supporters might say they played a better brand of baseball than the teams in the American and National leagues. But that wouldn't convince the major league baseball fan. He wants to be shown.

The major league magnates have been forced to a point where the draft rule is actually lifted because of the bitter fight being waged by th Feds. But these major league magnates haven't been forced—and won't be forced—to play the American association and the International league teams a series of games so as to give these outfits a chance to show whether they can play a better game of baseball than the teams in the American and National leagues.

GRANGE STANDS FOR BIG BUSINESS

Orange County Delegates Reports Favorably on Trusts; Favors Let Alone Policy

Oswego, Feb. 6.—The 900 Grangers are not only pleased with the convention facilities this city afforded, but also of the progress made at the meetings, along the regular Grange lines. It is said that more resolutions have been presented for action this year than ever before, many of which were entirely new, while others have been before the Grange for the past ten years.

There were 525 voting delegates present, many of whom are members of our State Government or else have been honored with legislative office. The Oswego County Pomona Grange is being commended on all sides for its work during the past week in making the visitors comfortable while in the city.

In the afternoon the 525 delegates were paid off. Representatives from the First National Bank were on hand and disbursed $12,600 in currency. The delegates are allowed $2 a day and four cents a mile traveling expenses. If the delegate is married and brings his wife along he receives $4 a day and eight cents a mile traveling expenses. Nearly all of the delegates are married and all bring their wives. The handling of the bank roll is one of the big events. Paying off takes place after adjournment and with their wallets bulging the delegates leave quickly for home. The money comes for them from the Treasurer of the State Grange, having been paid in by the subordinate lodges in the way of dues. There is strong feeling that the next meeting should be held in Syracuse, although Grangers from the Western and Southwestern part of the state want it in that territory. The selection will probably be left to the Executive Committee, the procedure followed for several years past.

Last evening the sixth degree, probably the most impressive of all Grange ceremonies was conferred upon over 500 candidates. There were probably nearly 1,000 in attendance at the affair. The initiation was followed by dancing and a regular social session. Phillip's orchestra rendered the music.

Freak Trust Legislation.

The most interesting report was that on trusts presented by C. O. Warford, of Orange county. It was interesting because of its treatment of the trust question, and follows:

"We believe that the period of freak trust legislation has passed and that the trusts and the people are gradually coming together upon a common meeting ground. We believe that big business should not be prosecuted simply because it is big. We believe that a trust, so-called, may be a good one, provided it is the means of lowering prices of goods to the consumer without unnecessarily lowering wages to its workers.

"We think that perhaps it may be a good idea to halt trust legislation for a short period until we see just what results have been accomplished and allow business a chance to learn how to comply with the various requirements. We believe that perhaps in our zeal to curb the so-called trusts, we may have passed some laws that are so ambiguous that they interfere we believe that some of our trust laws are so ambigious that they interfere with legitimate business and we believe that the wording of these laws should be so simplified that the ordinary business man may consult them and know just what he can and what he cannot do in ordinary business."

MONEY IN ONIONS.

Dealers Who Held Their Crops Getting Ninety Cents a Bushel.

Money is being made in onions by Wayne county dealers. At the Zurich station 10,000 bushels are being moved by Snyder and Allerton. They were grown by W. H. Williams on a muck land at Sodus. Early in the season the crop was bought for forty cents a bushel. It is now sold for ninety cents a bushel, an advance of $5,000 over the price paid the producer. Growers who have held their stock have made money.

W. J. Barrett, of Marion, is shipping the biggest crop raised in Wayne county. Six teams are engaged hauling them to the station, about 500 bushels a day being handled. Mr. Barrett has forty acres of muck.

John Okay, of Marion, on a farm of eighteen acres of muck land raised 2,500 bushels of onions, 1,300 bushels of carrots and 800 crates of celery.

W. C. Cunningham, of Wolcott, one of the big dealers and a former resident of Oswego, has shipped four cars and cleared out his storehouse.

Sodus market quotations are ruling as follows: Apples, $1.60 to $2 per barrel; beans, white medium, $2.25 bu.; beans, white imperial, $3 bu.; beans, red, $3 bu.; butter, creamery, 35c lb.; butter, dairy, 28c; eggs, 35c; eggs, storage 27c doz.; potatoes, 30c bu.; poultry, live, 11 to 12c lb.; poultry, dressed, 14c lb.; chickens, dressed 14c lb.; ducks, live, 12c lb.; ducks, dressed, 15c lb.; lamb, $8 cwt.; mutton, $6 cwt.; veal, dressed, $13 cwt.; pork, dressed, $9 cwt.; hay, $12 to $14 ton; alfalfa, $13 to $15 ton; straw, baled, $7 to $9 ton; wheat, $1.25 bu.; oats, new, 50c bu.; cabbage, Danish, $10 to $11 ton.—Palladium.

The Cause of Drafts.

Why is it that windows and doors are frequently ill fitting? There is, says a woodworker, nothing wrong with the wood itself, nor with the workmanship, as a rule, nor with the fit, at the outset at least, but the whole trouble is due to the wood being unseasoned, or, rather, only partially seasoned, at the time it is made up.

A CURIOUS ORDEAL

Plight of a Man Who Almost Felt Death Touch Him.

IN A VAT OF BOILING WATER.

His Vivid Story of His Sensations as He Tumbled Helpless on His Back on a Bale of Raw Silk in the Seething Liquid and His Tardy Rescue.

A man who is now at the head of one of the largest establishments for dyeing silks in this country tells a story of a strange and thrilling adventure that he passed through when he was still only the superintendent of the "boiling room."

"Silk," he says in telling the story, "has been the means of my living, and once it saved my life. Have you ever been in a room where they boil the raw silk? It's a hot, steaming place, with great bubbling vats that are sunk to a level with the floor. The raw silk, in bales, all fluffy and sticky, comes in on rolling trucks and is dumped into the vats. The mass has to be stirred about a good deal before it gets soaked though and goes under.

"Just before the noon hour one day a truck came in with two bales on it.

"'Dump them into No. 6 vat,' I told the men. 'I'll stir them if you fellows want to go to dinner.'

"When they had gone I began to look around for the stirring fork. I couldn't find it anywhere. 'Confound Bill!' I said to myself. 'He loses everything.'

"I had hardly got the words out of my mouth when my foot went off the edge of the vat. I felt myself falling and I was seized with the full conviction of death.

"I had time to think over just how terribly hot the boiling water would feel and to wonder how much of me would be left when the men came back from dinner. Then I felt myself land flat on my back on the mass of floating silk.

"To this day I can see the very look of the old smoky roof as I lay on the island of silk with the boiling water on all sides. It was horribly hot there. The perspiration started out all over me, and I felt that I must move.

"First, however, I shouted as loudly as I could. When no one answered I cautiously tried to turn on my side. The bale of fiber began slowly to roll over. Nearly paralyzed with terror, I threw out one arm. It was just enough change in balance. I felt the rolling motion stop. Then I knew it wouldn't do to move. I lay on my back, poised on the middle of the bale, and wailed for help. After a minute or two I began to realize that the silk was slowly sinking into the vat.

"You could hardly notice the motion. At first I could look out of the corner of my eye and see the edge of vat No 8. A little later, when I looked again, it was out of my line of vision. I couldn't move without having the bale roll over, and if I remained still I would go down inch by inch into the scalding water below.

"I can remember that I became a little hysterical. It's funny what tricks the mind plays.

"'This is dyeing with a vengeance,' I said aloud, and I even laughed as I said it.

"It was growing hotter. Steam had begun to percolate through the silk, and I was wet through with the stifling clouds that rose from the surface of the water. I had no idea of time. By and by, however, some one answered my shouts. The door opened and two men came running across the room.

"'Get a pole!' shouted one.

"I knew that would be fatal; the slightest push and I would roll over into the steaming stew.

"'Boys,' cried I, 'don't touch me or it will be all over! One of you turn off the feed pipe. Let the other man go down the ladder. The pipe that empties this vat is on the left. Turn it on—full. Do it quick!'

"I could hear the chug, chug of the steam being cut off from the vat. A moment later I could see the wet rim that broadened round the edges, and I knew the water was falling. It took half an hour to empty No. 6. For awhile the two men ran round like excited June bugs. Then they got a rope and sat on the edge of the vat watching me with great staring eyes.

"As the water ran out the silk sank now on one side, now on the other. Once it started to roll. Both the men grunted and sat up very straight. Suddenly one of them cried out:

"'There's the bottom!'

"I felt the mass of silk settle against something. I heard the last water gulp as it ran out. Then I fainted away."—Youth's Companion.

Her Royal Nibs.

"Well, is our dinner party going off all right tonight?"

"I hope so."

"And what are we to have?"

"I don't know as yet. The cook is to give me an audience at 4:30."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

OLD-TIME QUACK MEDICINE.

The entire superstructure of fraud in medicine has for its foundations secrecy and mystery. Take away these elements, and that gigantic monument to human credulity — the "patent medicine" business crumbles. Hence the frantic efforts of those who have built fortunes through the exploitation of nostrums in opposing every movement that would permit the public to know the drugs it is taking in "patient medicines." A forgotten chapter in quackery is related by the Journal of the American Medical Association.

About 150 years ago Mrs. Stephens in England claimed to have discovered a cure for "gravel and stone in the bladder and kidneys." So skilfully did she call her wares that she deluded ignorant and educated alike into a belief in her discovery. Dr. David Hartley, physician and philosopher, collected and published reports of 150 cases—his own among them—showing the value of Mrs. Stephen's "cure."

Convinced that Mrs. Stephens had discovered a boon to suffering humanity, many urged her to make public the secret of her formula. Quacklike she refused, but—also quack-like—she offered to give up the formula for £5,000 ($25,000). Attempts were made to raise this amount by public subscription, but without success. In spite of the fact that many contributed to this fund, only about £1,300 were raised. Parliament was then petitioned to make a grant, which, in due time, it did. Mrs. Stephens got her £5,000 and the public got her "formula." The latter was published in the London Gazette. The "cure" consisted of egg shells, snails (shells and all), hips and haws, ashkeys, swine cress and various other vegetables all burned to a cinder and the ash mixed with camomile flowers and fennel and other vegetables. But alas! Now that the public knew what was in Mrs. Stephen's nostrum, it would have none of it. The cure fell into disrepute and finally died the way of all such frauds, into oblivion. Dr. Hartley died of the disease of which he believed Mrs. Stephens had cured him.—Dispatch, Utica.

As Never Before.

This feat (of the submarine U-21) was accomplished 800 miles, by the shortest route, from the nearest German base. The submarines had to sail down the North Sea, through the strait of Dover and the English Channel, out into the Atlantic, and then up St. George's Channel into the Irish Sea. On the way to their work of destruction in the Irish Sea they sank another British ship off Havre. The development of the underwater warship that can operate so far from its base and escape detection at will has given to the German navy a weapon the effectiveness of which it is not possible to overestimate. Merchant shipping is powerless before it, and warships cannot guard successfully against its attacks. The Zeppelins may terrorize the coast cities, but the submarines do the work of destruction at sea, and menace the naval supremacy of the British as it has not been threatened before since the war began.—World, N. Y.

SUNDAY SPOKE ON FAITH

The Basis of All Business Is Faith, Declares the Evangelist; He Calls Prayer Meeting a Farce

Thursday afternoon Mr. Sunday took as his text Mark, XI:24: "Therefore, I say unto you, whatsoever things ye desire, when ye pray, believe that ye receive them, and ye shall have them."

He said in part:

That is, the things you desire when you pray, if you believe they shall be given to you, "What things soever ye desire." That's a personal. "When ye pray," not when you are gossiping about your neighbors, "when ye pray, believe and they shall be given unto the president of the United States, the king of England or the emperor of China, but by God himself.

I believe that no grace is more highly commended in all Scriptures than faith. Faith is the real essential root of religion and if you fail to possess faith you would not be a Christian. Faith exercises and develops like the muscles of your body.

Faith Parent of Love.

Faith in some respects rather seems to change and assimilate us more to the character of God. Faith is the parent of love. If there is no faith there is no love, if there is no faith there is no service. From faith all other graces spring. Remember, that without faith there is no love. Faith will grow if you exercise it.

There are a lot of people in the church today who have not as much faith as when they joined the church twenty-five years ago, and that is because they didn't exercise their faith and they let it wither away through disuse. If you don't use what you have you will lose it.

God will manifest His power more when He sees evidences of faith. The more God sees evidences of faith the stronger is His grace. Faith is like the muscular system of the body, if you exercise it, it will grow. If you don't, it will not; if you exercise it, it will make more muscles, more blood, more nerves; it is like reading a physical culture book. If you just sit still and read it, it will not do you any good.

That is one of the worst features I know. You must believe and have absolute faith. Some people read the Bible and think they know, but that is really nothing but second-hand religion. They lack faith.

Faith Basis of Business.

The efficacy of prayer is witnessed in service, and that service does not mean having faith or preaching some godforsaken heresy. Why, 90 per cent. of the business done in this country is through credit or faith. If I drop a letter in the letter box, I have faith that one of Uncle Sam's men will deliver the letter. Faith in God brings peace and love and good will among men.

When I started to play baseball I was weak physically. My mother is the only member of my family remaining, except myself. When I was a boy I was very weak, but when I started on the baseball diamond I began to work hard to build myself up and I succeeded mighty well. I wouldn't take a million dollars for my experience on the baseball field.

I don't see why so many people are begging for the crumbs from God's table, when he would rather give them a whole bake shop. I never could understand why you wouldn't rather be a millionaire in grace than a hobo. God wants you to be millionaires in grace. Faith is above all other things. Faith honors God and benefits the soul.

Marriage Built on Faith.

"Whatsoever things ye desire when ye pray, believe and it shall be given you." Why, you can't turn around without faith; you can't eat a meal without faith. They are building a skyscraper downtown. Why? Because they believe that somebody will come along and rent the offices, but they haven't ranted them yet. That is faith.

They are building a great railroad out west. The highest grade they have got is 2 per cent; they have tunneled mines over 175 feet deep to keep the low grade, and it cost them $150,000,000, and they have not sold a ticket nor hauled a pound of freight. But they have faith.

The marriage system is built on faith; you had faith that that man would be true to you or you wouldn't have said yes. He had faith that you would be true to him, or you bet he wouldn't have said yes. Without faith in the family, the family goes to pieces.

Why are you here? Because of faith. I told you I would come out and preach, so it's faith—faith. Faith is expectation founded on a promise.

When you sit down and eat a meal you don't understand how the food is going to assimilate through your body; your understanding has nothing to do with it, so don't go to hell because you can't understand all there is the Bible. Don't be a fool.

You do multitudes of things every day and you don't know why you do them. If you were asked why do some things, you couldn't tell to save your life. There are lots of things in the Bible that if you ask me to explain I couldn't do it to save my life, but I believe them. Don't ever swell up with pride and think that your intellectual development is such that you can understand everything there is in the Bible.

God's blessing follows obedience. Stop your praying. If you pray for a blessing when you are not willing to obey you never will be blessed until you obey. You got the thing wrong.

Two Kinds of Promises.

The promises of the Bible are of two kinds. Now you listen to me, and don't miss this. They are absolute and they are conditional. The office of your faith is to apprehend the promises of the Bible as they are given. If they are absolute promises, regard them as such; if they are conditional promises, regard them as such; then remember that your faith is equally shown with the one as with the other, with the absolute as with the conditional, but you must not expect the fulfillment of a conditional promise unless you fulfill the condition of the promise. If you do, you deny that God has his sovereign rights, and don't forget that God has his sovereign rights.

But if you expect God to keep a promise that is conditional, if you do not fulfill the condition, then with each recurring disappointment you will be let to disbelieve in the veracity and promise of God.

Now, many of you do not know what I mean by an absolute promise or a conditional promise. Now let me illustrate an absolute promise: "I will put enmity between me and thee, between thy seed and my seed." "I will bless them that bless thee and curse them that curse thee." That was the promise of the establishments of the church, the beginning of the Jewish nation; it was absolute, not conditional.

God's Promises Are Conditional.

Now suppose the sinner don't fulfill the promise. Well, he will go to hell, if the promise is conditional. Let me illustrate: "Whosoever shall call on me in the name of the Lord, he shall be saved." Supposing he doesn't call. Well, he won't be saved, he will go to hell.

So every promise is conditional. The sinner must report and believe before God will forgive, and if the sinner fails, then there is nothing for him. If you go to God without faith and absolute faith in your heart, you insult him. There is too much effort made by men and women to place the blame for all things on God. He is not to blame. If a sinner is in hell, don't blame God; blame the sinner. If your husband is in the penitentiary, don't blame the laws of the state; blame him. If he had sense enough, he wouldn't have broken them and wouldn't be playing checkers with his nose in a cell.

"Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." If you want God's rest, you must come and get it; if you don't come, don't expect rest. You must expect the accomplishment of the conditional promise only on the ground that you fulfill the condition, and if you fulfill the condition, then you have a right to expect its accomplishment.

A revival is a fulfillment of the condition that God has laid down for his work, so salvation is conditional—conditional on your coming; if you don't come, you will be lost. These promises are infallibly certain to the individual that fulfills them as God has laid them down, and only as God has laid them down, and only if they are fulfilled as they are laid down.

There are two things in this text, one expressed and the other implied: that ye pray with faith, first. Lots of prayers are rigmarole; you go through the motion of prayer. You have not God in your mind when you pray. Wendell Phillips, the great Unitarian preacher, was preaching in Boston once and a Boston newspaper said of his sermon that it was one of the most eloquent prayers ever offered to a Boston audience.

That is the trouble; too much is given to the audience and not enough to the Lord.

I'm sick and tired of all this twaddle about temptation being necessary to test man's power of resistance. God doesn't tempt anybody. That theory is all tommyrot.

Listen to me. If you believe God is able and willing to accomplish his promise, there should be no ground for doubt. If I should ask you how many of you believe that God can save you, all would lift up their hands; but if I should ask you how many of you believe that God will save, not so many would be willing to raise their hands. The nearer you get to a matter of faith, the less the response. That is the course of the church today.

You show me a worldly church and I will show you a church that does not believe in God Almighty. One of the curses of the church today is unbelief.

Too Much Knocking in Churches.

There is too much grumbling and knocking and hairsplitting in the church. Look out you don't get to grumbling and growling and don't get to knocking. There are some things about me you don't like and there are some things about you I don't like; but there is more about you I do like, so I don't spend too much time thinking about the others.

ondemn the speyticism in the church and dispel it from your heart, and don't feel that God is obligated when you go to him and ask him for something. Moody spent the last six years of his life doing that.

If you believe in God's ability to accomplish this promise tehere should remain no ground for doubt. Supposing you should invite a person to come to your home to receive from you a gift of money or clothes, and suppose they should come and immediately they should begin to question your motive in extending the invitation or doubt your willingness to give; would you feel like doing anything for such a person? Then I don't believe God Almighty feels like doing anything for you if you come into His presence and ask if he will or can.

I wonder that God is willing to do anything. I wonder that God Almighty is doing as well as he is with the bunch he has to work with. God interprets a doubt as to his willingness as calls for high provocation—yes, high provocation.

Let be give you an illustration in Psalm lxxviii: "He smote the rock that the water gushed out and the streams overflowed." For 430 years the Jews had been in bondage; ever since Joseph's brothers had lied about him to Jacob. There had been a famine and God had sent Moses to lead them out of bondage, and he took them up to the promised land, but instead of entering the promised land, they came to the city of Kadesh Barnea. There they halted and then they appointed a committee—appointed a committee.

Recasts Vocabulary Not Truth

Yes, and the devil has been at that job in some respects ever since. They appointed twelve and they brought in a majority and a minority report. They agreed that it was flowing with milk and honey, but they said it was peopled by the sons of Anak and they were as grasshoppers in their sight, but Caleb and Joshua said, that cuts no ice; come, let's go in; but they didn't go; they stopped at Kadesh Barnea and discussed ways and means and methods and chewed the rag instead of going in.

Every age has got to recast its vocabulary to preach the gospel to the people. I am preaching for the age in which I live. I am just recasting my vocabulary to the people of my age instead of Joshua's age. You all know what I mean, and I will preach the gospel in the language of today.

We don't recast the truth, so they said, "Let us go in," and they would not do it. They returned and wandered up and down the wilderness for thirty-eight years and left their bones to perish and bleach as monuments of their folly, and at last, after all that time, only two got back that were grown to be men. Only two came back, Caleb and Joshua. Why? They believed in God, that is the reason.

The best way to lose out is to be just a compromise. God despises a trimmer; that is the reason so many people fall today; they are trimming their sails to catch a passing breeze of popularity; they are afraid of that old money bags over there in the pew, afraid they will lose a few of the pennies, afraid of that old devil out there. I am not. That is the difference.

Go to God in faith and the firm conviction that God will grant you a privilege. In John xv; 7: "If ye abide in me and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will and it shall be done unto you." I think these are the most remarkable verses in the Bible. "If ye abide in me."

The words were either the words of the son of God or an insane man. I am not the son of God. I am not dine. I wouldn't make that promise. A man said to me, "Don't you think that God took a great risk when he made that promise?" I said, "No." I believe that God knew that a great many people would not fulfill the conditions and he would not be very busy answering that prayer.

Prayers Don't Keep God Busy.

You never keep God busy answering his promise. You never miss a meal to pray. You never miss any special gatherings to pray. There are a great many elders, preachers and deacons here in the same condition. If I were a pastor of a church and could take the mawl and knock the indicator to register 100 for preaching and 50 for prayer, or prayer 100 and preaching 50. I would rather be able to pray 100 and preach 50. Doctor Stevens, of New York city, said in his late years: "I don't wish that I had preached more or more often, but I do wish that I had prayed more."

The biggest farce of the average church is the prayer meeting. Take the average church member prays about three minutes a day and the preacher prays about five minutes. A friend of mine once met an elder and said to him, walking down the aisle and stroking his whiskers: "I'll bet the average elder doesn't pray more than five minutes each day," and the elder replied, "I think we pray more than that." My friend said, "I don't think so. Yes, look like a decent fellow, and I'll tell you what I'll do with you. You go home and when you get down to pray look at your watch and look again when you stop, and then come back and tell me how far I was wrong."

The fellow did not show up for three days. And my friend spoke to him. He said, "How about that, elder?" The elder replied, "I looked at my watch when I started and I looked at it when I was through, and by gosh, I thought she had stopped."

Faith Like a Headlight.

What is faith? Faith is the beginning of something for God, the end of which you can't see, but which you believe. It is like the headlight of a locomotive, looking into the future that has not been covered. Experience is like the rear light of a train. It casts the light over the ground that has already been covered. One is the headlight and the other the taillight of an automobile. Learn this truth in prayer.

The Almighty foreordained that you go to heaven if you repent. He has foreordained that you go to hell if you don't; so do your own voting.

If you want to see the pictures in God's hall of fame, go home and read the eleventh chapter of Hebrews.

There is less excuse for lack of faith today than there was in the brave days of old. But the shallow faith in the church today is put to shame by the faith of them.

If the preachers, or most of them, would consider it a privilege to preach the gospel instead of a duty, they would sweat out more collars and win more souls to God. The distinction you have drawn between duty and privilege has created sin, and that sin has separated you and the church from God.

In some the prayer has got to be a duty. The duty will do much, but prayer is more than a duty. It is a great privilege. It is a great privilege for me to have my name written in the Book of Life. If I could get the church to look at this from the standpoint of privilege, you would pray with 1000 times more zeal.

Suppose I would go downtown and Mrs. Sunday a dress and and bring it home and say: "Well, Nell, I have bought you a dress. I thought it was my duty." "Well," she would say, "you keep your pattern." It is a great privilege that I have to buy Nell a dress or a hat. Suppose the president should come to Philadelphia. It would be your privilege to entertain him. Look at religion in the standpoint of a privilege.

It is my privilege to preach you and the greatest job on earth.

Unbelief Walls You From God

Unbelief builds a wall between you and God. Unbelief stops your communicating with God and God communicating with you.

Some people think that a revival comes because God has decreed it. Some of you would sit until you were mildewed waiting for the spirit to move you. If it rained you would simply assert that it was raining so you couldn't begin work, and if it was too hot you would exclaim, "Oh, my, ain't it hot." Just say to yourselves that it is a great privilege to serve God. Just exercise your faith; cast off the flabbiness; the dry rot and become active.

That is what is the matter with the church today. If you were sick and the doctor comes along and gives you some bitter medicine that will counteract the disease, you do not growl at him, no. He is a great doctor. Do the same with the Lord. Teh base following were cast out of thep romised land, through their unbelief, notwithstanding that God had given permission that they should enter into the promised land. They did not go. Because of what? Unbelief. They came to Kadesh. If you will look into the Bible you will find that condition, you will find that the promises are not exactly suited to your condition.

The Lord God is always with you if you stand four square for him, you bet. Why did those of old whom I have told you about the fiery furnace, why did not they receive their answer? They died without having received the promise. They believed. God gave them something better perhaps.

We are on this side of the cross and we look back, and we see the cross, but it is empty; the grave is empty.

Churches Should be Ashamed.

The church of God today ought to hang its head in shame and disgrace to think that there is so little faith in God, Jesus Christ and the Bible. Those other men on the other side of the cross died without having received the promise and the promise was Jesus, the promise was the seed of the woman. God provided some better things for them.

Put on thy strength. Oh, Zion, put out some of your groaning and moanings in prayer and put in some acclamations of triumph and belief. God is the same yesterday, today, and forever, and sits on the throne in his glory. It was he who said, "What things soever ye desire when ye pray, believe and ye shall receive them."

Salvation is double-barreled. God will save you from the guilt of sin. He will keep you from the guilt of sin. He will keep you from the power of sin. That isn't all. He will save you from the presence of sin. Learn the words; treasure up the promises.

LIVED 25 DAYS UNDER RUINS

The Experiences of Earthquake Victim Turned Black Hair White

By Brixton D. Allairs

Rome, Feb. 8.—Michele Caiolo, who was rescued from the earthquake ruins at Paterno yesterday, after being entombed for 25 days, told his story here today. Caiolo, who is thirty years old, was brought here and placed in a hospital for treatment. Despite his experience, he is in fairly good physical condition and will recover.

"I had resigned myself to death when I was rescued," said Caiolo. "I never expected to get out alive. I was sleeping when the earthquake came and the next thing I knew I was under the ruins of a stable. The straw furnished a bed for me and the beams had fallen in such a way that I had room to move my body. First the pangs of starvation and thirst nearly set me insane and then the loneliness drove me into temporary fits of delirium. When my hunger became so intense that I could stand it no longer, I munched the straw like a horse and found that it contained some nourishment although it was a sickening diet. The snow, which fell upon the ruins, melted in the sunshine and I soaked up the water in my garments and drank it.

The straw and the melted snow saved my life. By degrees I got used to the helplessness and loneliness of my position, although my body became partly paralyzed. I got so weak that I would sleep for many hours. At times I dreamed I was in the fields, and the horror of my position came back with double force when I awoke.

Caiolo lost thirty pounds and his hair had turned white. When rescued he did not even know what month it was.

Gardner, Kan.—Members of the Mother's club adopted a resolution which asked them to refrain from gossip and to shun those of either sex who talk scandal.

ELEVEN DEAD AT I.O.O.F. HOME

Reported That Three More Persons Were Found "In the Way"

New York, Feb. 8.—The mystery in the alleged wholesale killing of the inmates of the German Odd Fellows' home at Tuckahoe, near Yonkers, deepened today when Coroner James P. Dunn received a letter from a former orderly in the home, who wrote that two months ago an aged couple and a small child were poisoned and killed because they were in the way. This increased the number of reported dead to eleven.

The orderly gave the names of the three additional victims and Chief of Police Wolff of Yonkers will meet the latest informant in the hope of obtaining additional information which will lead to indictments of those responsible for the crimes. The orderly stated that while the institution was in Unionport, irritant poisons, such as arsenic and morphine, were used to do away with aged persons who became too great a care for "lazy attendants," but that chloroform was substituted as a means of murder after the home was moved to Tuckahoe.

In his letter the former orderly declared that he could furnish information which would not only corroborate the charges made by Frederick Mors, the orderly now under detention in the psychopatic ward in Bellevue hospital, whose confession to Assistant District Attorney Murphy of Manhattan, started the investigation of the deaths of aged persons but would also substantiate the charges that children in the annex to the home were tortured by the matrons. He said that one method of torture was to bind a child's hand behind his back until a confession of some misdeed that had been committed was forced from him by pain. Then, guilty or not, the child was beaten.

Coroner Dunn is investigating a report current among inmates of the home that a number of the alleged poison victims were buried alive, having only been rendered unconscious by the poison.

LATE WAR BULLETINS

London, Feb. 8.—British casualties during the first six months of war reached the enormous total of 104,000 men. This was announced by Premier Asquith in the House of Commons this afternoon. The announcement did not come as a shock to the House as it had been prepared for it.

Petrograd, Feb. 8.—Russia has another war on her hands. A revolt against the demination of the Mongolian government by Russia has broken out. Five hundred soldiers were dispatched today from Mukden, Manchuria, to take the field against 2000 Mongolian insurgents concentrated near the Kin Ting and Tfian.

Berlin, Feb. 8.—By Wireless—The British forces in Egypt are menaced from the west as well as from the east, according to information given out by the official German news bureau today. It stated that a dispatch published by an Italian newspaper announced that 20,000 Bedouin tribesmen had occupied the Siwah Oasis, southwest of Cairo, and that Sudanese troops in the British army were deserting, one officers taking 250 men into the Turkish army from Suez.

ROUMANIAN SOIL HAS BEEN DESECRATED

By Franklin P. Merrick.

Paris, Feb. 8.—Austrian troops are reported to have violated Rumanian neutrality by attempting to force a passage across Rumanian territory, in the Danube valley, 20 miles east of the Iron Gate. A dispatch to the Journay states that fighting followed in which the Austrians were put to flight. This incident is expected to have a powerful bearing upon Russian's future intentions regarding her entrance into the war.

The Journal correspondent says that the Austrians opened fire on the Rumanian guards near Turnu Severin, but that the Rumanian forces, being reinforced, drove back the Austrains who took their wounded with them.

Turnu Severin is on a railway running from Temesvar to Bucharest and Austrian troops have been operating in that district to occupy strategy territory which would prevent Russia from sending troops to reinforce the Servians.

U. S. WILL HOLD GERMANY RESPONSIBLE FOR CONTINGENCIES

Washington, Feb. 8.—The United States in the future will make it clear to Germany that even a possibility of an American staeamship being blown up by a German torpedo is regarded with the greatest apprehension by this Government, according to the views of the Administration today.

The United States does not intend to let Germany throw off the yoke of responsibility for the possible sinking of an American ship by means of the Admiralty's warning. This was made known in official circles. Although the situation has been eased by the publication of the full text of the German proclamation, the warning still remains containing the suggestion that a German submarine may at any time mistake a neutral for a British ship and send her to the bottom of the sea.

CONGRESS WILL DEMAND PROTECTION FOR U.S. TRADE

Washington, Feb. 8.—The first action in Congress demanding protection for American trade from the dangers created by the German paper brockade of Germany against Great Britain and France was cotnained in a joint resolution offered by Senator LaFollotte today. The resolution authorizes the President to convey to all neutral nations the desires of this Government that an international conference be held for the purpose of promoting the co-operation and through its friendly offices a federation of neutral nations, to protect their rights and to seek an early establishment of peace in Europe. The preamble recites that the war has brought about unprecedented conditions encroaching upon the rights of neutral trade and endangering the situation of neutral peoples.

CHARGE OF PIRACY AGAINST GERMANY

British Merchantmen to Hoist Neutral Flags; Press Fears Loss of Prestige as Result of Order

By FREDERICK WERNER.

Berlin, Feb. 8.—Via Amsterdam.—Mingled scorn and indignation are directed against England in the Berlin newspapers today. The scorn is due to the fact that the British admiralty finally admitted that it had ordered the Lusitania to hoist the American flag while the indignation was aroused by the following paragraph in the statement issued by the admiralty in London last night:

"To destroy a ship, non-combatant crew, and cargo, as Germany announced her intention of doing, is nothing less than an act of piracy on the high seas."

The indignation expressed by the newspapers over this accusation of piracy was only a reflection of that felt at the German admiralty.

"Why must England descend to vituperation and abuse to strengthen her cause," one official asked when he was requested to comment on the British statement.

"England declared the North se a war zone, but Germany did not accuse her of piracy. She planted mines which have blown up neutral ships that disobeyed her warning but even then England was not branded a pirate.

The English government gave one day's notice as to the war zone it had fixed. We gave two weeks' notice. The neutral countries can judge for themselves which showed the greater regard for non-belligerents.

"Germany's record is clear. England's is not."

"Smoked out," is the way one leading paper refers to England's admission that the Lusitania was ordered to hoist the American flag. It refers sarcastically to the fact that "England confesses it needs the help of the American flag to protect its shipping, and continues:

"Our submarines have driven [illegible] to harass shipping at England's very threshhold. England knows her danger. Now she attempts to involve neutral nations.

"Americans, however, can recognize England's purpose. They are not to be misled by the deception for which England has become [illegible]."

RUSSIAN COLD STEEL WON FIGHT IN POLAND

By FRANCIS LAVELLE MURRAY.

Petrograd, Feb. 8.—The Russian victory at Goumine was won after a seven hour hand-to-hand conflict in which the Germans advanced in masses five lines deep only to be mowed down by deadly machine gun fire or impaled upon the bayonets of the Czar's troops. The fight was the most sanguinary that has yet occurred on the blood-soaked fields of Poland.

A correspondent of the Novoe Vremya, who was permitted to go to the firing line today telegraphed the story of the great battle, which ended in a complete victory for the Russians.

"The object of the enemy," he says, "was to break through at Goumine, which the Germans regarded as the key-position. The assault began at 11 o'clock in the morning, when the enemy advanced in five lines. The densely packed columns were met by our artillery and rifle fire. The first rows fell. Momentary confusion ensued, but the columns closed and the foe again came on, breaking into our trenches. The foremost begged quarter while those behind kept charging forward.

"We bayonetted all within reach. Behind our ruined embrasures new ones were found of piles of the bodies of German soldiers. This engagement continued until 12 o'clock when there was a brief lull in the main attack.

"Between 1 and 2 o'clock, German reinforcements poured in. More bayonet work followed while our shrapnel wrought great havoc. The hostile columns, panic,stricken, surged backward but a machine gun in the rear drove them forward. They desperately sought to penetrate our line in the front and on the flanks.

"We then received reinforcements and the men without firing a shot charged with the bayonet. Hand-to-hand fighting with cold steel lasted until 6 P.M. All in the foremost ranks of the Germans were annihilated except a handful of wounded. Not a single man of those who broke into our trenches returned alive."

BERLIN REPORTS SLIGHT LOSSES FOR SUNDAY

Berlin, by wireless, Feb. 8.—Success for the German troops operating in the Argonne is claimed in an official report from the German Sstaff issued here this afternoon. It admits slight loss in the neighborhood of Las Base. The report follows;

"In the wester theater the battle for our position continues. On the caanl southwest of Las Basse we have captured part of a trench held by the enemy. In the Argonne we took part of our opponents' positions yesterday.

On the Prussian frontier southeast of the plain of the Lakes and in Uoland on the right bank of the Vistula a few successful engagements of local importance occurred."

FRENCH ARTILLERY PROVED TO BE SUPERIOR SUNDAY

Paris, Feb. 8.—The capture of a German trench to the southwest of Carency which lies northwest of Arras is the chief announcement made in this afternoon'5s official statement.

the statement follows:

"From the sea to the Oise there was an artillery duel yesterday. This was rather violent in the region of Cuincey. To the southwest of Carency we succeeded in a surprise attack from a German trench which was blown up by a mine and its defenders were killed and taken prisoners.

On the Aigne front and in Champange there were intermittent bombardments. The fficiency of our artillery fire was demonstrated at several points. West of Hill No. 191 our batteries checked an attempted attack. In the Argoine an attack by the enemy near Fontaine-Madame was repulsed."

ROME'S BIG FIRE

Rome, Feb. 8.—Fire early today swept through the Corcoran and Purdy blocks, in the heart of the business district and caused damage estimated at $175,000.

So rapidly did the blaze spread that the Utica and Oneida fire departments weer asked to send aid, but later this order was countermanded when the Rome firemen, after a hard fight, brought the fire under control.

The Corcoran block was destroyed and the Purdy and Gleasmann Power Blocks badly damaged. The fire started in Harry W. Durfee's candy kitchen and whiel he sought to extinguish the flames an explosion of gasoline vapor occurred blowing him through a window. He was seriously injured.

PRESIDENT CAN'T BE KEPT FROM GOING WEST

Washington, Feb. 8.—President Wilson otday definitely settled he will be in San Francisco on March 21 to visit the Exposition.

If an extra session of Congress is held his trip will be curtailed and his stay will be limited. Only in the event of extraordinary circumstances will his trip be cancelled.

Ithaca, N. Y.—O. E. Roeckgaber has equipped his automobile with wireless apparatus, sending messages a distance of ten miles while the vehicle is in motion."

Great Britain's 3,000,000 Volunteers

The British Parliament was asked yesterday to provide for the support of 3,000,000 soldiers. This request must be taken to show that 3,000,000 troops will be available for service before the year ends.

There has been a great indefiniteness about the estimates of available strength made by the British War Office. It has been admitted that new armies about a million strong would be ready for service on the Continent this spring. But heretofore the total of volunteers likely to be raised had been put to about 2,000,000. The great handicap to the development of British military strength has been a lack of equipment rather than a lack of men. The volunteers could not be clothed, armed and officered, and until the deficiency in material could be made good there was little reason for stimulating enlistments. Evidently the limitations on Lord Kitchener's organizing activities have now been largely removed.

The war in Europe is going to be decided by second and third line troops. Each belligerent will have to draw to the limit on national resources. If Germany puts 9,000,000 men in all in the field. France will have to put 5,000,000 and Great Britain a like number. When it comes down to what the military writers call the levy en masse, all material will be found to be of about the same value and Germany will cease to possess the tremendous advantage she enjoyed at the outbreak of the war through her superiority in well-traihed soldiers.

Great Britain has had to do in one year the work which the great military nations of the Continent have spread over many years. It is an enormous tribute to the energy and public spirit of her people that she is already approaching the point where she can enter the contest on equal terms both with her allies and with her enemies.—New York Tribune.

War, Speculation and the Price of Wheat

While bread has remained stationary in price during the last half-year orgy of utter economic waste, the price of wheat has been advancing steadily, until the margin of profit for the bakers has dwindled to a point which, they say, compels them to allow the price of bread to follow suit. There seems to be a general acquiescence in the logic of their argument. On the other hand there is fast developing a public criticism of those who quote the wheat and flour prices—the wheat brokers and the flour millers. Charges of "speculation," of corners and combinations, are flying thicker and faster. The contention is made that the surplus of wheat in this country is great enough to permit the exportation of 8,000,000 bushels a week to the European belligerents without contracting before next harvest time the supply normally required for the feeding of America. The administration plans an investigation.

By all means let us have an investigation and a thorough one. Let it begin with the acreage of wheat under cultivation and the supply in storage, and let it take in not only the practices in force on the floors of the various produce exchanges, but also the relations of the millers with these exchanges and among themselves, and finally the condition of competition among the bakers. There have been corners which boosted the price of wheat without adequate economic excuse, and combinations in restraint of trade to reap the full benefit of an apparent economic shortage have been only too common. Let us find out if in this period of unemployment and business depression such things are adding to our burdens.

But the fact that the normal effect of a great European war is to cause a shortage of food in this country should not be lost sight of in our zeal for cheap bread, and as a people under emotional pressure we should avoid the danger of confusing legitimate speculation with corners, wash sales and combinations. The holding of a commodity for a higher price, provided that price is the result of a genuine shortage, has a distinct economic value for the community, since it distributes the available supply more evenly over periods of plenty and of famine. If the supply of wheat available in the United States will not prove equal at normal prices to all demands, foreign and domestic, then it is much better that we pay $1.60 a bushel for it now and possibly $2.50 later, modifying our consumption of it accordingly, than that we pay 80 cents a bushel now and $5 a bushel when the pinch comes.—The Sun.

THOSE OUTSIDE

It has been claimed that two-thirds of the people of the country are outside the churches. What the percentage is of the people of Fulton who are outside the churches is not known, yet the determining of such statistics would prove, no doubt, highly interesting.

In spite of the wide variety of religious faiths which are represented in almost every section of the country it has been shown that more than one-half our people will not relate themselves to either the Christian or Jewish, Catholic or Protestant form of religion. When these facts look the church worker in the face so boldly, it is cause for serious consideration. While it is true the line of demarkation between those inside the church and those outside is not what it used to be, and that many people of high character and earnest life are outside the church, it is self evident the church organizations have a big problem on their hands.

Perhaps the greatest one of the barriers to church growth has been class distinction. Almost a million immigrants came to our shores yearly, and with their peculiar customs and strange language they have been regarded as outsiders.

The public school is the one institution that is bringing all classes together, yet because of the early age at which the pupils leave school these different people with their varying interests and clashing prejudices are left among the class of outsiders.

The principle of the united churches is big enough to leave no outsiders. The need of every outsider is for the principle the church gives. Does it not seem strange then that two-thirds of the people of this country are outside the churches?

The National Chamber of Commerce and the Shipping Bill

The power which the new Chamber of Commerce of the United States can wield was well illustrated in the case of the shipping bill. There could be no questioning the sentiment of the business men of America toward this strange experiment, but how make that sentiment felt in Washington? The newspapers of the country contributed much toward the defeat of the bill, but there can be no question of the powerful influence exerted by the Chamber of Commerce's imprssive vote. The fact that the President of the United States and the Secretary of the Treasury were present as guests of the chamber added distinction to the gathering and gave fitting significance to its decision.

We are glad to see in this incident only a beginning of the work which this new institution can do. The business men of America have clear views which are not only entitled to influence legislation and administration policies, but which are absolutely essential to the formation of national opinion. It is not a question of a small, self-seeking body of men. The chamber already stands as the most representative body of business men the country has seen. It can focus at Washington upon pending measures the facts and reasoning of the expert business minds of the country. This service to the entire nation can be of inestimable value.—Tribune, N.Y.

The biggest of German steamships interned at other American ports is the North German Lloyd liner Kronprizessin Cecile of 19,503 tons at Boston, where also are the North German Lloyd, liners of comparatively small tonnage, Koln, Wittekind and Willehad.

The Hamburg-American lihers Amerika and Cincinatti are docked at Boston and the Bulgaria and Siberia at Baltimore. The Rhein and Neckar of the North German Lloyd fleet, also are at Baltimore. The Rhaetia and the Prinz Oskar of the Hamburg-American line are at Philadelphia and the Georgia of the same line at New Orleans, where the North German Lloyd steamship Breslau also is laid up.

The Deutsch-Amerikan Petroleum Company has eight ships out of commission. The biggest, the Jupiter, of 10,073 gross tonnage, is at Norfolk. The others are the Delphin at Norfolk, the Buffalo and Phoebus at San Francisco, the Elms and Philadelphia and the Meppen, Nagen and Kiewa at this port.

—Other steamships stalled in American ports are the Hohenfels at Savannah, the Serapis and Neptune at San Francisco and Ockenfels at Boston, and at this port the Adamsturm, Portonia, Clara Mennig, Harburg and Maia.

The total Hamburg-American tonnage in round numbers at all American portsis 250,000; North German Lloyd, 150,000; Deutsch-Amerikan Petroleum Company, 50,000; other steamships in American waters, $30,000.

WATERSHED CORPORATION WILL MEET MARCH 1

The Board of Directors of the Oswego River Watershed Corporation met at the rooms of the Syracuse Chamber of Commerce Friday and made arrangements for the annual meeting of the organization, which will be held in Syracuse, March 1. The board selected Richard W. Carr of Oswego as permanent secretary at a salary of $1200 a year. President F. A. Emerick of Oswego presided at the meeting.

J. Walter Ackerman, an engineer from Auburn, was in attendance at the meeting in the capacity of advisory expert on certain water problemns now before the directors, and to come before the stockholders at the annual meeting. There are seventy members making up the corporation, and the majority of them will be at Syracuse the first Monday in March.

The directors present at the session included the following: F. A. Emerick, president; R. F. Whitney of Oswego, H. L. Paddock and J. H. Howe of Fulton, A. D. Merry and C. E. Loomis of Phoenix, S. B. Storer of Baldwinsville, P. B. Kendig and H. R. Micks of Seneca Falls, and C. W. Tooke of Skaneateles.

DEAR LITTLE ELF

BY I. E. HYDE FULTON N. Y.

THE little god of earthly arts, who holds his sway with human hearts, is on his way. You may not think that he's sincere, you do not know him well I fear. You will some day. Just wait until you meet the lad, and when you do you'll be so glad, you'll hug yourself. For just as true as you're alive he'll make your spirits all revive, this little elf. He'll whisper all the joys of yore, until you think Hebe's at your door with cup of youth. Don't tell me that you are surprised, you really must not close your eyes to Cupid's truth. They say he shoots his darts so straight they pierce you through and mark your fate, and, then you know by little flutters of your heart, that archer Cupid's done his part. Then on he'll go. He'll string another arrow up and dip the point into Hebe's cup and aim again. And as he lets his arrow fly, he'll hit some maiden passing by, not all in vain. For well he knows that in this game, all maidens' hearts respond the same when pierced by love. So Cupid, keep on shooting darts. The love you put in human hearts comes from above.

DIVING FOR THE CROSS

Greeks the Greatest of Swimmers and Divers

Tampa, Fla., Feb. 8.—The cross-diving ceremony, which is a part of the observance of the Feast of Epiphany was recently participated in by several thousand Greek sponge divers at Tarpon Springs, Key West, and other points along the Florida coast of the Gulf of Mexico. Mediterranean and other waters have been much depleted of sponges in recent years, causing the immigration to Florida of many Greeks, the greatest divers and swimmers in the world.

During the Feast of Epiphany scores of sponge boats, carrying all Greek men, women and children of the sponge centers, put out from the bays into the deeper waters of the Gulf. Following the offering of prayers and singing of songs, a large iron cross is thrown into the water, and the strongest swimmers and most fearless divers go overboard to recover it.

Recovery of the cross is taken as an omen of a successful year, while it is confidently believed that ill luck and disaster will come to the colonies in case it is allowed to remain in the deep. Therefore, the search, thought fraught with danger, is seldom given up until the cross is recovered. Deep running water is preferred to still water, and if the depth allows, the champions who are designated to recover the cross dive from immense heights in order to attain the greatest possible depth in their downward flight.

If the waters are too deep for diving without artificial aid, diving bells are used. Even with the aid of bells, though, the lives of the divers are endangered, as they are often forced to attain so great a depth that the pressure of the salt waters drives the blood from their nostrils and ears and prevents the expansion of their lungs. In more than one instance in recent years, strong-lunged divers have been lifeless when brought to the surface.

Three thousand Greeks will participate in the various events of the Gasparilla Carnival at Tampa, February 12 to 16, inclusive, and arrangements have been made to have the champion divers entertain the visitors from winter-bound states with their marvelous aquatic feats. The cross-diving ceremony is, of course, held too sacred for the presentation during any other than a religious festival, but visitors will be given an opportunity to witness diving operations in their every feature.

INFORMAL DRESS REQUIRED ONLY

Elks Wish It to Be Known That Evening Dress Is Non-essential

Officers of B. P. O. E. lodge, including Exalted Ruler J. W. Stevenson have announced that in every sense the charity ball to be held Monday, February 15, will be informal; that those who purchase tickets and attend this worthy entertainment need feel no embarrassment from the fact that they are not given to appearing in public in evening dress; but that man or woman, anybody and everybody will be given the benefit of Elk hospitality irregardless of the conventionalities of society life.

Private invitations to this charity ball are taboo, but the price of admission is made extremely low, $1.00 for each ticket, the proceeds going in the end to the fund that will maintain for this city a visiting nurse. The sale of tickets is in the hands of the Women's Auxiliary of the Lee Memorial hospital.

No restrictions are to be placed upon the dances at the ball. There will be the rag-time, the trots, hesitations and many of the familiar square sets, the regular two-steps and waltzes

Mayor Fox has selected the following gentlemen as aids to serve on the reception committee: J. W. Stevenson, M. A. Strumahan, O. S. Bogardus, J. E. Boland, W. L. Woodbury, J. R. Sullivan, R. J. Currier, M. B. Hargrave and L. F. Cornell.

An orchestra of rare ability will furnish the dance music, the members being made up of the following men: M. E. Reynolds and A. F. Buell, violins; David Carrol, piano; Andrew Crow, cornet; F. G. Barnes, flute; Henry Bogue, clarinet; F. G. Newton, trombone; L. A. Richardson, cello; Edward Pooler, bass viol and Herbert Adkins, drums, traps, etc.

Genevieve Champ Clark Talks Practical Patriotism

"Be patriotic and insist on American goods," says Genevieve Champ Clark, beautiful daughter of Speaker of the House of Representative. Miss Clark sends this message to American women. Buying goods "Made in U. S. A." will give employment to many now out of work, will raise the quality of American made articles, will teach us self reliance as a nation, and will make foreigners respect our products because we respect them ourselves. She has written the following article endorsing the work of the Women's National Made in U. S. A. League, of which she is an honorary chairman:

Now is the American woman's golden opportunity for practical patriotism. Perhaps some people may think that it is grossly material to say that the European war has given us a glorious opportunity for patriotism. These same people think that we should be paying our attention rather to the stricken countries of Europe. Let us help them when we can and as much as we can but let us not forget that unlike charity "patriotism is strictly a home industry."

To recur to the days of the Pilgrim Fathers, without which no story is complete, not since the days of the early settlement of our country have the woman had such a wonderful opportunity for helping home industries. In thise days they established them. The women were in short—the home industries. Long since have the manufactures passed put of their hands. They have passed on with growing civilization, not to their daughters' hands but their sons' and their sons' sons. And in the place of the loom in every moiest home with the women of the household as the manufacturers we find stupendous machinery lodged in great factories and worked by thousands of men and women.

The world is a circular affair, so, in a circle, it has come back until it is the women of the country in whose hands the present economic situation really rests. Their grandmothers bore their economies responsibilities well. But in the generations in which we have been devoting our attention to bridge whist we may have forgotten our responsibilities. We may not recognize them but they are the same.

Now there is a great movement on foot. It is called the "Made in U. S. A." movement. It is backed by men and women whose interests are patriotic. These men and women are organizing in order that this symbol may represent excellence and may not be the means of putting shoddy goods on the market. The women will be entirely willing to buy things "Made in U. S. A." and the people who have this movement in charge are determined that the patriotism of American women shall be justified by getting high class, standard goods. It is poor patriotism to buy shoddy goods "Made in U. S. A." because it is made in the U. S. A. The true patriotism to help our manufacturer to make his goods superior to any other. And the duty of the manufacturer and producer is to encourage us to be patriotic by each one not allowing any man of any country to excel him in his own line.

It's Meaning

I think that this is what my father would call "reciprocity." "I asked him the definition of that word once and his answer was "You pat my back and I'll pat yours." So the real meaning of the Made in U. S. A. movement is reciprocity between the American manufacturer and the American consumer.

The time has come when the American women can very profitably emulate the example of the German women who by their perservenance and practical patriotism made the slogan "Made in Germany" a synonym for excellence. The success of the slogan "Made in U. S. A." depends largely upon the women of the land and manufacturers. The women of this country are the purchasing agents. They do the buying and with them rests the fats of the "Made in U. S. A." movement.

But the old French saying "Rank imposes obligation," is not amiss. Since the woman have the power she has also the responsibility. We must look sharp that we do not shirk. It is no special group of women's business. It is the business and the duty of every women in this country.

It makes me feel rather silly to think of a story my tailor told me. He said that he had for years been a designer for a famous Parisian tailor. And that his talent had been in no way impaired by his removal to the United States. That he had to pay exorbitant prices for the designs of one of his pupils in Paris in order that he might successfully carry on his business here. I think it was indignation at such performance as that which a few years ago prompted the American tailors to start a propagand a for American clothes for American women. The held a great convention. And the designs were beautiful. Did this succeed? It did not. Why? Because American women had to have garments with a Paris label. I regret to say that a great many of the Paris labels for which we paid such exorbitants prices were sold and bought by the yard and sewed into American garments. I don't think it is very American to be dependent upon anybody for anything. Nationally speaking, this is our time to live down our past clinging vine tendencies. Not only modistes but manufactures of our country. Would it not be a great thing to make things "Made in U. S. A." so popular that the manufacturers who for years with the spirit of self preservation have marked their goods with foreign labels have to change and put on "Made in U. S. A." ones?

Woman—Made Prosperity

Let us develop a national pride in everything "Made in U. S. A." Only with this pride to back, it will our trade mark be effective. We are proud of our great natural resources. Let us be able by the time that Europe has adjusted her differences and can give us her attention to show her our new pride in our manufactured products. Natural resources are accidents—products and manufacturers we get by the sweat of our national brow. Let quit bowing and scraping to things "imported" and give preference and honor to things made at home. This is the crux of the situation. We will demand goods made in U. S. A., w will give preference to them on every occasion and the most vital point in the whole affair is that American made goods must be worthy of this preference.

The country's prosperity in the future is in the hands of the American woman. Therefore it develops upon her to bear this solemn duty in mind even in individual purchases. We should carry this thought into the shops with us and in all cases ask first for American made goods.

Doubtless there will be many things that we will ask for that at first we cannot get. In that case, we will have to buy foreign products. But if enough of us ask continuously for any product whatsoever there will be some thoughtful manufacturer who will begin at once manufacturing the article. Think of the tremendous amount of work that would be given to the unemployed through the sheer force of women purchasing agents. Every new industry started by the demand of American women would be a medium of livelihood to many thousands of persons. Economically speaking that would be knitting up the loose ends. It would do away with the great mass of the so-called unemployed. It would give work to thousands in the manufacture of necessities and luxuries which the American women demand. It would make the American business men more prosperous. And it would, I am sure, give the American women untold satisfaction.

It can be done. It was the American woman consumer who made the foreign label necessary. Has she lost her power that she cannot make "Made in U. S. A." labels equally necessary? In connection with this great movement the women have organized what is called the Woman's National Made in U. S. A. league. It is purely upon non partisan and for patriotic purposes only. Its object is not help one interest or industry more than any other. Its members are asked to support and encourage, whenever possible, American made goods. There are no dues or other financial obligations connected with this league and it is hoped that every American woman can find it convenient to become a member. Its plan of campaign is strikingly simple. Any woman can participate therein.

All that is required is to sign and send to the National headquarters of the League in Washington a pledge which reads:

Buying everything, whenever possible, Made in U. S. A. is practical patriotism.

Pledge of Membership.

PRIICE OF EGGS HIGH

Easter Eggs Will Be Higher This Year Than Ever Before, Say Dealers Because of War.

Among the most up-to-date jokes is one which runs something like this:

"I see the price of eggs has gone up on account of the war?"

"What? Are they throwing them at each other now?"

No, they are not throwing them at each other, but nevertheless the price for strictly fresh eggs is high and the war is directly responsible for it. Easter eggs will be higher this year than ever before, the dealers expect.

The present retail market price of strictly fresh eggs is 38 to 42 cents. These quotations agree with the prices of several local dealers.

In regard to the egg question, Menlo M. Griffith of Glen Farm, who conducts an extensive retail business throughout the city and is the proprietor of one of the best equipped poultry plants in Central New York, has been consulted. Perhaps no one in this section is in closer connection with the egg business than Mr. Griffiths, and in giving his opinion he said:

"The price of eggs will not go as low as usual this spring, and while they may reach 25 cents per dozen they will not remain long at that price. The bulk of the eggs on the market are produced by the commercial poultry plants. The men who conduct these plants make a specialty of poultry husbandry. The farmers who follow various agricultural lines could not possibly be depended upon for the supply needed.

"The men conducting these plants generally buy their grains and feed for their stock, and as their acreage usually is not large enough and they do not have the time to apply to the raising of grain, they are obliged to pay practically the market prices for the feed. Since the first of the year there has been an advance of 20 percent in grains, and at present there is no sign of a let up in the advance. The higher the cost of feed the higher will be the cost of egg production, and there is no question but what the war is directly responsible for the advanced prices of grain, thus affecting the egg and poultry market."

Hopeless.

After he had taken a place in Scotland and gone in for golf he believed after a few months on the green that he was making splendid progress. So one morning he asked the crusty old caddy, "Well, Saunders, how am I getting on?"

Saunders answered gruffly, "Yer no makin' a fool o' yerself, but ye'll never be a gowfer."—Argonaut.

LEAGUE HELPS ALL LABOR

Speakers Urge Buying of Merchandise that is Made Under Good Conditions

Utica, Feb. 6.—Mrs. Florence Kelley, secretary of the National Consumers' League, spoke to the LaTosca Club at the Mohawk Valley Cap Factory yesterday noon and at the New Century Club yesterday afternoon. Miss Emma B. Beard, president of the State Consumers' League, introduced Mrs. elley to the LaTosca girls. The excellent conditions under which the employes at the Mohawk Valley Cap Factory work were mentioned and Mrs. Kelley told of the contrast between these conditions and those that prevail in some States. She said the cotton used here was perhaps picked by children of tender years, who ought to be in school. She spoke of the employment of children in making willow plumes, which were much worn on hats and which she said are not now in demand.

Mrs. Kelley urged the buyers of merchandise to give their support to those men who try to maintain sanitary and decent working conditions. She spoke of the time when the local league was active, and kept the larger organizations informed as to the conditions, and she hoped that the league was again reviving to do effective work.

Mrs. Kelley said the women should know if the local garment factories are run according to the requirements. She also protested against the tendency of the times in which girls of foreign birth or parentage grow up with the intention of always being factory workers. When they marry they know that the husband will not receive enough to support the family and the children are put in day nurseries and the need of baby welfare work is found, milk stations are opened and city doctors and nurses are supplied to remedy these evils which are the result of the economic system. The speaker gave as the duty of the Consumers' League to know of these conditions and the law regarding them, and to hold over the industries the power of life and death through this knowledge. Furthermore, she showed how the unthinking, unenlightened, unconscientious public will prevent any attempt on the part of a merchant or manufacturer, unless he is of the most powerful, in doing anythig for the help. She cited instances of men in New ork and other cities who tried closing the stores at hours which would make it easier for the clerks. In return, these stores lost patronage and had to return to exist in competition with the others.

are a necessity for housekeepers who wish to excel in domestic science. They are the only American-made cooking ware which absolutely reproduces the high priced, imported German utensils, so universally used abroad. SANITO utensils have an acid proof lining which cannot crack or scale off and retains nothing to taint or discolor the food. When cooked in SANITO the food cooks evenly, retains all its juices and flavors and never scorches or burns. SANITO is a nonconductor of heat and after being heated to the cooking point—212 degrees—it requires but a very small gas flame to complete the cooking process. With proper care SANITO will last a life time.

TRAINING HANDS IN THE SCHOOLS

Progress of the Students Who Began In the Fall to Use Implements of Manufacture

Perhaps there is no other branch of our school work that is claiming as much enthusiasm as that of manual training. Both the grown-ups, who have taken time to watch the work, and the boys who are the workers are enthusiasts over this new department. To Instructor E. A. Lawton is due the success of this new department.

On a blackboard that faces the class are mechanical drawings of which spoon holders, knife boxes, and match holders, etc. The dimensions are given both of length and breath, front and side view, and from these designs the boys work. The manual working department contains 16 work benches which cost $16.50 each; a small table saw, costing $188 and a jointer costing $125. The cost of equipment in this department averages about $2,000.00, and money spent for educational purposes was never better invested.

About 140 boys of the seventh and eighth grades are instructed to make very useful articles in this department, and the work turned out is both a credit to the children, and to their instructor, Mr. Lawton. Most of the work is made from oak of which the lumber room contains about $100 worth ready to be cut up, and made into useful articles. Each of the work benches is equipped with a sufficient number of tools for beginners, and these are as follow: One back saw, one mallet, one hammer, one bench brush, one pair of dividers, one Sloyd knife, one block plane, one foot rule, one bench hook, one guage, one bevel, two chisels, trice square, jack planers, one screw driver.

Good Mechanics.

It will be seen by a glance at this list that the children are really and truly little mechanics. But we do not wish the reader to imagine that the articles constructed by these boys are models that are destroyed in a week or a month. Such is not the case. Every article that is made is sold to the boy that makes it at a cost that but pays for the material used. For instance, a whisk-brown holder can be purchased by the boy that makes it for the price of five cents; a knife box for ten cents and a mission made stool that is as strong as the rock of Gibraltar can be had for one dollar. Of course, outsiders could not buy the articles for such a moderate sum, for they are really worth many times the price given.

When it is understood that the average age of the grade boys range from 12 to 15 years, and those of the high school class from 14 to 18 years, much credit is due Mr. Lawton for the handsome and useful articles the children are able to manufacture under his instructions.

There is no compulsion about the purchasing of the articles by the maker, if he wishes to purchase the article that he may take it home for his parents inspection, well and good; he has that privilege. But, if he does not care for it, and one of the other boys wants to help the cause along, he can buy it at the same price that it would have cost the maker.

Independent Industry.

Under the system now in vogue at the high school it will be but a short time when the manual training department will be an independent industry. It will pay for itself with the money obtained from the sale of the articles manufactured.

Hence, once more we claim, that money invested for educational purposes was never better spent.

In addition to the list of tools each bench is equipped with, there are in a large case extending along the west wall of the room, a great many more that can be loaned to the boys if needed. In this case are 5 different kinds of braces, 5 cross cut saws, 5 rip saws of the Diston pattern, a mitre box, a picture frame vise, a box of Russell Jennings bits, ranging from 1-4 to 1 inch, files, clamps, etc.

The brade boys work but 1 and 1-2 hours per week in this department, while their older comrades of the high school class labor about 2 and 1-4 hours.

The work accomplished is as good as that of any mechanic in any cabinet shop in the state, or county for that matter.

From what has been said of this department, it will be readily seen that the occupation is both of physical and mental benefit to the children. They exercise the use of their muscles while sawing, planing, and boring; and their mental facilities receive a like exercise, that can but be of benefit to the youths.

There is no unnecessary talking during the hours of working, as the time is so short the boys realize that to accomplish anything they must stick to their task continuously.

The Phillip's st. school, on the Oswego Falls side of the river, is also equipped for manual training. But it has no power machines as has the high school on this side.

When the boys are first brought into the class-room to work, they are first taught how to use a plane. When they have mastered the art of a planing a board correctly, they are then instructed to use the saw, and then the chisels, etc.

Perfect Work.

A given time having been employed with each of the tools, they are then taught how to cut out, mortice and tenant work, put the same together, and the work must be perfect to pass Mr. Lawton's inspection.

Those who have advanced to the top ring of the ladder and deserve credit for the work accomplished by their manly efforts are: Harold Gillespie, Robt. Powers, Carlton Rawlee, Aven Chesbro, Fred Eames, Neil Hunter, and Ralph Seymour. These boys are excellent mechanics in their youthful way, and a bright future is assured them if they continue as they have begun.

We only mention a few of the boy's names here, because they seem to have accomplished some of the more advanced make of articles.

Every boy in the department is skilfully inclined, and tries his utmost to keep pace with his comrades; such efforts cannot go unrewarded, and soon the grade boys will be able to accomplish what the high school boys are now doing.

Beginning next week many of these articles will be on display in the store windows of our merchants and the fathers and mothers of the boys will be able to see and judge for themselves if it pays to send boys to school now-a-days.

Some of our foremost citizens of today would give much if they could have had the chance that the boys of the manual training school now enjoy.

ONYX BOWLERS' HIGH RECORDS

Seymour Puts Kibosh On Previous Scores; Onyx Players in Class By Themselves

The Onyx A. C. team defeated the Yacht club team at the Onyx bowling parlors last night.

There is some rivalry among the bowlers of the city league as to who is the champion; but the record scored last night by Seymour of the Onyx team puts all disputes aside. Seymour bowled high single game of 241, also high three game total of 669.

The Onyx team of the city league broke all bowling records of Fulton, making a total of 2,963.

WANTS TO JOIN THE BORROWED TIME CLUB.

Syracuse acknowledges at last Fulton's superior progressiveness. The news comes through G. D. Grannis of West Onondaga st. of that bustling, happy city.

Mr. Grannis, who is in his 89th year has written Secretary H. N. Gilbert of the Borrowed Time club to be made a member of this club. Syracuse boasts no such organizations.

It was at Bristol Hill that Mr. Grannis was born—in September, 1826. He lived in this vicinity until 1864.

The letter written by Mr. Grannis is a model in penmanship, and the expression is that the writer is "blessed with good eye-sight; can see to read or write, day or night, without glasses."

Mr. Grannis' name will undoubtedly be enrolled on the membership list of the Borrowed Time club.

TAXES ARE DUE.

The City Chamberlains office was a busy place yesterday, the payment of taxes keeping the entire office force busy throughout the day.

The lineup of property owners who responded to the call resembled that of a moving picture. A large sum of money was paid on the special improvement work along W. 3d st. and as yesterday was the last day for payment the rush began early and continued late in the day.

THE QUIRK.

Tonight a rare opportunity is offered the public in the presentation of "Fantasma," in 5 complete reels. This is a reproduction, in photo plays, of the famous Hanlon Bros. wonderful pantomine that for years played to capacity houses in all the principle cities, thus proving its pleasing qualities. Tomorrow, Kalem presents Miss Alice Joce, in a 4-reel dramatic production, "A Celebrated Case." The matinee prices are 5c, nights 5 and 10c.

WILL MANAGE SALES DEPT.

The store stock is being overhauled and fresh goods are being substituted.

Mr. Massaro sold to his brother that he might devote exclusive time in managing the sales department of macaroni company of which he is a member.

COLLECTORS BUSY.

The Water Works department is busy collecting water rents for the year ending Dec. 31st, 1914. All rents not paid before Jan. 20th, will have 10 per cent added to the original bill.

ELEVATED CARS FAST ENOUGH FOR NEW YORKERS

New York, Jan. 8.—Thousands of New Yorkers deserted the subway lines today and went to work on the slower elevated or surface line because of two small fires that occurred in the tube last night owing to a general weakening of the entire electrical system resulting from Wednesday's accident.

Officials of the Interborough Rapid Transit company will take steps as rapidly as possible to restore public confidence. One of their first moves, it is said will be the elimination of all wooden cars now being used and the bricking in of the power cables to shut them off from the tunnel.

Both of these changes have been demanded for years by patrons of the subway and they are likely to be hastened by the investigations now being conducted by state, county and city officials.

RITCHIE IN TRIM.

San Francisco, Jan. 8.—Willie Ritchie former lightweight champion of the world, started training today for a series of fights that he hopes will eventually regain for him the title he lost to Freddie Welsh in London last summer.

Ritchie is still negotiating with a number of eastern boxing promoters and he will be ready to leave for the place that accepts his offer in a week.

OSHKOSH MAN FAVORED.

Milwaukee, Wis., Jan. 8.—Edie McGoorty of Oshkosh is a 10 to 6 favorite over "Fighting illy" Murray of San Francisco. The men meet tonight for ten rounds at 160 pounds, the winner to meet the victor of the Clabby-Gibbons bout in January.

MAGEE TO REMAIN.

Macon, Ga., Jan. 8.—George Stallings, manager of the Boston Braves, today denied reports that George Whitted, the Braves' outfielder, would be exchanged with the Phillies for Sherwood Magee.

BOARD SIDED WITH THE NURSE

In Tuberculosis Hospital Fight Dr. Allen Was Unpopular With the Board

As a model to the stories of insubordination coming from last week's meeting of the Board of Managers of the tuberculosis hospital at Orwell, Dr. J. R. Allen, former superintendent of the institution, has made a statement which appeared in Saturday's Palladium. The statement:

"Ever since I accepted the superintendency there has been friction. Miss Kavanaugh was charged by me with insubordination. With such conditions the Hospital I found it absolutely impossible to get the best results. Finally I became tired of conditions and saw that the best way to end them was to suspend the nurse and I did so. Then came the hearing and the meeting with the Board of Managers. We had affidavits from both employes of the Hospital and inmates and I have them yet. I don't want to say anything further at this time. Those who know me best will appreciate the conditions under which I worked. It is not my understanding that the Board of Managers dismissed me. They told me that my resignation had been accepted."

When the announcement that Superintendent Allen had resigned or been dismissed reached the other employes of the Hospital they held a meeting and because of loyalty to the Doctor, resigned. They were Miss Anna Baker, and Miss Isabelle Southworth, nurses; Audrey Stowell, steward; Marion Mead, waitress; Rose Bowen, maid, and Seymour David, day janitor.

When Doctor Allen learned of their action he went to them, made a little speech in which he said that he appreciated very much their loyalty to him and urged them to reconsider their action, at least to stay with the Hospital and the patients until their places can be filled by other competent help, and they followed his advice.

The public should know, through the proper county officials, Doctor Allen says, of the manner in which the Hospital has been conducted and he intimates that the entire matter will be laid before them. While here he was to have a conference with Supervisor John W. Parkhurst, it was said. The story is that there may be some changes initiated among the Board of Managers.

ALLEN DISMISSED

Deposed Physician Waived Rights Under the Law.

It was learned Saturday that Dr. Allen had waived his rights under the law to conduct the hearing demanded by Miss Kavanaugh, former head nurse, charged with insubordination. Upon the physician's failure to resign he was dismissed, the vote being three to two, Dr. Albertson, of Oswego, H. Putnam Allen, of Fulton, and Semes Gallagher, of Cleveland, ebing against Dr. Allen, and A. S. Barker of Orwell and Dr. More of Pulaski being with him.

Dr. Allen has a large practice in the town of Orwell and is said to be very popular there. Miss Kavanaugh came here from Boston, Mass. She had also been employed in Rochestre and had the reputation of being a most efficient nurse.

Supervisors W. B. Harter of Parish and V. D. Pierce of Altmar, were also present at the hearing Friday. Mr. Gallagher, of Cleveland, took exception to the phraseology in the resignation presented by Superintendent Allen, in which he virtually accused members of the Board with having neglected to sustain him in his efforts for better things in hospital management. Dr. More and Mr. Barker thought that the Superintendent had a right to resign in any language that he saw fit, but the majority didn't want the language written into the record as it would be a reflection upon the Board of Managers.

Doctor Allen presented a resolution approving the work of Miss Kavanaugh while connected with the hospital and recommending her for positions that she might seek in the future, but there was objection to this from some of the members, who said that they were prepared to testify to Miss Kavanaugh's efficiency in personal communication, but didn't want to take public action. A fine testimonial was prepared, signed, and given to the retiring nurse.

It developed that there is a recent report extant from the State Charities Aid Association criticising the tuberculosis hospital. None of the Board of Managers would give out the criticism, declaring that all had promised to divulge nothing of the proceeeng on the ground that they wished to shield the institution from criticism in view of the fact that a large sum of money was recently appropriated by the oBard of Supervisors for enlargement and that it would not be desirable to inflame the public.

SUFFERED BAD CUT

Mrs. McNalley had Wrist Cut by the Bursting of a Jar of Fruit.

Mrs. McNally, of 215 W. Broadway, received a very painful injury yesterday afternoon while handling canned fruit. Mrs. McNulty had placed two of the cans in her left arm, and was reaching for another when the accident occurred. She either let the two cans come together with force enough to cause an explosion, or one of them was overcharged with the acid that generally accumulates in canned fruit.

However this might be one of the cans burst and cut the left wrist of Mrs. McNalley so severely that Doctors Preston and Terpenning were called to dress the injury.

The injured woman was alone at the time and, with blood gushing from the wound, she hastened next door and asked Mr. Murphy to telephone for a doctor.

When the doctors arrived it was discovered that the wound was about four inches in length and cut to the bone, severing the veins and arteries.

FULL TIME AT MILLS

Employes Wore Smiles this Morning. Good News Welcomed.

The wheels at the American Woolen Mills' started buzzing this morning and will continue to do so on full time hereafter. Th is will be good news to the many who have had a "hard row to hoe" since the winter season opened. It may take weeks and probably months for some of the poorer class of people to gain foothold once more, but with the mills running on full time this will be encouraging and should put strength into the business heart of our city.

There will be no night work for the present, for the officers desire to give everyone a chance to recuperate after so long an idleness. Nearly everyone seen entering the mills this morning wore smiles of joy, for they undoubtedly felt this the beginning of an era of prosperity for them again.

LIKES ICY BATH.

Donald Stewart, a grandson of Mr. and Mrs. John Harvie, and a senior at Hobart college took a 15 minute bath in the icy waters of Seneca Lake recently to show his belief that cold baths are beneficial.

The young man has many friends here who are interested in the recent stunt. While his home is in Syracuse he usually spends his summers in this city. He is a divinity student at Hobart and has supplied at the Zion Episcopal church in the absence of the regular pastor.

Y. M. C. A. Minstrels

Oswego, Feb. 8.—The annual minstrel show and amateur performance of the boys' department of the Y. M. C. A. will be held at the Association auditorium February 11th and 12th.

The performance will be divided into two parts, the first being the regular minstrel act, while the second will be devoted to several feature acts, comprising the Keystone Comedy Kids, with John Young as Charles Chaplin. Joe Kinney will take the part of Mabel and Karl Kreutler will impersonate the Keystone Cop. The Ontario Four will also be on the musical program. Phil Bradley and Raymond Smith will be seen in a musical and dancing act.

The following will take part: End men Karl Kreutler, James Mack, Earl Perrett, Robert Dawson, George Case, John Young.

Old Foot Must Go

"Jimmie" Doyle, who for fifty years conducted a shoe repair shop in Wall street, north of Oneida, has retired from business at the age of 81. The place is being remodeled and repaired for a hotel, which will be conducted by Thomas DeMassa.

The old foot that has been a sort of landmark for at least a quarter of a century will be removed today and placed in storage.

MILADY'S JEWELS.

Onyx with diamond is one of the best combinations in jewelry.

With plain shirt waists colored stone buttons and Egyptian jewelry should be worn.

A collar made of black velvet about three-quarters of an inch wide, with a rhinestone drop, is becoming to the elderly woman.

One of the most attractive novelties is a high dog collar of tulle trimmed with rhinestones, resembling the heavy jeweled collars. These collars look particularly well on young women.

New signets appear made of jet or black enamel, with the stones set flatly within their inky environment, where they seem to acquire special brilliancy.

So pronounced is the demand for silver, rhinestones and pearls, with jet or black enamel, that many excellent imitations of the more costly metals and semi-precious stones are to be had for a nominal figure.

EATING FOR HEALTH.

Moderation a Good Rule Both as to Kind and Quality of Food.

Always practice moderation in eating and always eat slowly, but you need not chew each mouthful a hundred times. The very fact of counting would make many people too nervous to digest anything. You will know when your food is masticated. The amount of food required depends on the kind and amount of labor performed each day.

A good rule is to eat just a little less than you crave. But a strong body must have a sufficient amount of fuel to keep in good working order, the same as a locomotive.

For dinner a soup, one kind of meat, not more than three vegetables, salad and a plain dessert with coffee are all one requires and are far better than a great variety.

A little lunch if you wish to do good work in the afternoon. For breakfast, either fruit or a cereal, egg or chop, roll and coffee are sufficient for almost any one.

Making Linen Wear.

Linen will wear much longer if it need not be used constantly. For instance, if half a dozen tablecloths are laid away in the linen closet the whole set should be in use, not two, three or whatever number is needed each week. In this way each cloth is not laundered nearly as often as if three were in constant use and three stored away. The result will be that the six will last much longer used in this way than if several were kept in reserve.

After the cloths have lost all usefulness as table coverings they can be cut up into napkins, hemmed and given a new lease on life. Linen should never be thrown away, as there is always some excellent use awaiting it, either as bandages, cloths for the ironing board, dust rags or a thousand and one of the other household purposes to which it can be put.

What's In a Name?

One summer a distinguished member of the French academy rented a cottage in Savoy, and when the time came for his return to Paris he went to say farewell to the owner of the cottage, a prosperous farmer's wife.

"I hope you will write your name in my album before you go," she said.

"With pleasure," he replied, and, taking a pen, he wrote his name in the book.

"Thanks," she said, "but won't you please tell me your profession, so that I can write it after your name?"

"Oh, put down 'landowner?'" he answered.

"But that isn't a profession," she said.

"Well, then, put down 'academician,'" was his answer.

This word seemed to puzzle her, and therefore he asked, with a smile, "Don't you know what an academician is?"

"Not quite," she answered, "but it's such a long word that the profession must be a splendid one."

A Chinese Proverb's Origin.

"He'll steal your shoes" is an expression which in China is used to describe an arrant knave and pilferer. The expression is hundreds of years old. A wealthy Chinaman, whose gorgeously embroidered shoes were the envy of the community, was, according to the legend, despoiled of his pride in the following manner: A rascal one day rushed up, gave the rich man a hearty blow on the back and, seizing the astonished gentleman's hat, pitched it upon a high wall. The next moment the fellow seemed to discover that it was not an old friend he was greeting so enthusiastically and apologised profusely.

"How shall I get my hat?" inquired the man with the beautiful shoes.

"Jump on my back, and you can reach it," replied the schemer.

The suggestion was carried out, but while the hatless man was reaching for his head covering the rascal slipped off the handsome shoes and made away, leaving the simple minded millionaire clutching the wall.

Right There.

"What had has the club on hand now?" "I believe it's palmistry."—Baltimore American.

Old Tin.

The expensiveness of pure tin accounts for the care with which it is handled. It is astonishing how little tin can be made to cover thousands of cans. Yet tin would be still more expensive than it is had not the following process been invented for its recovery at very low cost: Great heaps of empty cans (preferably washed and dried by mechanical means) are piled up in an airtight room. Warm chlorine gas is forced into the room, where it reaches every nook and corner of the cans. The warm gas has a tendency to unite with the tin and form the chemical volatile liquid. The mixture of gases, consisting of air, free chlorine and the vapor of tin chloride, is passed through a condenser, where the tin chloride is separated from the other gases, and by a simple chemical process the absolutely pure tin is precipitated.—New York World.

A Hint For Photographers.

Carbonate of soda is the accelerator for the reducing agent. With these developers, when they are dissolved alone in water, the image will ultimately appear, but it will come very slowly. Add a strong solution of carbonate of soda to the reducing agent and water and the image will fairly leap at you. The reduction of the bromide of silver has been tremendously hastened, and it is also more thorough and complete, the negative having much greater density. This is the safe mission of a carbonate of soda in the developer. It is to speed things up and complete the action.—Outing.

Why Lead Is So Heavy.

Although lead is the softest metal in general use, it is very dense—that is, its particles are very compactly united, and there is no room for air to circulate in between these particles. Most apparently solid substances are penetrated by more or less air, and this, of course, affects the weight in proportion to the bulk. A piece of wood is lighter than a piece of lead of exactly equal bulk because the little particles which make up the piece of wood are not very close together, and it contains a lot of air.—Boston Herald.

Looking Far Ahead.

The vivid imagination of childhood is as a fairy charm for magnifying possibilities. A small boy, being directed to empty his bulging pockets, brought forth among other strange treasures a circular piece of rubber. Asked its nature and purpose, he made answer: "Well, that's a real good washer. I'm going to start an automobile shop with it some day."—Pittsburgh Press.

No Idle Gossip.

"There's one thing I can say," said Mrs. Waggles, "and that is that I never indulge in idle gossip."

"No," replied Miss Cayenne. "You must be given credit for industry in whatever you undertake."—Washington Star.

Hard Water.

The Papa—What's the baby crying about?

The Mamma—Oh, he's being washed!

"Oh, is the water as hard as that?"—Yonkers Statesman.

Too Much of One.

He—You do not seem to be so anxious for a flat now. She—How can I be? Didn't I marry you?—Baltimore American.

If fun is good, truth is still better and love best of all.—Thackeray.

By FREDERICK T. CARDOZE.

Albany, Feb. 6.—Instead of making the way easier for those who walk in the straight and narrow path, Assemblyman James H. Mead of Buffalo is likely to add obstructions to the paths of those who are opposed to the Demon Rum.

Assemblyman Mead has prepared a bill which will very likely bring joy to the hearts of those who oppose local option and do their utmost to see to it that there shall always be liquid refreshment available in villages and towns. The measure in question places an added burden of taxation upon residents of the cities and towns which have gone dry or which will go dry as the result of future elections.

Assemblyman Mead is a first year member and if unknown because of his brief public career, is likely to create enough comment through his bill to become for some little time a conspicuous figure in the legislature.

Liquor legislation has always been one of the most important subjects for the law-makers to consider. Innumerable organizations opposed to the spread of the liquor evil, as they term it, annually send their representatives to Albany to fight the bills favorable to manufacturers. In turn, a "lobby" is sent to the Capitol city to advocate the measures favorable to those who are in the liquor business. All manner of bills have been introduced bearing upon excise matters, but the Mead bill establishes a precedent.

The salient feature of the Mead Bill provides that if during the preceding year any town in the county shall have voted upon a question under section thirteen of the liquor tax law, the county treasurer shall file with the board of supervisors a statement of the amount of revenue to the county derived from the issue of liquor tax certificates in such town during the preceding excise year and which by reason of the determination of such question in the negative, will not be collected during the current year. The board of supervisors, says the bill, shall before making the levy provided by this section, deduct such amount from the total amount of taxes to be collected in the county, and shall levy the same upon such town in addition to the amount otherwise required to be levied pursuant to this section.

This means that those who voted for a "dry town" and succeeded by their votes in making it dry will be called upon to make up a portion of the revenue which is lacking because of a falling off of excise receipts in the county where the town is located.

Notwithstanding that the present administration is pledged to put in effect alterations in many departments of the state, it is not believed that it is the sense of the legislators to make any such alteration as this to the excise law. However, Assemblyman Mead has faith in his bill, which is to make its appearance shortly.

Just how the Mead bill will be received by the lawmakers and public in general is being awaited with interest. Those who have seen it, although they may not be experts, have expressed the opinion that it is likely to cause a furor in circleh where the battle cry is "down with the Demon Rum!"

As yet the charitable and reform organizations who are watching legislation have not fixed their wise and keen seeing eyes upon the rather unusual clause in the Mead bill, for the reason that the measure has just been drafted. When they do it is almost certain that there will be strident and loud voice applications for a hearing upon the proposition.

The real purpose of education is not to make cold storage plants out of our brains. The world has no use for pickled ideas. You are here to discipline your faculties so you may use them to help your fellow-men.

I can take you out today or tomorrow and show you hundreds of bleary-eyed mutts who are spending their time hanging around beer joints. They are fooling away enough time to educate themselves properly so that they could amount to something in this world.

Cut the word failure out of your vocubulary. Be a well-rounded proposition. Don't go through life like a man with mumps on one side of his face.

Men who keep their lungs filled with cigarette smoke haven't a chance of hitting the bullseye.

You may cheat and get by with it in college, but when you get out into the world all the water will be squeezed out of your stock. If you are a four-flusher and a false alarm, the world will find it out.

I don't fight the church, but the sins of the church. I'd die for the church, but I'll fight the shams of the church as long as I live.

You always get what you are looking for—anything you want. If you have come here this afternoon to pick up something you don't like, something to peddle around the neighborhood, I'll go out of my way to accommodate you. If you are looking for a scrap, get busy and you'll get what you came for.

You fight the devil your way and I'll fight him my way; but don't growl at me because I don't fight him your way, because if I did I would'nt be worth any more than you are.

Don't read the Bible like you do a novel—the last chapter first. If you read a novel in the same milk-and-water, cider-and-chalk, indifferent way you read the Bible, you'll get as little out of it as you do out of the Bible. I won't exclude the ministers from this. Some of them haven't even read the Bible through.

Every church, in my experience, is cursed with a bunch that makes the preacher a mere pawn of their dictation. The church is cursed with a few buttinskies who dictate the proposition and run the business. Here is one that won't let you tell him what to do.

We lie in our prayers and our actions. You lie when you join the church. You say you'll give up the world and repent of your sins when you can't. You are living a lie in the world.

Say, all the money I've lost in my time I was skinned out of by church members. Notice I didn't say Christians. It isn't the religion that's to blame, but the scoundrels who hide under the name of religion. I used to play baseball. I used to work on the railroads. I have been an athlete and I have loaned thousands of dollars to ball players, actors and actresses, but they never skinned me out of a cent.

"God likes to see a man leave the cellar and go to the roof garden of life. The humility that wants to sit in the shade and sip lemonade and say "Oh, it's so hot," is less pleasing to him."

EASTERN STAR FOR DISTRICT ORGANIZED

Syracuse Organization has Object of Promoting Sociability Among all Chapters.

Syracuse, Feb. 8.—Mrs. Mae Jones of this city was elected president of the newly formed Association of the Order of the Eastern Star of the 24th district, comprising Onondaga county, at the annual meeting and election held last Saturday evening in the Greyhound Building. Mrs. Jones is district deputy of the grand chapter of the order. The other officers elected for the ensuing year are:

Vice-president, Vernon Kasson of Marcellus, grand lecturer of New York state; recording secretary, Mrs. Margaret A. Bonsted of Clay; financial secretary, Mrs. Sada H. Button of Syracuse; treasurer, Mrs. Arlynne Mathews of Syracuse.

The Governoring Board will include Mrs. Elizabeth Raymond of this city, Mrs. Catherine Peck and Henry Peck of East Syracuse, each serving two years; Mrs. Mae Nolan and Mrs. Mary A. Martini both of this city, and J. Foster of Jordan, each elected for one year.

The constitution and by-laws were presented by and accepted from the committee consisting of Mrs. Mary Marsh, East Syracuse; Mrs. Blanch Allen, Skaneateles; Mrs. Nolan, Mr. Peck and Fred P. Martin of Solvay. Mr. Martin was chairman of the meeting until the new officers took their positions.

The association is composed of all matrons, patrons and grand officers, past and present, in the twenty-fourth district. Its object is to promote sociability among the chapters and to assist the residential grand officers in every manner possible.

In former years the grand officers have not had anyone with whom to consult whenever a technical question or important business confronted them in this district. Two years ago, at a meeting of several of the grand officers and O. E. S. officers, the question was brought up regarding the advisability and necessity for an organization that would be of practical assistance to the highest officers in the state chapter living in Onondaga county. From that meeting the association organized last Saturday was evolved.

The regular business meetings will be conducted the first Tuesdays in February and November, but the by laws allow the president to call a meeting whenever she deems it advisable.

Mrs. Jones is a past matron of Manlius Chapter and was made deputy by the Grand Chapter when it met last year in New York.

War: Pathos and Humor

Berlin, Feb. 8.—To be saved in the nick of time in the midst of a seemingly hopeless hand-to-hand fight was the remarkable experience of three German volunteer soldiers from Berlin, one of them a lawyer in time of peace, the second one the head of a publishing house, the third one a teacher, all of them married and over forty years old.

They were among the soldiers storming Dixmude, which was held by Frenchmen, Turcos and a small number of Belgians. The fight was going on in the streets. The Germans were shot at from cellars and roofs. Turcos with bayonets fixed were standing in the house doors.

The three from Berlin were in the thick of the fight near the City Hall when suddenly quite a number of Turcos hurled themselves with terrible howls upon the Germans. The three from Berlin were hitting right and left and stabbing into the black mass. One of them, the publisher was shot in the head and fell. Turcos threw themselves upon him. The other two wanted to save him, but the lawyer also fell. He could not use his bayonet because it was too firmly settled in the breast of a French captain. And then there came the deliverance.

A bomb swept along and fell into the dense heap of humanity. One cry, only one cry, above all the terrific battle noise. Eight Turcos lay, torn to pieces, next to and on the stairs leading up to the City Hall.

The three volunteers from Berlin escaped with their lives. The lawyer had a hip laid open, from the teacher's left leg a fragment of the shell had torn great pieces of flesh. The publisher still lay unconscious where he had fallen, after having been shot in the head. At 8 o'clock in the evening he was dug out of a heap of dead bodies. He was revived and will live. The coats and sleeves of the three were pierced by bullets in many places and torn to shreds.

The three men have received the Iron Cross and two of them will soon be fighting again. But had that shell burst a second later, not one of the three would have been living.

In the German Trenches

Berlin, Feb. 6.—A professor of a Berlin High school, now serving as a captain of infantry at the western front, sent an interesting letter to a friend, a member of the stock company of the German Theater in Berlin. He writes:

"Thanks for the kindness you are showering upon me. You are overdoing it. We are doing nothing but our duty. Today's letter must necessarily be short, for I am busy superintending building operations. Just now I am engaged in erecting a winter castle for myself. It is about five yards square and three yards deep—in the ground. I have a glass door, a window, furniture, a bed, telephone, electric bells, etc.

"A piano is on the way. Sorry to say my last one was destroyed. By degrees we have built a whole village and two castles into the trenches. Even oil paintings we have in our living rooms.

"In the rear we established a canteen, modelled after a regular Berlin weissbeerstube. A fat Berliner who used to keep a weissbeer place in Berlin, is serving as barkeeper. We also have a bakery where we produce fresh rolls and cake. An old stable that was shot to pieces we turned into a bath room with a reading room annex where one can get the latest newspapers.

"I am myself living like a lord. I have carriages, horses, a cow, a dog, a cat, cooks and servants. I am just now engaged in organizing a singing society. It is my object to put each talent in its proper place.

"By telephone I direct the fire of the artillery. Day before yesterday I had five houses in Arras shot to pieces, because from the roofs of these houses they interfered with our building operations by firing at the masons and carpenters. Too bad we cannot have a theatrical performance out here. I should love to see a production of Schiller's Wallenstein."

The professor also sent his friend a parody on Faust which he has written in the trench.

There are a great many German teachers and professors serving as officers and soldiers at the front. More than one hundred teachers of the Berlin public schools alone have died on the battle field. Of the teachers of physical culture employed in the public gymnasiums of Berlin 140—almost one half of the whole staff, are serving under the colors. Twenty-two have been decorated for bravery, 26 wounded and 7 killed.

Berlin, Feb. 8.—How the Russians provided a fish dinner for the German population and soldiers of a little town in Masurian lake country of East Prussia Christmas Eve is told in a letter a German officer sent to his relatives in Berlin. "Nobody seemed to think of celebrating Christmas," he writes. "The Russians made energetic efforts to destroy the railroad station of our little town, our only means of communication with the Fatherland.

"All the rolling stock had to be made ready to be sent to the rear. Four long trains were made up and the whole population was told to be ready to evacuate. They were to take along the merest necessaries. All the rest of their belongings they were to leave behind.

"The sound of the bursting shells came nearer and nearer. Most of the shells dropped into a lake in front of the town. Then our artillery became busy and after a little while the enemy's guns were silenced. The people were glad they could remain in their homes. Some of them prepared Christmas trees and soon we heard the old familiar songs we used to sing when we were youngsters.

The next morning we discovered the lake in front of the town covered with fish. It appears the Russian shells had exploded under water and killed the fish. Soon the soldiers nd the boys of the town manned all available row boots, rafts and barges, which returned loaded with fish. All the soldiers ate fish dinners that Christmas day and in every house the family enjoyed a fine meal. The boys continued "fishing" in the afternoon, in spite of renewed shell firing by the Russians.

"There was keen competition among the "fishermen" as to who would "catch" the biggest fish. The prize was finally awarded to a little chap who brought home a splendid pike weighing about 20 pounds."

YES, SHE DID KNOW.

And Proved It to Her Critical Old Singing Master.

Many years ago, in an old French church in Berne, a great choir under the famous old leader, Father Reichel, was having its final rehearsal for the production of the "Messiah." The chorus had triumphantly sung through to the place where the soprano solo takes up the refrain, "I Know That My Redeemer Liveth." The singer was a beautiful woman, whose voice had been faultlessly trained. As the tones came out high and clear the listeners were filled with wonder at her perfect technique. Her breathing was faultless, her note placing perfect, her enunciation beyond criticism.

After the final note there was a pause, and all eyes were turned toward the old conductor to catch his look of approval. Great was the surprise, however, when a sharp rap of the baton was heard, as a command for the orchestra to pause, and with a look of sorrow Father Reichel said to the singer, "My daughter, you do not really know that your Redeemer liveth, do you?"

With a flushed face she replied, "Why, yes, I think I do."

"Then sing it," he cried. "Sing it from your heart. Tell it to me so I and all who hear you will know and know that you know the joy and power of it." Then with an imperious gesture he mottoned for the orchestra to go over it again.

This time the young woman sang with no thought of herself or of technique and applause from her hearers. She sang the truth that she knew in her heart and experienced in her life and that she wished to send home to the hearts of the listeners. As the last notes died away there was no wonder at the craftsman's work but there were quickened hearts that had been moved by the glorious message they had received. As the singer stood forgetful of applause, the old master stepped up and with tears in his eyes kissed her on the forehead and said, "You do know, for you have told me."—Exchange.

CHASING THE RAINBOW.

Curious Legends That Are Told In Different Countries.

We have all of us heard stories of the treasure at the end of the rainbow. There is a pot of gold there, you know. And if we could only walk far enough, run fast enough, we might find it and be ever thereafter happy.

That is what our nurses tell us when we are children, isn't it?

And sometimes we learn that the rainbow is a bridge, and the thunder is the roar of the heavy wheels going over it.

These are the stories that we hear in childhood about the rainbow. Children of other lands hear many other stories.

In Greece nurses tell the children that if any one by chance stumbles over the end of the rainbow his or her sex is changed. A fine story that to tell a child! The little Greeks must run away from the ends of the rainbow instead of seeking them to find our pot of gold.

The little Turk hears from his nurse that if he can but touch the band of orange that spans the heavens in the rainbow his head will turn to silver, with rubies for eyes and teeth of gold.

In many parts of Russia the rainbow is called a pump, and in Hungary it is called "God's pump" and "Noah's pump."

In Russia, in some provinces, the wells are covered with strong platforms, so that the water cannot be drawn from them by the rainbow, and in other provinces it is said that three angels have charge of the rainbow—one to draw water through it from the earth, another to give water from it to the clouds and another to return the water to the earth in the form of rain.—Boston Herald.

Ypres in England.

We have the name of Ypres in England—in that of the Ypres tower at Rye, in Sussex, though local talk knows nothing of its proper pronunciation and broadly calls it the "Wipers tower." It is a twelfth century building, the oldest secular building of all the Cinque ports, and was at one time the only stronghold of the town, though later walls and gates were built. The reason for its name is to be found in the commonly accepted statement that it was built by William des Ypres, earl of Kent.—London Globe.

"Is It Possible?"

Prince George of Denmark was nicknamed Est-il-possible by James II. It is said that when the startling events of the revolution of 1688 succeeded one another with breathless rapidity the emotions of Prince George found vent in the repeated exclamation, "Est-il-possible?" King James, enumerating those who had forsaken him, said, "And Est-il-possible has gone too!"

MIGHTY MAUNA LOA.

The lofty volcanoes of the Hawaiian Islands, rising above the ocean from 5,000 to nearly 14,000 feet, are only the summits of gigantic mountain masses that rise abruptly from the bottom of the Pacific. Mauna Loa, on the island of Hawaii, stands 13,675 feet above sea level, but its slopes descend beneath the sea, as shown by deep sea soundings, with a grade fully equal to if not greater than that of the visible slopes. The same is generally true of the submarine slopes of other islands, and the depths attained by these continuous slopes, within thirty to fifty miles of the shores, vary from 14,000 to 19,000 feet. Mauna Loa and Mauna Kea, if their true bases are considered to be at the bottom of the Pacific, are therefore mountains of as great an altitude as Mount Everest, or approximately 30,000 feet. In general the Hawaiian island group consists of summits of a gigantic submarine mountain chain which projects only its loftier peaks and domes above the water. On the island of Hawaii the volcanic forces are still in operation.

The one continuously active volcanic vent of the island is Kilauea, far down on the eastern flank of Mauna Loa—"the great mountain." No other volcano in the world approaches Mauna Loa in the vastness of its mass or in the magnitude of its eruptive activity. There are many volcanic peaks higher in the air, but most of them are planted upon elevated platforms, where they appear as mere cones of greater or less size. It is not yet known at what level the base of Mauna Loa is situated, but it is below the sea, probably far below.

Mauna Kea—"the white mountain"—is also a colossus among volcanoes. Its summit, 13,825 feet, is a trifle higher than that of Mauna Loa, but its slopes are steeper, and its base is therefore much smaller. The magnitude of Mauna Loa is due chiefly to the great area of its base, which is nearly elliptical in shape, with a major diameter of seventy-four miles and a minor diameter of fifty-three miles, measured at sea level.

In the aggregate of its eruptions Mauna Loa is also unrivaled. Some of the volcanoes of Iceland have been known to disgorge at a single outbreak masses of lava fully equal to those of Mauna Loa. But such outbursts are infrequent in Iceland, and a century has elapsed since any of such magnitude have occurred, though there have been several minor eruptions. The eruptions of Mauna Loa are all of great volume and occur irregularly, at an average interval of about eight years. In view of the total quantity of material it has disgorged during the last century no other volcano is at all comparable to it.—From a Bulletin of the United States Geological Survey.

Casting Metals.

As is well known, some metals are unsuitable for casting, while others, like iron, can readily be cast in any desired shape. The property of casting well is said to depend upon whether the metal contracts or expands on solidifying from the liquid form. Iron, like water, expands in solidifying, and hence the solid metal may be seen floating in the liquid iron about it. The expansion causes it to fill the die into which it is poured, and so it can be cast easily. Gold and silver contract in cooling and therefore are not suitable for casting.—Exchange.

"Valley of Dried Bones."

The island of Jamaica possesses a "valley of dried bones." It is near the Cunacuna gap, in the Maroon county. This valley, though in the heart of the "wet country," is bare of leaf and life. The limestone rock is hot. Giant trees, which seem to have been blighted suddenly, stand up gaunt and dead. Although vegetation seems to have been dense here in former years, nothing will grow now. During the hot season the temperature is almost unbearable. It is visited by seismic disturbances, which cause the dead trees and hot stones to rattle like dry bones.

Old Pension Plan.

They had a roundabout way of bestowing military pensions in the old days. Witness this official communication from the war office in the reign of Queen Anne. Her majesty; it runs, has been pleased to grant Fitton Minshull, a child, a commission as ensign in consequence of the loss of his father, who died in the service. And Fitton was at the same time granted furlough until further order, his army pay being sent regularly to his mother.—London Graphic.

About Sports Generally

New York, Feb. 8.—"Big Ed" Reulbach stands out today as a living, breathing example of what may happen to a hireling of organized baseball who looks out for his own interests and those of his fellow hirelings.

"Big Ed" was "canned" by Charles Hercules Ebbets of Brooklyn, New York, not because he was "through" as a pitcher, but mainly because of these two little things—

(1) As an official of the Baseball Players' Fraternity "Big Ed" did his darndest to bring about better conditions for the players at the sacrifice of the magnates.

(2) "Big Ed" has had a warm spot in his heart for the Feds and very frequently told boss, Charles Hercules, that he thought the Feds were regular fellows.

Had "Big Ed" kept the peace as far s the Feds were concerned and had he been less active as a Fraternity man, he still would be on the Dodger's roster. But he didn't and, therefore, Charles Hercules injected the "canning" fluid into Edward and sent him on his way.

The Feds made Reulbach a big offer last winter but Ebbets met that offer. Not only did he meet it but he waited to hook up Reulbach to a five year contract. But Reulbach said:

"One year—that's all."

Later Ruelbach told us:

"I don't want to hook myself up to Ebbets for the rest of my days. I want to be a free agent after 1914 so I can deal with whom I please."

LL

Charley Herzog, manager of them there Reds, seems to be set on capturing all the catchers in sight. He landed the flirting Charlie Dooin a short time back and lays claim to Ivy Wingo, oncetime of the Cardinals. The Feds also claim Wingo but Charles says he has a better claim and that Ivy will cling to him.

In addition to this brace of backstops, Herzog has a Cuban Cent named Gonzales, or something like that, the Veteran Tom Clarke, and a squad of young fellows who assert that they too are catchers.

Herzog probably is loading up on catchers while the loading is good, figuring, probably, that later on he can trade off a pair of them for some pitchers, outfielders, infielders, bat boys and prospective directors for the Z inzinnadi Reds.

LL

"The arm of Chris Mathewson is gone," remarks one National League ball player. That may be true, but Chris hasn't lost his dome. People around certain parts of the country think Chris has been pitching with his arm for the last two or three years. That's an optical illusion.

The old time power and cunning left Matty's arm a few years ago and Chris has been pitching with his head ever since for an average around .700. So you see even though Matty has lost his arm he will be listed among the 1915 Giant pitchers.

LL

Dick Rudolph of the Boston Braves now deserves ranking alongside of Chris Columbus, De Soto and other discoverers.

Since the baseball season ended Dick has been "writing" newspaper articles. Just recently he announced this very important discovery.

"The main ssset of pitcher is control."

Bravo, Richard!"

CURRENT SLANG HAS AN ANCIENT ORIGIN

"Kid," Applied to a Child, Dates Back to 1509—"Not in It" Used by Shakespeare.

Much of the current slang supposed to be modern is not new. For instance, "kid" (child) goes back as far at least as bassinger's "Old Law" (1509).

"I am old, you say. Yes; parlous old, kids, and you mark me well." Kidnap (to nab a kid) was certainly not a new word to De Foe or Bunyan.

"To skip out" is accounted slang, but in Wycliff's translation of the Bible we read. "Whanne barabus and poll herder, their, thei skipten out."

In "Ralph Roister Doister," the first English comedy, about the middle of the sixteenth century, an actor says, "Nay, dame, I will fire thee ut of my house," which certainly has a modern ring.

Goldsmith in "The Good Natured Man (1768) says, "If the man cose from the Cornish borough you must do him," and this will require no gloss for the modern reader.

"Not in it" is found in Shakespeare's "Winter's Tale." "They have a dance which the wenches say is a gallimaufry of gambois because they are not in it."

"Cut it out" goes back as far at least as Sheridan's "Critic" (1779). "The performers have cut it out."

The optimistic brakeman who had both legs cut off by a train and who, when a bystander tried to console him by saying he ought to be thankful he wasn't killed outright, replied, "I'm not kicking," was only using a Biblical expression, "Wherefore kick ye at my sacrifice?"

BY THE COMPENSATION LAW.

Governor Whitman's Scathing Criticism of Extravagance by Commission—Unfair Competition With Private Business by the State—Law and Methods Are to Be Changed.

Albany—Governor Whitman has sent to the legislature the following special message on extravagance by the state workmen's compensation commission:

To the Legislature:

I find that the five hundred thousand dollars appropriated by the legislature to meet the expenses of the workmen's compensation commission for the fiscal year commencing October first, 1914, is exhausted, and there is already a deficiency in that department of twenty-five thousand dollars. An appropriation made for twelve months was exhausted in three. Such a deficiency is caused either by the intentional failure to provide sufficient funds in an appropriation bill, or by great extravagance, or both. In this instance the unfortunate condition of the administration of the law by the workmen's compensation commission seems to be due to both causes. The law itself is an attempt to work a complete separation between employer and employee, so that they may not only be apart as separate interests, but that they may be opposing interests, when they should be a single and unified interest. In this attempt the law provides that in every case of accident, great and small, the whole transaction of adjustment and payment must be done through the workmen's compensation commission. The result shows that the attempt by the State to do the business of its citizens must inevitably cause enormous expense to the State government, besides the inconvenience and disorganization of private business and injury to private interests, whether of capital or labor. But pending a revision of the law, which shall remedy this fault, I deem it essential to maintain the good faith of the State toward those who are operating under the law to make an immediate appropriation which shall enable the commission to continue its operation under the present law for the brief time only required to revise and amend the law.

The present grave condition of the finances of the Commission is due as much to the gross extravagance and waste of the Commission in its organization as in the conduct of its business. The law creating the Commission provides that it shall have its principal office at Albany. Instead of this it has hired an office in the City of New York at an annual rental of thirty-five thousand dollars. Its bill for the furnishings of these offices is absurdly extravagant. The rate of compensation paid to employees is inexcusably high, one special counsel receiving ten thousand dollars for three months' services. The number of employees seems grossly excessive.

While the average expenditure of the Commission seems to have been up to this time in excess of a hundred thousand dollars a month, I shall recommend an appropriation for the balance of the fiscal year of not more than one-half of that amount, or a total appropriation of four hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars. While I am unwilling to recommend an appropriation insufficient for the effective operation of the Commission, I beg leave to communicate to the legislature my sincere hope that in the re-organization of the Commission, a way may be found to reduce the expenses of the commission to a figure considerably less than this.

(Signed) CHARLES S. WHITMAN.

This special message was prompted by a report from State Comptroller Travis in which he stated that his experts had made a searching investigation into the affairs of the compensation commission because that body reported its appropriation was exhausted and immediate funds were needed to carry on its work. His experts found that the commission had been extravagant in payment of excessive salaries, high rent for offices in New York and elsewhere and for "the costly furnishings therein, amounting almost to luxury."

Mahogany desks at $267, a couch at $50 and chairs at $51.25 are cited as examples.

The commission has several $10,000 subordinates, more at $7,500 and $5,000, and 11 deputies at $4,000 each. Had it not been for these lavish expenditures, the appropriation made by the legislature of 1914 to run the commission for the fiscal year would not have been exhausted before Jan. 28, 1915.

These paragraphs in the comptroller's report show how the up-to-date rural taxpayers are taxed to furnish cheap compensation insurance in the manufacturing districts:

Maintenance of Insurance Fund.—The law governing the Workmen's Compensation Commission provides that until January 1, 1917, all the expenses of the State Insurance Fund shall be borne by the State. There is nothing to indicate to what extent the Legislature intended to subsidize this fund, but the fact is that if this provision of law remains unchanged, and the cost of administering the fund continues as at present, the State will have contributed by January 1, 1917, over $460,000.

It is recommended that a study be made of this feature at once by experts of the State Insurance Department, to determine if this fund will be self-sustaining before the time now fixed. It is not unlikely that such examination would lead to a change in the law whereby this fund would be required to pay its own expenses after October 1, 1915. If this were done, $180,000—the yearly cost of the fund on the present basis of expenditure—could be cut from this appropriation now asked for. The commission, during the past six months, has issued policies at rates of 9 1/2 per cent. below commercial rates and since January 1st has put its rate 20 per cent. below those of commercial organizations. It is also proposed to rebate to the policy-holders 15 per cent. of their premiums. All this indicates a healthy condition of the Insurance Fund and apparently the taxpayers of the State are making it possible for employers to have low rates. The fund carries at present $366,469.86 in reserve for awards; $64,515.40 in reserve for catastrophes and an additional surplus of $178,697.35. Its liability for awards made amounts to $118,711.93 and there are pending claims, the awards upon which will probably increase the liability to $250,000.

The wisdom of the State maintaining an Insurance Fund on a subsidy basis, in order to provide low rates for employers, may seriously be doubted. It would seem that the experience of the past six months would be a better guide for the future than the theoretical basis upon which the present provisions of the law was founded.

CONSCRIPT ARMIES.

Military Rules in Force in the Various States of Europe.

Napoleon in 1798 first brought conscription into force, then it was adopted by Prussia after her defeat by the French at Jena in 1806. In most countries where conscription is in vogue every man on reaching a certain age—from nineteen to twenty-one—has to undergo a period of military training. This prevails in France and Germany, but in Russia a certain number of men is required only, and if this is exceeded the authorities decide from whom full service shall be exacted. Of course certain men are excused, such as the only sons or eldest sons of clergymen, etc.

In Spain and Portugal every man is not directly called upon, but each locality is obliged to furnish a certain number, the men being chosen by ballot. There is no standing army in Switzerland, but all ablebodied citizens serve in the militia, which is called upon to train a few weeks every year. Although compulsory service is the law of the land, the army in the Netherlands is mainly composed of volunteers.

It is considered by some people that conscription is unpopular, but in the rural districts of the countries where conscription is in force the inhabitants look forward to the time when they will be called upon as the only exciting change in their lives.

The best conscriptive countries have so legislated that when the conscript leaves the army suitable employment is found for him; also, another point in his favor, his period of service is not so long as that of the volunteer.—London Chronicle.

Six Foot "Pocket" Knives.

A knife large enough to serve as a pencil sharpener for the biggest giant of the fairy tales was recently finished, after four years of labor, by a New England mechanic, says Popular Mechanics. When open the knife is six feet seven inches long from tip to tip of the opposite blades. Closed it measures three feet two and one-half inches. It is six and one-fourth inches wide and weighs forty-nine pounds two ounces. The blades are of tool steel, the springs of steel and the tips and inlaid name plate German silver. The handle is rosewood. It is so constructed that it can all be taken apart and put together again in a few minutes. The maker of this huge tool is a knife maker by trade employed in a Connecticut factory. He made this knife entirely by hand at home in his spare time in addition to doing other regular evening work. Before beginning this knife he had made many very small ones, one measuring seven-sixteenths of an inch closed and three-fourth inch open, having two blades and a pearl handle.

Building a Campfire.

There are ways and ways of building a camp fire. An old Indian saying runs: "White man heap fool; make um big fire—can't get near. Injun make um little fire—git close. Ugh! Good!"

Two things are essential in the building of a fire—kindling and air. A fire must be built systematically. First get dry, small, dead branches, twigs, fir branches and other inflammable material. Place these on the ground. Be sure that air can draw under it and upward through it. Next place some heavier sticks, and so on until you have built the camp fire the required size.

A Story of Washington.

Abe Lincoln was not the only president who wished to abolish slavery. George Washington disapproved of slavery and said about the subject, "I wish from my soul that my state might be persuaded to abolish slavery."

One day Washington was out walking with one of his brother officers. A negro slave passed them and saluted the general. Immediately Washington responded by raising his hat.

"What!" said the officer. "Do you raise your hat to a negro?"

"Would you have me less polite than a negro slave?" asked Washington.

Boy Scouts' Game.

First aid for spelling down is a good game for boy scouts. Two leaders are selected, and they choose sides. Everybody is in it. Sides line up. Scoutmaster announces the first aid subject, and one leader gives first symptom and second leader next point. It goes back and forth as in the old fashioned spelling bee. When case is finished another is named. A scout missing a point sits down.—Scout.

The Study of Astronomy.

A sharp schoolboy home for the holidays, wishing to inspire his little brother with awe for his learning, pointed to a star and said: "Do you see that small luminary? It's bigger than this wide world." "No, 'tain't!" said his brother. "Yes, it is," said the youthful scholar. "Then why is it that it don't keep the rain off?" was the triumphant rejoinder.

An Apt Answer.

"Where did Washington live after he retired from public life?" asked the teacher after reading the story of Washington to her class.

There was silence for a moment. Then little Georgie Brown at the end of the class popped up. "I know, teacher. He lived in the hearts of his countrymen."

Washington as a Marksman.

One story of Washington's marksmanship in his youth is to the effect that he could sight and fire a rifle with one hand. This was an extraordinary feat, indeed, for the firearms of that day were heavy and cumbersome, and the loading of the piece was a long and difficult operation.

FARMERS' CLUB HEARS TALKS ON FORESTRY

Prof. E. S. Babcock of Boonville Gave Instructive Address on Important Subject.

The Oneida County Farmers' Club at its regular meeting recently discussed "Forestry.

Two pamphlets, one entitled "Hints for the Wood Lot Owner," and the other, "Why Forests and Foresting Are Necessary to the State of New York," were passed among the members previous to the meeting. The latter contains some interesting facts on the State College of Forestry at Syracuse.

Prof. Babcock read a paper treating the subject of Forestry in an extensive manner, and at its conclusion he received a vote of thanks. In opening, he said: "We meet to consider a question that is vital to the prosperity of every nation on the globe. It has special significance to the welfare of our own people. Forestry of America is of importance because of the country's constantly increasing per capita use of wood, such consumption greatly exceeding that of any other country or age. A few years ago it was predicted that concrete and steel would relieve the strain upon the forest, yet, since their introduction as a partial substitute for wood fibre, more wood per capita and at an increased price has been used than ever before.

The present acreage of woodland in this country is about one-half of the original acreage. The original land acreage remains, yet the removal of too large a per cent of its forest growth has caused a perceptible change not only in the country's physical appearance but in its potential use."

Prof. Babcock gave some interesting statistics in regard to forestry and continuing, he said: "The last 50 years have witnessed untold waste in the American woodlands, a waste not confined to any particular decade or region, but manifestly evident in every decade and in every State. The annual loss of wood to the American people is more than sufficient to build half a million homes. The American people take from their forests each year three times the amount of its annual growth. There is en enormous consumption and prodigious waste in the woodlands of America.

Prof. Babcock spoke on the problem of waste and the efforts to overcome it. He gave some statistics relating to forestry in New York State and also in Oneida and adjoining counties. He spoke of the relations of forestry to the other assets of the farm, such as the streams, the birds, animals, slopes, etc., and gave examples of many other uses for which forestry is directly responsible.

Prof. Babcock said: "The responsibility for a large per cent of the youth leaving the farms, has been put upon the public school and a great many farmers put this indictment upon the public school system. Undoubtedly, much of the criticism is true, but not all. For in many instances, while the school has been trying to fit boys and girls for good citizenship, the farmer himself has been exploiting the soil and forest portions of the homestead, thereby reducing its potential value as a future home for his children."

Prof. Allen spoke of the European system of forestry. He spoke briefly, but complimentary of that system. He then turned his attention to stereopticon views, with which he illustrated his lecture. His lecture and the views contained many valuable hints in regard to forestry. His slides were not only confined to forestry in this State, but throughout the country.—Utica Observer.

Peach Will Be Sentenced

The decision of the CCourt of Appeals made Friday sustaining the constitutionality of the 'day of rest" law is interesting in Oswego county, as one of the defendants in the proceedings is William J. Peach of Pulaski, prominent in the milk and cheese industry.

Mr. Peach offered to act for cheese makers of the State in a test case of the law and was arrested at Pulaski last summer, it being alleged that certain employes of the cheese factory at Pulaski worked seven days in succession.

Mr. Peach asked for a writ of habeas corpus but his petition was dismissed by Justice Hubbs. The case was appealed to the Appellate Division, which sustained the law, and then to the Court of Appeals.

District Attorney F. D. Culkin said Saturday that when the remittitur had been received Mr. ePach would be taken before Justice Morton and sentence imposed.

DEATH PENALTY FOR ONE WOMAN

Governor Opposes Bills Pending to Save Murderers and Murderesses

Albany, Feb 9.—Although there are 4850 persons confined in the four State prisons, there is but one woman who is charged with a capital offense. The lone woman who is awaiting electrocution or a reversal of the judgment of conviction is Madeline Ferola. This unfortunate young Italian woman stabbed the youth she was about to marry on a lonely bridge over the New York Central tracks at 149th street, New York city. Her appeal for a new trail is now before the Court of Appeals and a decision is expected within a short time.

Up to last week there were two women confined in the death house at Sing Sing prison. One was Mrs. Cynthia Buffon, a resident of the town of Mansfield, Cattaraugus county, who was convicted of having killed her husband, her young son and daughter by administering arsenic poison. The Court of Appeals last week gave her a new trial and the doors of the prison where she had been confined swung open and she was taken back to Cattaraugus county.

There has always been a decided expression of disapproval concerning the putting to death by the State of a woman, although there is on record in the State department of prisons the details concerning the electrocution of two females. The first one to meet death in this manner was Mrs. Martha N. Place who was sent to the chair on March 20, 199. Ten years later on the same date, Mrs. Mary Farmer was also electrocuted.

The crimes of both of these women were widely discussed at the time that they were committed and also when the time of their electrocution drew near. Every effort to save them from the chair was exerted but without avail. Details of their sensational passing were published broadcast, no detail being neglected.

In all probability when women are condemned to die in the future, the officials who will assist in the electrocutions at Sing Sing prison will be women, as it is necessary for their presence. While she awaits execution, Mrs. Ferola is guarded by two women attendants who have been placed over her as a death watch.

At the present time there are two bills before the legislature to abolish capital punishment. One, introduced by Assemblyman Ryan, changes the Penal law by making the penalty for murder, first degree, imprisonment for the natural life of the offender. The second bill, by Senator Dunnigan, is practically identical with that of Assemblyman Ryan's measure.

It is not likely that either of the above bills will become laws during the administration of Governor Whitman. One of the first public statements made by the new executive after taking office was a declaration against the abolition of capital punishment. Governor Whitman bases his opposition to the doing away with the electric chair upon his wide experience as district attorney of New York count. He feels that there is no other way to strike fear into the hearts of criminals than the method of punishmeut which is now and has been for a number of years metered to those who are convicted of murder, first degree. Even though the legislature should pass either of the bills aimed at the death penalty, Governor Whitman would veto it.

There have been a number of cases where women have killed, but one defense or another has saved them from conviction for murder, first degree. Insanity has been a favorite plea and more than one jury has based its verdict, and no doubt very properly, upon that defense.

It is frequently difficult to secure a jury because many openly declare their opposition to the death penalty.

ADMIRALTY'S ACTION STIRS UP CRITICISM

By HERBERT TEMPLE.

London, Feb. 8.—Every British merchantman will be ordered to hoist the flag of a neutral country whenever any emergency arises in which such action will be of assistance. This was made clear at the admiralty today closely following the announcement that the hoisting of the American flag on the liner Lusiatania had been in accordance with instructions direct from the government. England will use every resource permitted by international law to protect her shipping.

While the admiralty believes that the use of neutral flags is necessary on certain occasions, criticism of this method of protection is already heard here. The Daily Express takes the lead in objecting to the admiralty's plan. It calls the scheme a "subterfuge" and its opinion is shared by other leading newspapers.

They endorse the statement of the admiralty accusing the Germans of piracy because of their warning that neutral ships may suffer in the war zone fixed by the German admiralty, but intimate that England will lose prestige if its shipping has to be protected by the flags of non-belligerent nations.

"Since when has the Union Jack become a color to be hauled down timidly, or an inadequate protection on all the seas," asks the Daily Express, after sounding a warning that the admiralty's procedure will disquiet public opinion.

"There is nothing illegal or opposed to the conventions of civilized warfare in the use of a neutral flag by merchantmen or warships of belligerents to escape capture, but in our case above all others, such tactics will seem inexpedient and even humiliating to the British mind.

"The whole affair leaves a very disagreeable taste in the mouth of England. We do not presume to question or to criticise the dispositions of the admiralty, but our confidence in the admiralty and in the navy is such that we are bound to regret profoundly a resort to a subterfuge, which, while it in no way excuses the German piracy, may give the enemy and neutral nations an opportunity for the sneer which we are least inclined to tolerate."

It can be stated that this comment by the British press will not alter the attitude of the admiralty. Its officials are confident that hey have taken the proper action and expect no protest from nations whose flags are used. In this connection they cited today dispatches from the United States indorsing the action that was taken to protect the many Americans aboard the Lusitania.

BOTH SIDES HELD AT BAY IN THE EAST

Paris, Feb. 8.—Despite the critical situation in the eastern theatre of war, Austria is sending reinforcements to strengthen the German armies in Alsace-Lorraine. Artillery is also being transported from upper Austria and Bohemia. In the fighting east of St. Die and near Altkirche, a number of Austrian artillerymen were taken prisoners by the French. These prisoners told their captors that a large number of heavy Austrian guns have been concentrated near Strassburg and also at Metz and Muelhausen.

An artillery duel has been in progress alon gthe Aisne and Oise rivers. Farther to the north the Germans guns have been hurling lyddite shells of terrific power against the trenches captured by the French near Arras on February 4. Fighting is reported from the La basse district where the German and British infantry were at grips south of Festubert and west of Guinchy (Cumchy).

The German forces in Champagne defending the railway line running through Betheneville and Montheis are hard beset by the French operations on the Perthes-Beausejour-Massiges line. Attack and counter attack came in quick succession in that district where neither side is giving the other any rest.

In Alsaac the French lines now lie north and south of Nuelhausen as well as to the west of that German stronghold. The country has been devastated by warfare. Farms are deserted and towns and cities are in ruins from shell fire or conflagrations set by the bombardment. Hundreds of homeless have made their way to Strassburg.

THROWN FROM SLEIGH

Gilbert Green, a hostler of 7th and Buffalo streets received a bad scalp wound yesterday afternoon when the sleigh in which he was riding tipped over on the lower bridge.

SENATOR JONES READING FROM "THE NEW FREEDOM," HELD SENATE FLOOR FOURTEEN LONG HOURS

PRESIDENT'S OWN BOOK BLOCKED THE BILL

Washintgon, Feb. 9.—The Republican filibuster agains the administration's ship purchase bill dragged its weary way through the night and was maintained unbroken this forenoon. Senator Jones of Washington, who took the floor at 6.45 o'clock lase evening, was going strong when the sun peeped into the Senate chamber early this morning.

His only rest came when there were demands for a quorum and the roll was called, but he showed no signs of fatigue and the Republicans predicted that he would capture the long distance talking record of the Senate.

The Democrats watched warily for an opportunity to catch him napping, but the Senator had them at bay and continued his oratory while his sleepy colleagues drifted in and out of the chamber.

Some of the Senators had to be aroused to get them into the chamber and raise a quorum.

The administration senators, confident that they could pass the bill by one vote if they could ever secure ballot, stuck to their plan of holding the Senate in continuous session. They accepted the challenge of the measure's foes for an endurance test and asserted that the Senate would would be held in continuous session until the bill was passed.

The Republicans and insurgent Democrats accepted this counter-defiance and declared that if the Democrats kept their word they would still be in session on March 4 when the present Congress passes into history.

It was a peculiar coincidence that Senator Jones' chief ammunition during the night and early morning was "The new Freedom," which was written by Woodrow Wilson before he became President. The reading of the President's own words blocked the vote on the bill which he has made every possible effort to pass.

The Washington Senator read steadily from the President's book, pausing occasionally to further explain or to emphasize some particular point, thus taking up more time. His longest chance for rest—an hour and a half—came during the night when Senator Fletcher of Florida called for a quorum at 11.20 o'clock. Only the filibuster guard on each side, some ten or twelve members altogether, were present and the sergeant-at-arms was ordered to rout the sleeping senators. He had mustered only 36 by 12.45 and then Senator James of Kentucky, moved that the sergeant-at-arms be ordered to arrest and bring to the chamber the absentees, whom he named. One by one the sleepy lawmakers came into the Senate, Senator Cummins of Iowa, being the first to arrive. At 1.25 the required number were in their seats. Before Sentor Jones began reading the President's book to the Senate he chose a variety of subjects with which to deal. Among other things he read to the Senate the entire shipping bill, together with all amendments, making many comments as he went along.

He also read from newspapers and magazines on matters pertinent to the bill.

The Senate wing of the capitol resembled a dormitory more than a legislative building. The rooms of the committees on military affairs, commerce, Indian affairs and the office of the secretary of Senate, contained sleeping senators, cots having been placed in available places.

Senator Chilton of West Virginia, slept on a couch in the President's room. Senator Hoke Smith of Georgia, had a cot in his room while Senator Stephenson of Wisconsin, who has the large office formerly used as the Senate postoffice, accommodated six or eight senators on cots and beds.

As the dawn brightened into daylight fresh senators dropped in to relieve their tired colleagues. Senator Kern, the majority leader, was among the first to arrive. Observing him, Sen. Jones paused and said:

"Good morning, Senator."

Jones then continued reading the "New Freedom."

Senator Jones surrendered the floor at 8.40 a.m. after having held it 13 hours and 55 minutes. His speech did not establish a new record for filibustering. Senator McCumbre of North Dakota succeeded him.

At 9.10 a.m. Senator Fletcher of Florida, asked that an order be issued bringing the absent senators into the chamber. His motion was adopted.

At 9.26, Senator Reed of Missouri, offered a motion placing all absent senators under arrest and compelling their continuous attendance in the chamber under penalty of punishment by the Senate.

Minority Leader Gallinger indignantly protested, declaring he would not submit to such dictation until he had to. He said he understood there were other minority senators who would join him in refusing to recognize such an edict.

Senator Lippitt of Rhode Island, moved to strike out clause of the motion relating to a penalty and Senator Reed promptly moved to table this amendment. On a roll call vote, Senator Lippitt's motion was placed on the table, 37 memebers favoring this action and 20 opposing it.

CARDINAL GIBBONS ILL

Baltimroe, Feb. 9.—Cardinal Gibbons left Baltimore today for the country where he will rest for a few days. The Prelate has not been in the best of health for the past few days. Although in poor health Sunday the Cardinal did not hesitate to go into the pulpit and deliver a strong sermon.

He is suffering from nervousness and a slight affection of the throat.

LATE WAR BULLETINS

By BERNARD BELANCOURT.

Amsterdam, Feb. 9.—The Belgian town of Paschendaele and Langermarck have been captured by the Allies, according to a dispatch received here from the Sluis early today. It says that the Belgian troops took these places with the assistance of a large force of troops after a hard fight with the Germans.

Langermarck is north and Paschendaele is northeast of Ypres. Their occupation would imperil the German army whose center rests on Rulern.

St. Omar, France, by Wireless. The second battle in Flanders is steadily growing in violence., The Germans are bringing up reinforcements from around Rheims and they are being thrown around the Allies' lines. The German losses are enormous. The hospitals at Rouliers are overcrowded and wounded are pouring in night and day. The village of Middelkerke has been destroyed by the artillery of the Allies. Maaslage near Rouliers changed hands several times and most of the town has been ruined.

Petrograd, Feb. 9.—Unofficial reports are current here that a Russian fleet is attacking the German naval base at Danzig on the Bay of Danzig, an arm of the Baltic Sea. Tese reports are unconfirmed at the Admiralty.

GERMANY'S NEXT MOVE AWAITED IN WASHINGTON

Washington, Feb. 9.—That the situation created by Germany's declaration of a war zone around the British Isles is of the gravest character, is indicated here by high administration officials. President Wilson told callers that word is being awaited from Ambassador Gerard of the full explanation promised by Germany by this move and until this is recived no formal action will be taken by the U. S., either in protest or inquiry. The President intimated that the first German note fairly bristled with things the United States would like to know.

HARD FIGHTING IN THE ARGONNE DISTRICT

Paris, Feb. 9.—The hard fighting in the western theatre of war is on in the Argonne region where German and French troops are contesting for victory in a forest near Bagatelle. The result of this combat has not yet been decided according to an official statment issued by the War Office this afternoon. The statement follows:

"In Belgium there was an intermittent artillery battle yesterday. Ypres and Furnes were bombarded. The Belgian army destroyed a farmhouse from which the defenders had fled. Along the Las Basse highway we re-occupied a mill where the enemy had succeeded in establishing himself. Sossons was bombarded with lyddite projectiles. Along the Aisne front in the Champagne district our artillery effectively replied to the German batteries. On the Argonne the battle raging around Bagatelle developed in one of the thickest parts of the forest and therefore assumed a very confused character. The front was maintained in general on both sides."

BRITISH ARTILLERYMEN PRAISED BY FRENCH'S STAFF OFFICER

By Franklin P. Merrick.

Paris, Feb. 9.—Several strategic bridges built by German engineers in the flooded district of West Flanders, north of Dixmude, have been wrecked by French artillery. So accurate and efficient has the fire of the French and British artillery become, not only in Belgium, but in the valleys of the Oise, Aisne and Meuse rivers, that General Joffre, commander-in-chief of the allied armies issued a special order at main headquarters in which high praise was given to the cannoneers.

Col. Swinton of the staff of Field Marshall Sir John French, who writes the "eye witness" narratives, declares that the fire of the British gunners has attained a degree of efficiency hitherto unknown in that branch of the British service.

Official dispatches tell of an unbroken artillery duel in West Flanders, while heavy gun fire is also reported from the Aisne.

Between Albert and Bethune the Germans are continuing their attacks against the allies' field works.

Both sides are again claiming small success in Champagne and Argonne.

In the Woevre district the French are attempting to resume their advance against the German line of communiactions between Metz and St. Mihiel.

In the Vosges and Upper Alsace desultory fighting is going on in a snowstorm.

CZAR'S FORCES MOVE 10 MILES IN PRUSSIA

By FRANCIS LAVELLE MURRAY.

Petrograde, Feb. 9.—German losses in the battle of Borjimow are estimated at 27,000 men in dispatches received here today from Warsaw. Of these at least 15,000 were killed, according to the correspondent of the Novoe Vremya, who was at the battle front in the great conflict that raged along the line through Borjimow, Goumine and Wolaczye-Lowiczka when the Germans attempted to cut their way through the Russian lines in order to approch Warsaw.

He reports a lull in the fighting with the Russians holding to the positions they won at Kamion by a flank attack and the Germans maintaining their front west of Borjimow.

North of the Vistula, however, a great battle is raging in the region of Rypin, while a large Russian force has invaded East Prussia near Johannisburg in an attempt to flank the Germans who have succeeded in resisting every effort to drive them from their trenches near Mlawa. Having occupied Rypin, the Russians are trying to press on toward Gulbinj and Dobrazy, which their cavalry reached in January, only to be driven back with heavy losses.

To resist the Russian advance on the front extending from Johannesburg through the Mlawa and Rypin regions to the lower Vistula the Germans have concentrated about four army corps (160,000 men). They have also brought up many batteries, which have been mounted at every strategic point along this line, which is approximately 100 miles in length.

By their thrust at Johannisburg the Russians have penetrated East Prussia for a distance of ten miles. Their cavalry raiders again tearing up the Germans' frontier railway.

The official reports from the Russian general staff indicate that no decisive battle has yet been fought in the Carpathians or in the Gemmnen-Insterburg region of East Prussia. In Bukowina the Russians have been forced to evacuate some of the positions before numerically superior forces of the enemy, but their withdrawal was effected in good order and without material losses.

GERMANY MAY DECLARE ALL WATERS IN "WAR ZONE"

By JOHN C. FOSTER.

London, Feb. 9.—That Germany has been aroused to bitter wrath because the Lusitania hoisted the American flag is the declaration made by a news agency correspondent at Amsterdam. Telegraphing today he says that the Nieue Rotterdamsche Courtant has received the following dispatch from Berlin: "The German newspapers say that if the U. S. acquisce in the misuse of the American flag by the Lusitania it will be impossible for German submarines and other German warships to ascertain whether the vessels flying the neutral flag are really neutral or not.

"It would be sheer suicide for German submarines to have to make long investigations in the work which will be necessarily entailed after the 18. The newspapers add that there will no longer be any question of contraband or noncontraband in British waters, because all those waters will then be a war zone."

RUSSIANS CHASED FROM MOUNTAIN FORTRESSES BY AUSTRO-GERMANS

By Steven Burnett.

Vienna, via Berlin and Amsterdam, Feb. 9.—Complete victory for the Austro-German army in Bukowina is claimed in an official statement issued at the war office today. The Russians have been driven out of the Carpathians on the borders of Transsylvania, it asserts and have been forced to retreat forty miles to the valley of the Upper Suczawa river.

"Our troops have been victorious in Bukowina," says the statement. "The Austrian and German forces have driven the enemy out of the snow filled Carpathians after heavy fighting. The Russians have retreated to the Upper Suczawa Valley with our troops in close pursuit.

"On February 7 our troops captured 400 Russians attempting to cover the retreat of their main forces. We also took seven guns and a quntity of supplies."

The Price of Neutrality

Is it not one of the ironies of fate that Uncle Sm, in trying to remain friends with everybody, should be gradually incurring the enmity of both sides in the European war? An American ambassador to one of the belligerent powers is quoted as saying; "We are going to be cordially detested by the whole world when this war is over." It is notorious that in both Great Britain and Germany disapproval of this country is openly expressed on every hand, each nationality accusing us of siding with the other.

Of course, this may be explained by reference to a fact of common psychological experience and observation—namely, that to persons in a passion there is nothing quite so completely exasperating as a refusal to join them in permitting emotion to govern reason. They can understand and even welcome violent opposition, but never calm indifference or cool neutrality. And it is particularly the would-be peacemaker who incurs their suspicions and hatred once they are thoroughly roused. Hi s'most careful advances are received with the hot hiss with which molten metal greets a drop of cold water.

That the United States remains neutral to the end, a course undoubtedly dictated by her best interests at the present time, and the belligerents reach a settlement which leaves no abiding international sore, it is not inconceivable that even Germany and England may become friends before some Germans and some Englishmen forgive Uncle Sam for his middle course.—The Globe.

Undeveloped Water Power

The rivers of the northeastern and middle eastern portions of the United States are the best known in the country and the earliest in point of development, and their usefulness as sources of power and centers of industry has been demonstrated for several generations. Nevertheless it has been shown by the work of the United States Geological Survey during past years and is demonstrated in one of the reports of the Survey that in spite of the long familiarity of manufacturers and industrial men in general with most of these rivers, the water resources they afford have not yet been appreciated and by no means developed to their fullest extent. In fact, there are very few rivers in this great region in which the development of waterpower has come anywhere near the maximum possible degree of usefulness.

The report mentioned, water supply paper 261, contains records of flow during several years of the principal rivers in New England, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania and Maryland, which empty into the Atlantic Ocean. Beginning with the records of the St. John River basin, in the State of Maine, the report takes up successively all the principal streams and many of their important tributaries along the coast as far south as the Rappahannock, in Virginia. Among the records of interest is that of Connecticut river at Orford, N.H., covering the years 1907 to 1909. It shows that the highest discharge for the three-year period occurred on April 16, 1909, when the river flowed 49,700 cubic feet per second. The highest discharge in the year 1908 was 36,700 cubic feet per second, on April 30; the maximum flow for the year 1907 was 40,600 cubic feet per second, on May 3. The record further shows that the lowest stage was recorded in the year 1908, when, on September 28, only 288 cubic feet per second of water passed the Orford station. During that year the flow exceeded 1000 cubic feet per second in September and October during only one day, and in this two months' low water period the average flow was only 687 cubic feet per second. Potomac river, as another example, has during the period in which its flow has been observed by the Geological Survey produced a flood flow 470 times greater than that of low water. In developing a water supply enormous sums of money may be uselessly expended unless observations of this kind are made throughout the various stages of stream flow.

Copies of water supply paper 261 can be procured on application to the director of the Geological Survey at Washington.—Utica Herald.

No Surrender to Patronage Demands!

It is to be hoped that the report that Governor Whitman has knuckled under to Controller Travis on the Tax Department bill is not correct. The Governor proposed a bill which was logical in theory and should have resulted in better and more scientific handling of the state's tax affairs under proper administration. It would have removed much patronage from the Controller's disposal, and some responsibility and prestige from the office. It did not go quite far enough in depriving the Controller of the anomalous functions he now performs in levying certain taxes; but it made a good beginning.

Amendment of that bill to meet the Controller's objections would leave the patrongae in his hands, available for "organization" leaders. It would also leave comparatively little merit, other than a general declaration of principle, in the Governor's bill. The Governor has an issue in reforming the state's tax levying machinery and reorganizing it on a scientific basis, which he should not let any questions of political patronage or official antagonism obscure.—N. Y. Tribune.

PROGRESSIVE ONEIDA

Oneida, Feb. 7.—At the open meeting of the City Federation of Women's Clubs yesterday afternoon at the home of Mrs. S. H. Goodwin plans for an Easter party were considered. A committee was named to designate the date and character of the entertainment.

Reports from ten working committees were given. The question of providing larger and more suitable quarters for the cooking and sewing classes instituted by the federation was discussed, and this problem will be given immediate attention.

Mrs. L. J. Myers, chairman of the Employment Bureau, which has headquarters at the Salvation Army Hall, gave an interesting report of industrial conditions. The bureau has provided employment for ten women, two women have been given permanent work and six were found temporary positions.

Sixteen men applied for work and twelve were given employment. The report of the Employment Bureau is striking evidence of the need of such an organization here, according to the executives of the federation.

Mrs. George F. Mills of the Charity Committee urged better co-operation of the various benevolent societies at Christmas time, that the city's poor will all be provided for.

An investigation of the Palmer-Owen child labor bill now before Congress is to be started by the federation in behalf of local interests.

The treasurer's report showed the organization to be on a sound financial basis.

This is enough to convince one that Oneida must be a good place to live in. Here one is sure interest in human welfare is a mighty factor in the community. The work of this kind belongs part and parcel to the women of every community. They are the logical ones to reach and serve humanity. They are the ones who, free from the cares of the business world which man lives in, find time to read, think and study on the mothering of humanity.

Oneida ranks first with progressive cities. When will Fulton fall in line?

BELGIAN CHILDREN SEND AID THANKS

Little Ones of Stricken Village Write Letter to U. S. Youngsters

A formal little letter, but signed with the scrawling signatures of thirty-one of the children of Lantin, has reached the headquarters here of the Commission for the Relief in Belgium. It is one of the few letters of the kind that the Germans have permitted to go out of the country. Minister Whitlock has the others in a big bundle in his office in Brussels.

The letter from Lantin is as follows:

"We have been greatly moved by your delicate attention in sending to the Belgian children some presents, which so many would have been unable to get this year but for your noble and beautiful inspiration.

"We, the children of Lantin, thank you from the bottom of our hearts for the clothes, toys and candies which you have been so kind as to send us.

"We keep for all our little friends in the United States our best recollections, and would like to send them each in turn our most sincere thanks.

"We beg you, Mr. President, to believe in our true gratitude, and please accept this expression of our deep respect."

Yolande Nys, Juliette Toitter and twenty-nine other youngsters thus send their thanks to the children of the United States for the Christmas cheer which helped them forget for a while the sadness that war has made in their country.

The commission has received also a description of how food is distributed when it arrives in Rotterdam.

"The cargo," the report says, "is put upon canal boats, which go from Holland waterways past the military inspection. Belgium is gridironed with canals, which have been repaired so that canal boats can take food to several hundred cammunes and distributing centres.

"The distribution, which is under the supervision of Americans, is done by the Comite National de Secours et Alimentation. The cost of these rations is nine francs each month, which consist of 300 grammes of bread, a portion of potatoes, coffee, salt, a litre of soup, containing vegetables and lump meat.

"Meal tickets are distributed, and the upper and middle classes who are able purchase food from the canteens. Children between three and twelve receive rations at the schools."

Ernest Schelling, pianist, will make his only appearance in America this season at Aeolian hall on March 3. He will be the soloist with the New York Symphony Club. All the proceeds of this concert will be given to the Polish Relief Fund. Schelling is a personal friend of Mme. Sembrich, president of the American Committee for Polish Relief, and of Paderewski, whose protege he was in his student days.

Citizens of Montclair have contributed more than $1.000 to a fund for war sufferers in Albania.

ADAMS HOUSE SOLD

Alonzo L. Adams, owner and proprietor of the Adams house at 65 East Bridge street, Oswego, announced yesterday that he had sold the hotel to the Joy brothers of Smithville, Jefferson county, former proprietors of the Windsor hotel at Phoenix. The consideration is understood to have been in the neighborhood of $16,000. Possession will be given on March 1.

The new owners will remodel the hotel interior. The Adams house has 40 rooms.

Mr. Adams has been proprietor of the Adams house for 22 years. He will retire from business.

ONEIDA MAN APPOINTED

Reports from Oneida are to the effect that the appointment of canal patrolman on the Erie canal will go to Bert VanHorn of Oneida. The salary has been $1800 but may be raised to $2400.

Economy and Saving.

A sort of paradox is the fact that thousands of people who make no effort to save a dollar when times are highly prosperous will develop and practice economy when work and opportunity are less plentiful. The best way, of course, is to try and save at least a little all the time, putting by a larger amount when earnings are at their height. As a nation we are not taught that economy, which makes France the banker of the world and whose accumulations come not from vast exports of natural resources, but from the combined small savings, consistently continued year after year, by the French people as a whole.

The French save partly because it has become hereditary and chiefly because the children are brought up that way and are taught the dignity of accumulation. We, on the contrary, in a spirit of false pride, are inclined to scorn the necessity of saving, as though it were something of which to be ashamed. If our present experiences shall teach us thrift it will be a strengthening of a great national weakness.—H. M. Windsor in Popular Mechanics Magazine.

Superstitious Cures.

At an inquest in an English town on a five-month-old child the mother was said to have given it a decoction of snails and Demerara sugar as a cure for whooping cough. She put the snails, alive, into the sugar in a muslin bag, and the liquid filtrate was the medicine. It seems that the "snail" remedy is known in other parts of the country. Hot lemonade, hot treacle and elderberry sirup are also given by the poor as a cure, and a sugared infusion of snails may be just as efficacious as any of them.

Walks round the gas works with the suffering children are still practiced. Old women were great believers in this method of cure, and they used to be laughed at for their faith in it. There was method in their strange apparent madness, and one of the best known cures today is the vaporizing of fluids that give off compounds similar to those emanating from places where they make gas.—London Tatler.

An Indiscreet Memory.

"You and that very charming Miss Malcom were boy and girl friends, I'm told?"

"Yes."

"I saw you talking to her. You must have had a delightful time recalling early days?"

"Well, no. I tried to make it pleasant, but it didn't seem to work. I recalled to her how she climbed trees and fences when she was ten years old, and she gave me a freezing look. Then I asked her to remember how she was thrown from an overturned bobsled and went head foremost into a snowdrift and stuck there. 'You were seven years old,' I said, 'and I recall that you were'— What do you think she did?"

"I dunno."

"Said 'Sir!' and stalked away."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

The Hull of a Dreadnought.

An amazing amount of material goes to the making of a 22,000 ton battleship. Into the hull alone enter some 9,800 tons of steel and iron, an amount more than equal to the whole of the material from keel to fighting tops in many of the pre-Dreadnought war vessels. Of this amount of material over 6,000 tons is steel plating, 2,856 tons is for shapes, channeling and angle pieces; the weight of the rivets used exceeds 530 tons, these rivets ranging in diameter from three-eighths of an inch to one and one-half inches, and there are over 400 tons of specially shaped steel castings, ranging in weight from two to eighteen tons each. These figures include nothing for gun mounting or special armoring, but are for the mere construction of the bare hull alone.—London Express.

London, Ex-Watering Place.

Time was when London was a watering place, whose wells, if not rivaling Bath or Harrogate, were widely famed and frequented by people from all quarters. In South London there were quite a number of spas, Lambeth wells, which sold water for a penny a quart and gave it to the poor for nothing, St. George's wells, Sydenham wells and Dulwich wells being the best known.—London Graphic.

War: Pathos and Humor

Berlin, Feb. 9.—Cigars and cigarettes are the most highly valued articles at the front. In an interesting letter, just received here, a German soldier tells of a trade where he exchanged 50 cigarettes for a whole steer. He writes:

"Most of our boys at the front are inveterate smokers. They know the value of a good weed. Some times a good smoke will make you forget that your stomach is empty.

"For the last two days I have been subsisting on bread and cigars. Our field kitchen—the goulash gun, as we call it—cannot come up to the battle line, and so we must live on what we carry in our knapsack. A heavy black cigar will tide you over for a day when there is nothing else to chew.

"A few days ago we were all longing for some fresh meat. There was none for miles around. Suddenlya Bavarian detachment came along, with a whole drove of cattle. First they refused to let us have any, but after some bargaining they traded a fat steer for fifty cigarettes.

"Every soldier in our army is supplied with two cigars every day at present. Besides almost everybody receives tobacco from home. But some of the cigars we received were terrible. They were so bad we could not smoke them. So we threw them over to the French, who eagerly gathered them in. They were so delighted that they gave us some cognac in exchange. This was before they commenced to smoke the cigars. After they had lighted them they got highly indignant and commenced to fire at us like mad.

"There were days when we had nothing to smoke but dried tea leaves and straw. Then again we have tobacco but nothing to light our pipe with. We are not permitted to have fire in the trenches, for the smoke would draw the enemy's fire. Matches are very scarce and our electric flashlights give light, but no fire. So one of my comrades has overcome come this difficulty by using a strong magnifying glass which he found in the pocket of a French officer killed in battle. This works all right when the sun is shining.

"At times cigars were so scarce we had to throw dice in order to decide how many puffs each one of us was entitled. I was unfortuiate enough to get only three puffs."

GIRL RISKED LIFE TO SAVE; BUT LOST OUT

Ridgefield, N. J., Feb. 8.—Belle Scheck, 12, is threatened with pneumonia today, following her heroic but futile efforts to save the life of her eight year old chum, Sarah Van Owen from a watery grave. The girls were skating. The ice was thin and they ventured too far out. Belle was in the lead when she heard a scream. She turned and saw her chum struggling in the water. Without an instant's hesitation Belle plunged into the open water, skates and all, to rescue Sarah. The laater could not swim. The little heroine clutched her chum's collar. She reached the edge of the ice, succeeded in placing Sarah upon it, but it was too frail and gave away again. Time and again she tried to get hold on the edge of the ice but each time it broke. Sarah's struggles hindered the would-be rescuer. She became exhausted and then womanlike she fainted. She was rescued but little Sarah's body was found under the ice. The little heroine was inconsolate today when she learned that her efforts to save her chum had proven futile.

Many children dislike milk as soon as they have passed their babyhood days. The food values it contains, however, are very essential to the proper growth of the child. Many mothers are therefore at a loss for ways in which to disguise the despised milk so as to make it palatable.

Probably one of the best ways is to give the child a pure coca, made entirely with milk. This should be made of a cocoa which has had part of the excess fat removed in its preparation, and in preparing the beverage it should be made very weak. Even if it has but a faint taste and color of cocoa, to the child who dislikes milk it will be very welcome.

Most children like cereals, and these can be cooked in milk instead of water. When served with plenty of milk the child eats unknowingly a goodly quantity of this food beverage.

These simple cream soups will also prove a welcome addition to the child's diet list:

Cream of Spinach Soup

Blend one tablespoonful of butter with one of flour, and add slowly two cups of cold milk. Stir until all is smooth and creamy. Add two cups of spinach pulp. Serve hot with croutons.

Oyster Stew

Drain a quart of oysters and put the liquor on the stove with a half cup boiling water, a little salt and pepper and let boil up once. Add oysters, piece of butter, half pint boiling milk and let come to a boil. Serve while hot.

A plain custard is nourishing and attractive to the average child.

Baked Custard

One pint of milk, three eggs, one-half teaspoonful salt, two tablespoonfuls sugar. Beat yolks of eggs well, scald the milk and pour over the eggs sugar and salt, pour into a pudding dish or individual dishes and bake very slowly in a second pan with water in it until firm. Quick cooking ruins this kind of custard.

Baked Apple Dumplings

Peel and core eight tart, juicy apples, filling the sore cavity with sugar and a pinch of cinnamon or cloves. Make a soft crust as for baking powder biscuit; roll in a sheet about a quarter of an inch thick and cut in eight pieces. Set each apple in the center of a slice, and cover, pinching the edges together over the apple. Lay them side by side in a pudding dish, spread butter over them, and bake to a russet brown. Take from the oven, cut a little hole in the top of each dumpling, and pour in this aperture a sauce made of butter and sugar, dissolved in boiling water, with a little nutmeg grated in. Put a tablespoonful of this sauce in each dumpling; then place carefully on a platter and serve hot or cold, with rich, sweet cream and sugar.

Chocolate Cake

One-half cup butter, 1 cup sugar, 2 eggs, 3 tablespoons good cocoa, 1½ cups flour, 1 rounding teaspoon baking powder, ½ cup milk. Bake 40 minutes.

Itlaian Spgaghetti

Spaghetti.
1-4 cup olive oil.
1 medium sized onion.
A bit of garlic.
One-half cup diced lean beef or other meat.
2 tablespoons dried mushrooms.
1 cup lukewarm water.
Sprig rosemary.
Salt and pepper.
1 tablespoon Italian conserva or cooked tomatoes.

Cook the spaghetti as usual and serve with sauce made as follows: Pour the olive oil into a frying pan, chop the onion and bit of garlic and brown in the hot oil. Add the beef and fry until brown. Soak the mushrooms in a cup of lukewarm water, drain thoroughly, chop fine and add to the meat. Pour in the strained water and add rosemary, salt and a little pepper. One tablespoonful of Italian conserva gives a better flavor than cooked tomatoes, but the latter may be used. Cook slowly and thoroughly, adding hot water as needed. Pour over the spaghetti and cover with a generous sprinkling of grated cheese.

Macaroni

Macaroni, to the average American housekeeper, means an occasional dish to eke out a meal, or an ingredient of some kinds of soup. To the Italian housewife it is a staff of life like bread, and appears upon the family table almost as frequently. It is used in nearly every kind of soup and in several forms other than the familiar dish of baked macaroni and cheese which is prepared by boiling the macaroni in milk until tender and placing it in a buttered pie dish with alternate layers of grated cheese. Then it is covered with a mixture of two beaten eggs and two ounces of melted butter, baked and served very hot.

Some times there will be a goodly portion left over, and it can be used cold in a delicious fashion. Line a shallow salad dish with lettuce leaves, place on them thin slices of cold macaroni and cheese, and cover with mayonnaise dressing.

Macaroni Pudding

Take an equal quantity of ham and chicken and mince them fine. Then weigh out half the quantity of macaroni which has been boiled until tender, add it to the meat with two well beaten eggs, one ounce of butter, cayenne pepper and salt to taste, put in a basin and boil for two hours.

Bread Pudding

There are bread puddings and bread puddings. When made of remnants of bread varying in age, size and quality, and with a happy-go-lucky measurement of milk, sugar and spice, and it appears on the table with half swollen raisins, overbaked crust and a lumpy consistency, it well deserves the fate of being left untouched by the disappointed diner. But when made of good material, properly proportioned, and well served in some uncommon manner, or called by another name, it will tempt the most fastidious appetite.

A variation of the usual formula for steamed bread pudding will require the following materials:

2 cups of dry bread.
¼ cup butter.
½ cup molasses.
1 cup raisins.
1 cup of sweet milk.
1 egg.
½ teaspoon soda.
½ teaspoon cloves,
½ teaspoon cinnamon.
¼ teaspoon salt.

And if liked more fruity add one-half cup more of any other kind of fruit or nuts preferred.

Chop the bread fine, or crumble it if that be easier, seed the raisins and cut once or twice. If nuts are used crumble them into small pieces. Melt or soften the butter, add it to the bread, then add the other articles and let the mixture stand half an hour or until the bread is softened. Turn the mixture into two well buttered baking powder cans, cover and stand them in a steamer and let the water boil steadily for one hour. Serve with any preferred sauce.

Unusual Apple Pudding

When I recall some early specimens of the old fashioned apple pudding boiled in a bag and served with a crude molasses sauce, it seems that taste and fashion in cooking have changed greatly; there are few tables on which such a bag-pudding would be tolerated today. Sometimes, it is true, these puddings were light, but more often the water was not really boiling when the bag was dropped in or it was allowed to stop boiling at some critical time and a soggy sort of a dessert followed, that would today cause a family row or a change of boarding place.

Good ranges and fuel are so common that it is a very inefficient cook who would set forth a soggy, underdone pudding or pastry soaked on the under side.

When something different is craved there are little inventions of the cook that will displace pie once in a while and also take the place of so many molded jellies and creams which, good as they are, become tiresome. For one of these dainties pare and core half a dozen apples. Mix one-quarter cup of chopped nut meats, one-half cup of sugar and a little cinnamon and fill the centers of the apples, after setting them in a buttered baking dish. Add a little water and bake until the apples are tender but not broken and soft. Roll some rich pastry thin and cut in rounds and if it is puff paste all the better. Bake in a hot oven and cool. Place one apple on each round, dust with powdered sugar and serve instead of the customary wedge of pie.

CANCER INCREASES DEATH CAUSES IN UNITED STATES

Washington, Feb. 9.—The deathrate for the United States in 1915 shows a slight increase over that of 1912, accordin gto figures published by the Census Bureau today. In 1913 the rate was 14.1 per 1000 population while in 1912 it was 13.9. Deaths from tuberculosis are decreasing and those from cancer increasing.

The total number of deaths in 1913 was 890,848. Washington had the lowest death rate of any of the States—8.5. New Hampshire led with 17.1.

Of the cities of 100,000 population and over, Seattle had the lowest death rate, 8.4; while Memphis had the highest, 20.8.

NO OPERATION ON SUNDAY

Evangelist Cancels Plan for Treatment for His Voice

Philadelphia, Feb. 9.—Three times today "Billy" Sunday challenged the manhood of Philadelphia to "hit the trail," and the response was 274 at the morning service, 603 at the afternoon service and 633 at the night service, making a total of 1,510 for the day.

Although Sunday's voice was in such condition that an immediate surgical operation was considered advisable, the evangelist now will not consent to undergo treatment because of the publicity given his plans. This was the statement tonight of Dr. H. M. Goehring, of Pittsburgh, who came here today and confirmed the announcement of the arrangement for the operation printed in this city several days ago, which announcement the evangelist and members of his party denied.

Dr. Goehring expressed himself as "amazed at the atmosphere of mystery and deceit which has cloaked the entire matter."

"I made all arrangements with Mr. Sunday himself on January 24," he declared, "and I see no reason for suppressing the operation story. The published article was entirely correct except that we arranged for the work to be done February 7, today, instead of February 9, as was published."

Father Hopkins, at St. Mary's church Sunday, announced that a Forty Hours' Devotion will be held in the church starting Sunday, February 21. He also announced that mite boxes will be given out to the members of the congregation, and he expects that those who deny themselves luxuries during Lent will put the money saved in the boxes for the benefit of the new church building fund. The contents of mite boxes last year netted over $1000.

G. H. Richards, who was badly injured in the collapse of the parochial school in Fulton last November, has filed an application for 128 weeks' compensation for the loss of an eye. He received but eight weeks' compensation, whereas it is claimed that for the loss of an eye the schedule calls for 128 weeks.

A conference will be held at the Mayor's room at the City Hall this evening between members of the Fire and Police Board, acting City Attorney Pidgeon and Mayor Hennessey, at which time the matter of formulating plans to include the firemen in the city pension plan will be discussed. It is probable that Mr. Pidgeon will be asked to prepare a bill for introduction into the Legislature which will bring about half pension for both police and firemen.

"SANITO" COOKING UTENSILS
are a necessity for housekeepers who wish to excel in domestic science. They are the only American-made cooking ware which absolutely reproduces the high priced, imported German utensils, so universally used abroad. SANITO utensils have an acid proof lining which cannot crack or scale off and retains nothing to taint or discolor the food. When cooked in SANITO the food cooks evenly, retains all its juices and flavors and never scorches or burns. SANITO is a nonconductor of heat and after being heated to the cooking point—212 degrees—it requires but a very small gas flame to complete the cooking process. With proper care SANITO will last a life time.

CLUB DISCUSSED VARIED TOPICS

The Shipping Bill Among Other Present Day Topics of Interest Discussed by Current Events Club

The Shipping Bill, our open air school, the new school laws, and the barge canal were topics discussed at the Current Events Club last night.

The meeting was held with Mr. and Mrs. E. J. Penfold and the appointed leaders were Messrs. L. W. Emerick and B. A. Reddington. Mr. Emerick opend the discussion with references to the open air school which yesterday began work. He explained the plan of the school to be for the purpose of enabling children handicapped physically in school work to build up under special treatment without discontinuing their studies. This, he has been shown is done by keeping the child constantly in the fresh air, partaking of warm, nourishing liquids mid-day and then lying at rest for a short period. Mr. Emerick stated further that the committee in charge of this work, and of which he is a member, wished to correct the impression that this treatment is for children suffering physical defects of tuberculer tendencies. The primal idea as shown was that any child handicapped from keeping up in his studies through physical reasons, and unable in the atmosphere or environment of the average schoolroom to build up physically, is given the privilege of the open air school. Mr. Emerick stated any one who would watch for the results to be obtained in the local open air school would no doubt be pleased as well as surprised at the wonderful results.

The shipping bill was tabled for discussion. Mr. Emerick claimed little knowledge of the bill except for the main feature, that of purposing the government purchase ships for the use of individual concerns and conducting the trade until such time as it might prove profitable. This, the speaker said, smacked of paternalism, and personally, does not believe the government should go into business in any line, particularly the freight, or shipping business, where competition has always been exceedingly keen

A short open discussion followed Mr. Emerick's talk and some fine points made.

Mr. Reddington spoke briefly on the barge canal works, comparing the state canal with that of the Panama canal. The topic had been pressed upon the speaker at short notice he stated, and as it was too big a topic to handle hastily he submitted but a simple outline.

Supt. Fairgrieve spoke of the new laws in regard to schools. He stated more legislative measures for schools had been enacted this year than that of any preceding time. Most of these measures Prof. Fairgrieve stated were for the benefit of rural schools. The growth of school laws, which in their infancy were bitterly scored as contrary to personal freedom, have since been deemed wise, and productive of great good in school growth.

The facts of legistation in regards to schools as set forth showed that more measures become statutes than the average person realizes.

The next meeting is scheduled to be held at the home of Mr. A. G. Gilbert.

BETTER THAN BOSTONIANS

Although "Robin Hood" is twenty-three years old, and Reginald De Koven has written many other work, this is the first time that he has lent his name to any company presenting his operas. The De Koven Opera Company, composed mostly of Grand Opera singers and headed by IvyScott of the Century Grand Opera, New York, will be heard at The Quirk, Friday, Feb. 12, and, radical as it may seem, Mr. DeKoven is authority for the statement that the vocal balance and calibre of the present company, suits him even better than did the original Bostonians. This is explained by the fact that in those days there was a certain amount of catering to the comedians of the organization, while the comedy roles are not neglected, the music is sung by singers possessing voices suited to the score, who were carefully selected from the grand opera houses of this country and Europe.

POLICE COURT

The case of Morris Kaplin against Eugene Kimball was in court this morning and resulted in an adjournment until Feb. 15.

The plaintiff sues to recover $40 and interest, the amount due on a promissory note payable to Mr. Kaplin's order.

Defendant answered that he and Kaplan lent their credit to Roumain Kimball, and it was agreed that each was to be liable for one-half of the amount of the note.

Eugene Kimball offered judgment of $20 with interest and costs, which was refused by Mr. Kaplin.

Attorney Ilman represents the plaintiff, and Attorney Cullen the defendant.

URGES ANTITOXIN FOR DIPHTHERIA

The State Department of Health has issued an appeal for a more general use of antitoxin in cases of diphtheria. In its appeal the department says:

"The State department provides antitoxin free, and it may be obtained from every health officer throughout the State and from numerous supply stations which have been established in cities, towns and villages during the last year.

"It is not always easy to be sure at first whether a case of sore throat is diphtheria or not. It is wise to give the antitoxin at once in any case of sore throat which is at all suspicious of diphtheria. On the third or fourth days of the disease there is twice as great a chance of a fatal result as on the first and second.

Eyesore In E. Park Comes In For Condemnation at Public Works Meeting

Commissioners Stevenson, Spencer and Garrett conducted business at last night's meeting of their board, that of Public Works. A motion was passed that the City Engineer's plan for changing the trolley tracks at 1st and Oneida sts., in accordance with the Board's desire, be placed on file with Engineer Hill.

Sidewalk rebates for 1913 will be paid according to a resolution offered by Mr. Stevenson and which was carried.

Complaints was lodged with the Board that there is insufficient drainage at Buffalo and 5th sts. Cellars in that vicinity at times become filled with water to a depth of 4 feet—higher than the furnace doors in the houses.

Superintendent Rumsey was ordered by the Board to inspect the seat of trouble and make a report as soon as possible.

Band Stand Goes

Mr. Stevenson offered a motion, in effect, that the material of which the bandstand in East Park is composed be given deserving poor people. Some discussion was indulged in relative to a new bandstand to be situated upon the ground north of 1st st. and between Rochester st. and the library. No definite action was taken in the matter.

The city funds were found to be of a proportion as to justify the payment of certain outstanding accounts. These accounts total $325.31 and were taken from the water fund.

The following list of names are property owners who will receive rebates for sidewalk improvement, the money to come from the improvement fund:

WILL MODIFY HIS OVERDRAFT BAN

Controller of Currency Listens to Complaints Made by Many Bankers.

John Skelton Williams, Controller of the Currency, yesterday announced he will modify, if a logical way can be found, his recent order to National Banks that they must not permit overdrafts. His action is the result of the receipt of many letters from bankers who fear that great annyance and injury to business would follow a too rigid enforcement of the rule. Mr. Williams is considering modifying the order so that it will cure the abuse of overdrafts, yet prevent hardships to bank customers who unintentionally overdraw, or to those whose overdrafts may be abundantly secured.

As an indication of the extent of overdrafts, Mr. Williams said that in the last five years in the National Banks they had amounted to an annual average of $27,000,000. In one year they amounted to $47,000,000.

"This office," he added, "has recived many responses from banks in various sections of the country generally commending the efforts to abolish an evil which in some localities had assumed large proportions, and which had at times caused serious losses to many banks."

BASKET BALL LAST NIGHT

Rohrbough and Singleton excelled for State Street while Holly shone for the Baptists. The game was roughly played by both sides. The line up and score follows:

			Bowman
Taylor	C		Capt. Petrie
Rohrbough	RG		Townsend
Thompson, Bryant	LG		Allen

Held goals, Rohrbough, 2; Taylor, 2; Johnson, 2; Singleton, 3; Holly 2; Trask, 1; Townsend, 1; Allen, 1; goals of fouls, Singleton, 1; Johnson, 1; Allen, 3; Holly, 2. Snow, referee.

CITY CHAMBERLAIN ISSUES LAST CALL

City Chamberlain Washburn will keep open office until 9 o'clock Thursday evening, that the property owners who have not yet paid their taxes may have an opportunity of doing so. Thursday will be the last day provided by law for the payment of taxes whereon fees shall not be added.

Painfully Correct Pronunciation.

There are Bostonians that, wishing to be infallibly correct, pronounce Cracow Crack-off. This seems to be unnecessary. The word has been thoroughly anglicized for many years. Nor is there any need of pronouncing Berlin as if the final syllable were spelled "lain." It is not necessary to speak of Wien or Muenchen or Venezia or Livorno. Prairie du Chien in good American is Prairie doo Cheen, and the word Des Moines, as pronounced by our fellow countrymen, would be incomprehensible to a Frenchman. The toughest word we know is Rheims. Linguists inform us that it should be pronounced nearly as "franc" in "rancid."—Boston Herald.

The Moor and His Horse.

The horsemastership of the Moors is primitive and entirely successful. A Moor never walks when he can ride and never by any chance gets off to ease his beast. The Moorish horse always spends his nights in the open. He is never groomed or clipped. His youth is passed wandering untended over the vast fields. When in work he gets all the barley he wants at night and a drink before his feed in the evening. From 7 a. m. to 7 p. m. he expects to work and to work hard without bite or sup. His saddle is a wooden tree superimposed on at least half a dozen folded blankets, the thickness of which often reaches six inches, and he never gets a sore back.

PHOENIX LOST THREE GAMES

Seymour Bowled the High Three Games Total of 570

Quick Action Needed.

A large number of workmen are injured and a number are killed every week in this State. The compensation law provides that the injured ones shall be paid at a specified rate for their injuries and that the widows and orphans of the killed shall also be compensated. But the funds for carrying on this work have been exhausted. The expense for conducting this commisson has been large and that fact has caused a tendency to overlook the important business of the commission—the payment of those who deserve the money.

There has been a great deal of scandal about the delays which owners of properties condemned for Barge canal use have suffered. But the delay which a maimed man or a destitute widow may suffer is infinitely worse. The great majority of the owners of canal properties have not suffered the misfortunes of seeing the means of their livelihood taken away. Only a piece of farm here and a slice there have been aptropriated, and finally full compensation is made with six per cent. interest on top because of the delay. Many have been known to work the delay for all it is worth, for six per cent. with the security of the State back of it is a good income.

The delays and obstacles which men and women injured in industry have suffered have been far more cruel and bitter than any delay in the payment for property could be. The law's delays and obstacles cried to heaven, until last year this State placed a workmen's compensation act upon the books with the hope of putting an end to that delay. The law succeeded in a large measure. Not only have workmen been compensated for injuries for which in the usual course they would have never been paid, but they received the payments far quicker than they could have obtained them through legal procedure up through the gauntlet of courts with the odds against them. Now the commission is practically out of business and, just as long as it stays out, delay occurs.

Manifestly, one of the most imporant jobs of the Legislature and the State administration is to get started the business of paying widows and orphans what rightfully belongs to them and to men wounded in industry what is theirs. That there is extravagance in the department, and that it was started upon lines that called for prodigal expenditure we have no doubt. But that is a thing that may be cured through the proper channels, and it should not be permitted to interfere with the working of the law. —News, Ithaca.

WATERTOWN HAS NEW Y. M. C. A.

Public Spirited Citizens Joined In Making It a Reality and the Finest

The Watertown Standard describes the opening of the brand new Y. M. C. A. building in that city as follows:

Through the generosity and industry of the citizens of Watertown, the city, is enabled to dedicate the finest newest and most useful building that it possesses. A mounment to the best spirit of the city the Y. M. C. A. will stand for years to come as a reminder to visitors as well as to the residents themselves, of the splendid, unselfish nature of the citizens of Watertown in responding to the need of a new building to house the association.

For ten days, more than 200 persons sought pledges form the people in order to make the possibility of having a building a reality. For ten days they worked and worried, while the large clock on the side of old Washington hall slowly moved around the circle, pointing to higher and higher amounts as the campaign progressed. It was necessary to have pledged the sum of $150,000 for the other $50,000 necessary, had been assured the association, by the will of E. M. Gates upon the death of his wife.

The suspense was almost dramatic when the end of the ten days drew near. Almost all of the money had been raised and it was felt to be most unfortunate if, in spite of all they could do, the 200 workers should fail in their efforts. But when the time finally ended, the hands of the clock, registered not the sum of $150,000 but that of $163,000.

The fund was given a great stimulus by nine pledges of $10,000 each. R. J. Buck, the president of the board of directors and one of the most enthusiastic workers for the new building was one of those who contdibuted $10,000. The others were: David M. Anderson, George C. Sherman, G. H. P. Gould, Fred M. Kirby, J. Munson Gamble, J. B. Taylor, J. B. Wise and O. G. Staples.

What the People Pledged

The citizens of Watertown, in pledges that varied from $5 to several hundred dollars, raised the sum of $72,131. Everyone was willing to help. Each citizen seemed to realize the value to the community of having such an institution equipped with all necessaries and that the end might be attained all who could possibly afford it responded to the appeal for funds.

The employes of the J. B. Wise plant raised the sum of $1,035 in which they were helped by Mr. Wise, exclusive of his gift of $10,000. The employes of the John Weekes & Son Company succeeded in getting together the sum of $502 while the employes of other businesses of the city, large and small, contributed in a body what they could.

The most successful team working for subscriptions was that captained by Floyd L. Carlisle. The members of the team raised the sum of $9,603. When the campaign was all over, the whole town seemed to be more spirited for with the assurance that the building was at last a reality, the people realized that they had done something of which they might justly be proud.

Building One of Beauty

The building itself would be conspicous for its beauty and simplicity in a city much larger than Watertown. Situated as it is in the most prominent section of the square, the eye of the stranger and the visitor falls upon it first of all upon coming into the city. The building is constructed in an adaption of the Italian Renaissance style, the first floor being of Indiana dimestone. The second story of the six is of terra cotta and the upper four are of texture brick with terra cotta trimmings. The most casual observer, even from a glance at the outside of the building may grasp the note of the warmth and brightness that is characteristic of its most minor details.

A few of the simpler dimensions may serve to give an idea of the ample size of the structure. The front on Washington street is 116 feet and the side on Public Square is 84 feet long. The greatest dimension of the building occurrs along its South side at right angles to Washington street and is 126 feet. The shape of the building is that of a rectangle having its long side on Washington street with an L extending back from its north end. The height from curb to cornice is 80 feet above which is a 40 foot steel flagpole.

BIG PROBLEMS FOR MAGNATES

Certain Ones Refuse to Abide By 21-Men Layout; Fights Coming

By Frank G. Menke.

New York, Feb. 9.—The magnates of the National League rolled up their sleeves today as they went into session at the Waldorf. There was need of being stripped for action, for those magnates must wrestle at this session with a tougher bunch of problems than ever before.

The magnates are expected to formulate some answer to the demands of the American association and the International league that the draft rule be lifted and that those two class A minor leagues henceforth shall be given major league recognition.

The chances are that the magnates will turn down the demands. The National leaguers and American leaguers want to monopolize the major league field. That's why they have fought the Federals, and it seems fairly sure that they will not let the two leagues into their select company.

The maganates will act upon the request for permission to transfer the Jersey City franchise to the Bronx section of New York city.

Some of the magnates arrived with the avowed purpose of having the league rescind its rule limiting the playing roster to 21 men after May 15. Most of the managers have stated that they cannot operate with only 21 men.

It I is likely, too, that the magnates will toss overboard the rule passed at the December meeting which bars teams brom beginning the training season before March 1. The failure of American league to adopt the same rule, and the fact that most of the managers have complained about the March 1 date, has convinced many of the magnates that the rule isn't a good one. The magnates will also adopt the schedule.

SYRACUSE MERCHANTS SHOW HOME PRODUCTS

Made-in-Syracuse Campaign to Open February 19. Souvenirs to be Distributed.

Syracuse, Feb. 9.—Sixty-one Syracuse manufacturers have been assigned windows in Salina street stores in which they will display products during the "Made-in-Syracuse" campaign Feb. 19 and 20.

Many more manufacturers have also requested reservations for space in local windows, and this will be allotted to them as soon as arrangements can be made with merchants.

Every shop window from the Erie canal to the end of the business district in South Salina street will be filled with goods made in the city. The merchants have willingly joined in the movement, and with the exception of one or two who are yet to be heard from, have turned over their street fronts to the Chamber of Commerce Committee.

Stamps, advertising made-in-Syracuse products, have been designed, and 100,000 of these will be distributed to manufacturers in this district.

Pennants and Buttons

Pennants inscribed "Buy Syracuse-made Goods" and buttons with the same slogan will also be distributed to concern willing to place them in their windows. Another set of cards with the words, "Watch This Window for Syracuse-made Goods, Feb. 19-20." will also be given to merchants who have given over their windows to the Campaign Committee.

A second and extremely important plan of the Chamber Committee came to a head yesterday, when a moving picture concern received a contract to take several thousand feet of film of large Syracuse manufacturing plants. According to the arrangement, any manufacturing concern so desiring may have pictures taken of its plant and processes of manufacture.

These films will be placed on view at local picture houses February 19 and 20, and will then be shipped to the Panama-Pacific Exposition, to be seen at the New York Statebuilding.

Syracuse Foods at Feast.

At the "Made-in-Syracuse" dinner February 18 nothing but food made in this city will be served. Much of this has been donated to the cause by bakers and manufacturers of food products. t is expected that several hundred will attend the banquet. Complete arrangements for this feature will be made at a meeting of the Entertainment Committee this afternoon.

REMEMBERING DATES.

Mark Twain Had a Good Scheme and He Didn't Patent It.

"Dates are hard to remember because they consist of figures. Figures are monotonously unstriking in appearance, and they don't take hold. They form no picture, and so they give the eye no chance to help. Pictures are the thing. Pictures can make dates stick. They can make nearly anything stick, particularly if you make the pictures yourself. Indeed, that is the great point—make the pictures yourself. I know about this from experience. Thirty years ago I was delivering a memorized lecture every night, and every night I had to help myself with a page of notes to keep from getting myself mixed. The notes consisted of beginnings of sentences and were eleven in number, and they ran something like this:

"'In that region the weather'—

"'At that time it was a custom'—

"'But in California one never heard'—

"Eleven of them. They initiated the brief divisions of the lecture and protected me against slipping. But they all looked about alike on the page. They formed no picture. I had them by heart, but I could never with certainty remember the order of their succession. Therefore I always had to keep these notes by me and to look at them every little while. Once I mislaid them. You will not be able to imagine the terrors of that evening. I now saw that I must invent some other protection. So I got ten of the initial letters by heart in their proper order—I, A, B, and so on—and I went on the platform the next night with these marked in ink on my ten finger nails.

"But it didn't answer. I kept track of the fingers for awhile; then I lost it, and after that I was never quite sure which finger I had used last. I couldn't lick off a letter after using it, for, while that would have made success certain, it would also have provoked too much curiosity. There was curiosity enough without that. To the audience I seemed more interested in my finger nails than I was in my subject. One or two persons asked me afterward what was the matter with my hands.

"It was now that the idea of pictures occurred to me; then my troubles passed away. In two minutes I made six pictures with a pen, and they did the work of the eleven catch sentences, and did it perfectly. I threw the pictures away as soon as they were made, for I was sure I could shut my eyes and see them any time. That was a quarter of a century ago. The lecture vanished out of my head more than twenty years ago, but I could rewrite it from the pictures, for they remain." —Harper's Magazine.

COWED THE BAD MEN.

A General Who Didn't Fear Risking a Shot in His Back.

General Franks, a leader of many a dashing charge in India, held a unique position among his soldiers. They loved him for his courage, but were sometimes irritated by his strictness. Yet in spite of this exacting severity he was unexpectedly lenient when a large occasion demanded it.

One day when the regiment was "firing blank" a bullet whistled by him. He did not stop the firing, but when the number of rounds ordered had been completed he rode up to the line and said:

"Boys, there's a bad shot in the Tenth. He nearly shot my trumpeter, and what should I have said to the boy's mother? I don't want to know the blackguard's name. The officers will not examine the men's pouches."

This was on the eve of a campaign, and before action the senior major came to him and said: "Don't put yourself in front of the regiment tomorrow, sir. You know there are always one or two bad men in a regiment."

"Thank you, major," was the reply. "It's very kind of you. I might have given you a step."

When the Tenth was drawn up for the final advance he put himself at its head and called:

"Boys, I'm tould ye mane to shoot me today. Take my advice and don't shoot Tom Franks until the fighting's done, for ye won't find a better man to lade ye!"

The regiment answered with a cheer and carried the Sikh batteries with the bayonet rather than run the risk of shooting the beloved old fire eater at their head.—Washington Star.

More to Be Feared.

"Don't you get tired of finding fault?"

"No," replied the patient man of responsibilities. "I suppose people have a right to discover faults. What I object to is the man who assumes that faults exist and never troubles himself

NEARLY 20,000 STATE EMPLOYES

Their Salaries Amount to Nearly As Many Million Dollars In a Year

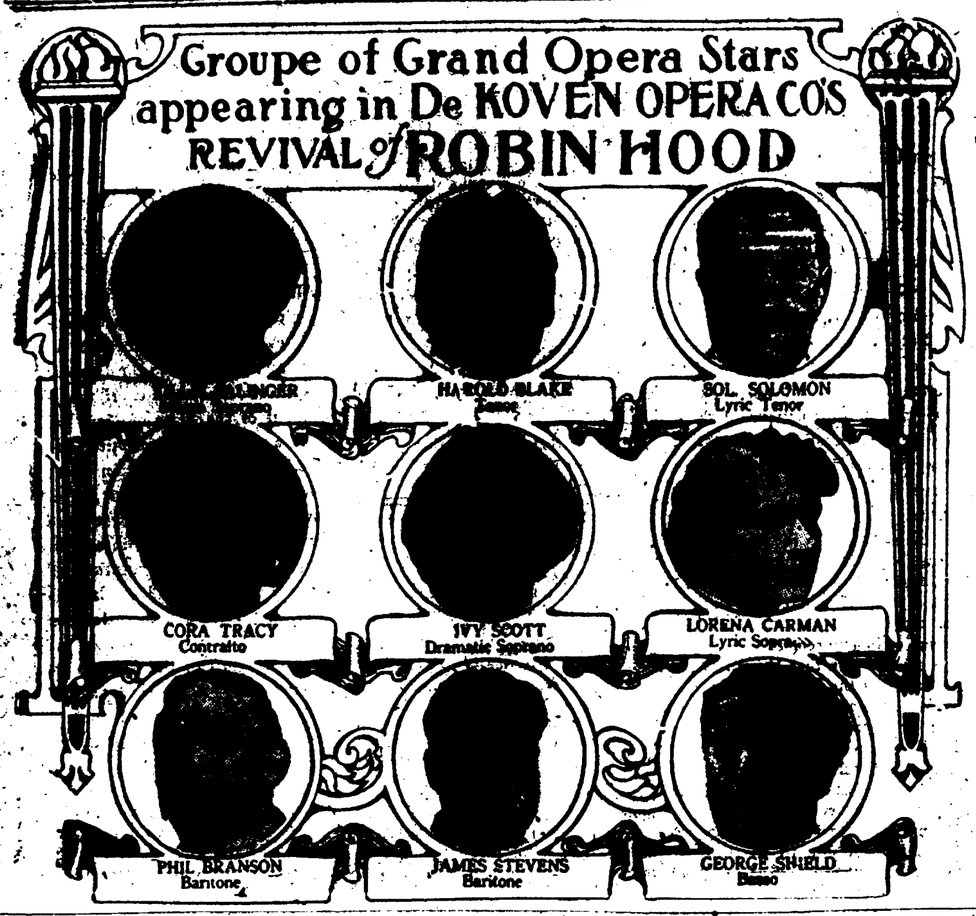
Albany, Feb. 9.—One of the reports submitted by Commissioner John H. Delaney of the Department of Efficiency and Economy to the Legislature is entitled "Descroption of the Government of the State of New York." It is a complete description of the functions, the organization and the activities of every unit of the State government, and is the first work of the kind to be prepared in any State. At the request of constitutional convention commission, a special edition is to be printed and each delegate to the constitutional convention, which meets in April of this year, is to receive a copy to be used as a hand book in the deliberations concerning the proposed changes in the State government.

The volume contains more than a thousand pages of text matter and charts which show in the most graphic manner the work performed by all the departments and the relations of one department and bureau to another. The exact duties of the departments and of each bureau or unit in a department or commission are given and the duties assigned to every employe in each divisional unit. No effort has ever been made before to present this information in a volume which would be available for reference and the information has never been compiled and assembled in this manner.

The 169 departments, boards, bureaus and commissions that compose the government of the State of New York are defined and described in the book. The duties of the 17,414 paid employes of the State, who receive annually total salaries aggregating $17,681,496 are individually defined. The honorary officers who receive no salary numbering 1167, also have their duties described.

The workings of the government through its various officers, boards, commissions and departments are shown in 128 charts which give a complete picture of the organization of the State's business and the extent of its control.

It is showin in the report that there are 17,414 paid employes in the State department, the aggregate salary for whom is $17,681,496. In addition to the above amount, there was appropriated or paid during 1914, to temporary per diem employes and for special services, $2,873,204. Moreover 8900 employes in State institutions receive board and lodging, estimated at $16 a month or were paid amounts in lieu thereof which aggregates approximately $1700 a year. That total annual payroll of the State is thus approximately $22,254,700.



Commissioner Delaney points out that at least $3,031,273 additional is paid to State employes from other than State appropriations that is by cities, etc.

JAMES BRANABI SENT TO ELMIRA

It Was at Judge Coville's First Term That the Alleged Blackhander Received Sentence

Oswego, Feb. 9.—Judge H. D. Coville presided at the regular trial term of County Court in this city yesterday. Immediately following the criminal calendar of 30 cases the civil calendar was called.

Following is a list of prisoners who pleaded guilty and were sentenced this afternoon:

John Bowley, charged with burglary and larceny in breaking into Carrol's blacksmith shop at Fulton last November and stealing a number of articles.

Ben Cantazarri, violation of Section 1897 of the penal law by carrying a revolver in this city about October 18 last without having a license. J. R. Pidgeon attorney.

Oliver Warner and Charles J. Pearl, burglary, third degree, and petit larceny, in breaking and enfering a store in Fulton kept by Cora Lewis, November 15, 1914, and stealing a quantity of tobacco, etc. Warner was also indicted on a similar charge for breaking into Earl Foster's and stealing a fur overcoat. J. R. Somers attorney.

Rosa Farrington and Fred Ross, improper relations, two indictments. Mrs. Farrington said that her husband left her nine years ago and she had not since heard from him. D. J. O'Sullivan attorney.

James Branabi, charged with assault, first degree, pleaded guilty to assault, second degree in the afternoon and was sentenced to Elmira Reformatory.

Alton Hicks, the young Virginian, who is charged with placing an obstruction on the O. & W. tracks near Ingall's Crossing last fall, shortly after the wreck at South Granby, changed his plea of not guilty to guilty.

The charge of assault in the second degree against Frank Dyett will probably be tried tomorrow. Mr. Dyett is accused of having struck Albert Peglow, from the effects of which he died about a year after which he died about a year later.

Gloversville Slasher Sentenced

Former District Attorney W. B. Baker of this county has just completed a successful prosecution at Johnstown, N. Y., sending Jose Micelo, an Italian, to prison for nine years on a charge of assault in the first degree. The Italian slashed Isaac Moses, secretary-treasurer of the Elite Glove Company of Gloversville, with a knife. Mr. Baker was counsel to the district attorney of that county and it was he who summed up the case. The opposing lawyer talked for four hours trying to save his client. The case attracted considerable attention in Johnstown and resulted in the calling in of Burns detectives.

BLACK LINGERIE.

Fad That Has Many Advocates Since It Became the Rage In Paris.

Black underwear seems to have an eternal attraction for the Parisienne, and there have been some among us on this side who have succumbed to its charms and even gone the length of having black silk sheets and pillowcases to match their black silken nightdresses.

Every now and again this penchant for black crops up, and at present it is asserting itself. It is certainly practical, and in some instances it is pretty.

Some black lingerie seen in a shop the other day was extremely fascinating. Made in the finest and thinnest of black Japanese silk or crepe de chine, each garment was lavishly inset and incrusted with dainty black valenciennes lace.

There are, of course, many women, especially fair haired women, to whom black is perhaps more becoming than any color, and to them a few sets of ebon underwear must be irresistible, but to most people a few camisoles of black silk with entredeux of filmy black lace are a useful possession to wear under transparent black blouses or even white ones.

Now that black is a decoration for walls and upholstery it is perhaps natural that its use should spread to even the decorative domain of lingerie and be worn by those who have a passion for having everything about them en suite.

SPRING LINGERIE.

New Models Are Distinctively Practical Both In Material and Trimming.

Petticoats are wider at the hem and have deeper flounces. Materials with more stiffness than formerly are featured. Subdued colors dominate, says the Dry Goods Economist.

Negligees show the influence of the new silhouette. Flounces and ruffles are used on wide foundations to create the distended effect. High waisted lines are featured.

Underwear is made of more practical materials and trimmings than was the case last season. The garments fit snugly over the hips, with greater fullness in the ruffles and skirt flounces.

Corsets now include practical models for all types of figures; low busts for misses and slender women; medium high for well developed figures. There is increasing interest in front laced models.

Brassieres follow two distinct tendencies. The one calls for soft materials without bones, the other for firm fabrics with flexible bones in front, back and side bust.

Lace Boudoir Cap.

Lace insertions whipped to strips of shirred net make a beautiful boudoir cap that can be trimmed with small ribbon roses and threaded with narrow ribbons in color, which are tied in bows at the side.

Another effective way to trim the cap of this type is with velvet baby ribbon.

Black on any color or on white is a particularly smart trimming and is to be one of the fashionable things in boudoir caps for the coming season.

It must be removed before laundering, but this takes little time.

Heartfelt Wish.

A CHILDREN'S HOME

New Building Proposed by Grand Commandery Knights Templar.

New York, Feb. 8.—Masonic bodies all over the State are planning to raise money for a new building to be erected by the Grand Commandery of Knight Templar as a children's home. One of the biggest benefits will be a ball to be given in Madison Square Garden, on March 5th, all of the proceeds of which will go toward the building fund.

The proposed children's home will be erected at Utica, N. Y., and its official name will be the Knights Templar Educational Building for Children. It will be a beautiful structuse and while much attention is to be paid to the architecture of it, it will also be practicable and serviceable.

The lower part will be of Medina brownstone and the upper walls of brick and buff terra cotta trimmings. The ground floor is to contain training scheols for the teaching of music, stenography and typewriting, sewing, cooking, laundry work and various other lines suitable for girls. Woodwork and machinery, along with mathematics, will be taught to the boys.

The boys will occupy the westerly half of the building and the girls the other side. Separate stairs will be used for both sides. Plans and specifications have been completed, bids have been received and the actual work is about to commence.

The bail to be held in Manhattan it is expected, will provide most of the funds, but the Grand Commandery has passed a resolution guaranteeing to make up any deficiencies.

SETTLEMENT EFFECTED

Surrogate Confirms Settlement In Action Against Electric Company.

An order was entered in Surrogate's Court yesterday confirming the settlement of the action of Michael Dorogokupec, as administrator of the estate of Michael Dorogokupec, an infant, deceased, against the Fulton Heat, Light & Power Company.

The child was killed by coming in contact with a live wire while at play.

The amount received, totaled $1575 and $100 expenses, and from this amount the company is directed to pay $575 to a firm of Syracuse attorneys, $456.57 to Wawara Dorogokupec, mother, and $643.43 to the father of the child.

A final decree was entered in the estate of Mrs. Mary J. Cullinan, administratrix. The estate was exempted from the transfer tax. Letters of administration were issued to Daniel A. Williams in the estate of his wife, Mrs. Florence Cullinan Williams. The value is $3000.

The will of George J. Emerson late of Rochester, who owned property in the town of Constantia, where his widow now resides, was admitted to probate.

1912 FORD CARS.

Automobile experts have always held that the 1912 Ford was the best model ever built. Whether or not this is true, the Van Wagenen Corporation has for sale a 1912 Ford in fine shap and the price is low if bought soon.—Adv.

German Women as Soldiers.

Something like a century ago Prussia rose against Napoleon, who was already weakened by the retreat from Moscow, and with the help of the Austrians and also of a very large body of Russians managed to drive the French army over the frontier, after defeating it in the tremendous two day struggle at Leipsig.

It appears that certain women played a prominent part in this fighting. Seventeen daughters of Prussia were at the front during this momentous conflict. They were most capable as soldiers, able to command and able to obey, as well as being capable of withstanding the hardships of campaigning. To cite some instances, Maria Werder, a woman of Silesia, was allowed to serve as a hussar in the same regiment as her husband, who was a wealthy landowner.

Elenora Prochaska is one of the better known of these heroines. She engaged, under the name of "Carl Renz," in the Light Horse when only eighteen, and several poets have sung of her courage. A monument to her memory stands in Potsdam.—Washington Star.

Some National Flowers.

Every one knows of the rose, shamrock and thistle as the floral emblems of England, Ireland and Scotland and the leek, though not a flower, for Wales. The sugar maple leaf is the emblem of Canada. Other nations and cities have all their floral emblems, and the lily seems to be the favorite. Italy has chosen the lily and also the city of Florence, known affectionately as "Giglio," which means lily, and the city itself is spoken of as "the Flower of Cities and the City of Flowers." France, of course, has the lily in the fleur-de-lis. Germany's is the cornflower, while Prussia's choice is the linden tree, and the most famous thoroughfare in Berlin is known as the Unter den Linden. Spain's emblem is the pomegranate, and its wonderful city of Granada is named after that fruit. Egypt, with the glories of the Nile, appropriately chooses the lotus. Athens has the violet, while Smyrna has the sweet scented migonette.—Pearson's Weekly.

Court Humor.

A legal journal gives the following instances of humor in German courts:

In Berlin an ironworker was sent to prison because he had laughed at a policeman. It appears that as this man was proceeding along a street one day his risibilities were aroused by the sight of a particularly stout policeman giving chase to a dog. The offender was promptly haled to court and "sent up" for scandal.

A German in attempting to board a moving train fractured his leg. After six months in a hospital he was discharged, whereupon the state railway department at once prosecuted him for "infringement of regulations." He was fined a sum equivalent to $5.

Upon entering an omnibus a man trod on the foot of a woman, who was so incensed by the incident that she remarked that he walked like a hen. For this term of reproach the lady was fined 20 marks.

Fifteenth Century Artists.

Artists in Italy in the fifteenth century were little better off than small shopkeepers. This is shown by the dowries they usually gave their daughters, which varied from $1,040 to $2,080, and it is related as an extraordinary instance that Andrea Mantegna gave his daughter $2,600 at the time of her marriage, which was about the close of the fifteenth century. Michelangelo, Raphael and Titian were the only painters of the fifteenth century who succeeded in attaining a position of ease. Michelangelo at his death left about $48,000, besides some real estate, to his nephew, Leonardo. Raphael's property was estimated to be worth $185,000, while Durer was worth at the time of his death only $31,650. In those days, however, pensions were frequently given to artists by sovereigns and cities.

Thorn Hedge of Ypres.

The town with the unpronounceable name, Ypres, once proved literally too thorny a problem for English besiegers. When Henry Spencer, bishop of Norwich, led his troops against it they tried in vain again and again to pierce the mass of thorn bushes that lined the exterior slopes of the ramparts; hence the image of Notre Dame-de-Thuine, "Our Lady of the Garden," in the Cathedral of St. Martin at Ypres and also the fair of Thuindag, fixed for the first Sunday in August in honor of the thorn hedge that saved the city.—London Opinion.

Educated Men.

It is the worst of educated men that they cannot speak about any great question till they have read everything that has been written about it, for fear that some one should say, "But have you read Schwartzenburg?" Then, if they have not read Schwartzenburg, they are done.—Tolstoy.

About Sports Generally

New York, Feb. 9.—Ty Cobb has taken it upon himself to "pan" the Federal League—the very same organization that enabled Tyrus to get a boost in salary from a reported $9000 a year to his present reported salary of $15,000 a year.

Ty who has been drawing down soft money this winter for permitting the use of his name to articles that undoubtedly are written by someone else, permits it to be said under his signature that "the Feds are using trickery, bribery" and other things to lure ball players from their insecure roosts in organized baseball.

Ty—or the man who writes for Ty—slips a cable when he tries to "pan" the Feds because of the "Rube" Marquard case. The writer of the article evidently punched out his stuff without having a full knowledge—or any real knowledge at all—concerning the Marquard affair.

The article staes: "Rube" Marquard, of the Giants, was induced to attempt to violate an iron-clad instrument binding him to the Giants for two years."

Marquard was not induced. The Brooklyn Federals didn't seek Marquard. Marquard sought them.

Here are the real facts in the Marquard case for Ty's benefit in future articles:

LL

John B. Foster told us the first part of the story, to wit:

"Marquard went to McGraw in the fall and wanted some advanced money. He didn't get it. Guess that made him sore and he went over to see the Wards."

From this point on we'll let Hy. Brewer, Eastern representative for the Federal League tell the story:

"Marquard hunted up Robert B. Ward, owner of the Brooklyn Federals and said he would like to sign up on a sliding scale of salary; that is, he wanted a certain salary if he won a certain number of games and a scale of bonuses for games won over that number. Marquard made that proposition voluntarily. He probably figured that his showing with the Giants in 1914 was poor and that Ward might not want him.

"Ward asked Marquard if he wasn't under contract with the Giants for 1915. Marquard answered:

"No, my contract expired this fall. I can't come to terms with the Gints for 1915 and I would like to sign up with you.

"Ward then told Marquard to go out, think it over for a few days and if he still wanted to sign to bring in an affidavit to the effect that he was not legally under contract to the Giants.

"Marquard came back a few days later, produced the affidavit, asked for $1500 advance money, got it and then signed a contract with the Brooklyn Federals."

LL

And now we ask our author—ballplayer—in face o fthese facts do you still think Marquard was induced?

Cobb ought to be the last person to heave rocks on the Feds. They did more for him than anyone else ever did or ever will do. They got a $6000 boast in salary for him.

When the Feds learned early in 1914 that Ty's contract with the Detroit Tigers had expired they made him a big offer. Ty, according to all reports at the time, gave that offer serious consideration. The Detroit owners heard about it and awoke to the fact that it was in danger of losing the greatest drawing card in organized baseball. The Detroit club at once met the Federal League offer and Ty remained "faithful."

LL

Cobb is a wonderful ball player, but it is a 1000 to 1 shot that if it hadn't been for the Feds the Detroit owners never would have given Cobb that big boost in salary even though he is worth $15,000 a year more.

If the Federal League had not acted as a club for Ty to use in 1914—if there had been no Federal League at all—do you think that the Detroit management voluntarily would have boosted Ty's pay from $9000 a year to the reported $15,000?

If the Feds hadn't given Ty that bludgeon the Tiger owners would have done to Ty what organized moguls always did to ball players, before the Feds came along—offer him any old salary they chose to give him, putting it up to him to accept it or get out of baseball altogether.

HOT LINERS

By FRANK G. MENKE.

When they find themselves hard up for jibes.
Ha, ha, ha! Here's fun in bales,
They've named the Chiefed team in Whales.
It's sure some dish for sporting scribes,
When they find themselves hard up for jibes.
They can pull off Jonah jokes galore,
Or harpoon jests, when feeling sore;
But best of all they can make it known
That the whale is famous for its bone.

A Detroit newspaper suggests that ball players be spoken of in the way that one speaks of trotters and pacers; that is, adding their record after they name. A trotter is referred to as Jip the Jip, 2.10¼, and the suggestion is that Ty Cobb be referred to as Ty Cobb, .366.

Crocheted Boudoir Slippers Are Evolved on Popular Lines

SILK BOUDOIR SLIPPERS.

KNITTING and crocheting for the war sufferers of Europe have brought about a revival of interest in both these arts. Knitted and crocheted articles of all kinds are being made for the boudoir. Pictured here is a handsome pair of boudoir slippers. The design is carried out in knitting silk in the stitch ordinarily used for the yarn slippers. The straps are decorated with crochet buttons. The long straps at the back are made to pass around the leg several times in sandal style.

HANDSOME BOOKS.

They Impart a Distinctly Decorative Value to a Room.

Books possess a wonderful decorative value. They supply "atmosphere" and are in keeping with the architecture or decoration of any living room or library.

This is largely because the varied colors in which books are bound and the placing of books closely together in masses gives a certain domestic or "livable" air which imparts an informal character to a living room.

This quality is appreciated not only by those who are lovers of books, but also by those who value them chiefly for their indefinable atmosphere.

A living room where the walls are lined with low shelves or cases filled with books in varicolored bindings possesses a homelike air. Books also have the advantage of filling up awkward angles and corners where nothing else seems to look well.

A shallow alcove or the space within an unused doorway when fitted with shelves well filled with volumes ceases to be awkward and useless and becomes a decorative asset.

There are frequently such useless spaces in bedrooms or in upper floor halls or even upon the landings of wide stairways in country homes, and the use of books in any of these places helps wonderfully in creating the "intimate" air so greatly to be desired.

SASH CURTAINS.

Very Effective Ones Are Fashioned of Scrim and Net.

Sash curtains should be measured from the top of the inside of the window casement to the sill, allowing two inches at the top and bottom.

The top is turned and stitched through the center, which allows for small beading and the casing for the brass rod.

The hem is turned in at the bottom, so that the curtains just escape the sill.

The curtains may be perfectly plain or finished with lace edging. A narrow gimp braid is sometimes used as a finish for sash curtain. The French stripe nets, or Brussels net, are always nice.

Scrim and a quality of voile made for curtain purposes are also used, especially when a less transparent material than net is desired.

Punch work is very easily and effectively done on scrim because the mesh is coarse.

Bureau covers and centerpieces may be elaborately inset with heavy lace and the spaces in the design filled in with punch work.

The lace may be simply appliqued rather than to cut the material underneath, because scrim ravels easily, but being of a coarse weave it is not objectionable under the lace pattern.

Sliced Lemon Pie.

After you have carefully lined a pie plate with pie crust put in a cupful of sugar. Pare one large lemon or two small ones, taking care to leave none of the white rind. Slice thin, removing all seeds. Arrange slices evenly in pie. Put on a top crust, pinching down well so that juice does not escape. Bake fifteen minutes. Serve cold.

THE EVENING SHOE.

The well dressed foot is one of the most attractive parts of a costume. If it falls below the standard of the rest of the costume it will detract from the beauty of the whole. When women don the evening gown or the beautiful afternoon costume there must be at the same time a change in the slippers or shoes that should complete the idea.

* *

There have been many changes for the better in the matter of slippers. The long vamp in evening slippers has arrived. When you consider the extremely short vamp that gives a pudgy look to any foot the beauty is gone. Now at least a foot looks like a foot, which is a pleasing fact to note.

* *

This season there is a strong predilection for bronze in shoes and slippers. In the beaded pair of slippers here shown the bronze is made doubly sure of its success by beads and leather in the same color. The vamp, toe and straps are covered with glittering beads, and the slippers are an important finish to any dress for afternoon or evening.

* *

The roman striped silk upper on leather is a new thing and bids for favor for afternoon. This has the straps and back of silk, and, although the silk has not the wearing quality of leather, it is used at just the right places to escape wear and yet add to the general effect. To a plain dress or one that has any of the roman colors these slippers will be a decided addition.

* *

On gold brocade there is a trimming of a jeweled buckle that has a cameo for its center and gives a wonderful finish to the material. Such a pair of shoes will complete the costume of metallic brocade or scintillating beads and sequins.

Toy Scrub Brushes.

Little five and ten cent scrubbing brushes are most helpful things in a kitchen. One kept on the washstand in the bathroom will be found convenient for cleaning soap dishes and the washbowl. They are handy to use in cleaning a stove and for other rough work. One should be kept expressly for cleaning grates, for which there is nothing better, as it removes all soot, is lintless and has no fibers to catch fire easily.

Expert Needlework.

When drawing threads for hemstitching or drawn work, wet a small brush, rub over it white soap until it lathers, then scrub the threads that you are going to draw.

You will be greatly astonished to find how easily they will come out without breaking when you treat the goods in this manner.

Snap Fasteners For Veils.

Some women sew small snap fasteners to the brim of the motor bonnet and also to several veils, so that a change of veils may be effected quickly when the costume calls for particular color, or when one veil has become damp or dusty midway of the trip.

Her Punishment

A Story For Washington's Birthday

By F. A. MITCHEL

One morning during the American Revolution when the British were in possession of New York city John Armitage, a captain in one of the regiments quartered there, called at headquarters and asked for a short leave of absence. The officer whose duty it was to attend to the matter of leaves, passes, etc., looked up at the applicant, a handsome and refined young fellow, and said:

"Captain, I venture that you are intending to visit some fair lady. If so I cannot grant you a leave, for the general has more fear of these Yankee rebel lassies than a whole brigade of the men."

"I admit, major," replied Armitage, "that I propose to visit a Yankee girl, but she is not a rebel. She is with us in loyalty to the king."

"Are your intentions serious, captain?"

"My purpose in making this trip is serious indeed. The lady is wooed by an officer of Washington's army whom her father wishes her to marry. She has written me a note urging me to come to her. I fear that pressure is being brought to bear upon her to induce her to marry my rival."

Major Harrington thought a few moments, then asked:

"Where do you propose to go?"

"To Morristown."

"Washington's headquarters?"

"Yes."

Again a few moments were passed in reflection; then the aid spoke again:

"This is a dangerous visit you are about to make, captain. I fear the general would not approve of it."

"Put yourself in my place, major."

"Ah, you sly dog, you know how to plead. All the world loves a lover. I will grant the leave, and if you are caught I shall doubtless be relieved from duty on the general's staff. Be careful that you are not taken and hanged for a spy."

"If I am hanged it will be for love."

Armitage, in mufti, hired a man to pull him over the river directly opposite the fort on the southernmost point of Manhattan island. He landed in the then village of Jersey City. There he took horse, crossed the meadows, passed through Elizabethtown and at nightfall, having left his horse at a roadside inn on the outskirts of Morristown, proceeded on foot to the square about which that city is located.

In a dwelling on the west side of the square lived Winifred Dudley, the lady from whom Armitage had received the summons that had brought him to Morristown. The blinds of the living room were open, and by the light of logs burning on the hearth within the captain could see into the room and that it was vacant. This gave him courage. His chief dread was that some American officer might be calling at the house, and, if so, he would be in this room. So the young Briton walked boldly up to the door and tapped on it with the ring which hung from the mouth of a metal lion. Winifred Dudley, who was on the watch for her lover, ran hastily down the staircase and admitted him, first drawing the window curtains in the living room.

"The time of your arrival is unfortunate," said Winifred. "Captain Wharton, whom my father is anxious that I should marry, has sent me word that he will call this evening for his final answer."

The words were scarcely uttered when the sound of a horse's splutter was heard without and the clank of side arms as some one dismounted.

In the living room was a large closet. Winifred hurried her lover into this closet. A moment later there was a knock at the front door, and she admitted Captain Wharton, an American dragoon.

"How, now, little one!" exclaimed the captain. "You are all in a flutter. Surely the decision I come for cannot have wrought such agitation. If you love me you must be pleased to tell me so; if not—well, in that case I must bear the blow as best I can."

He had clasped the hand she offered him by way of salutation and, holding it, looked into her face wistfully. But he saw no encouragement and, dropping the hand, walked beside her into the living room and gloomily took the seat she offered him.

"I regret, Captain Wharton," she said, "that my answer to the great honor you have done me must be the same as it has been. My father is an ardent patriot and wished me to wed with one of patriot sympathies. But we are a divided family. My sympathies are all with the king. That you may consider my answer final I will reveal to you that I have given my heart to a British officer."

Captain Wharton at this announcement stood with bowed head and in silence. That silence was broken by a loud rap at the door. Winifred started and turned pale. Then, going to the door, she threw it open. A citizen attended by several soldiers entered.

"This man," said one of the soldiers, pointing to the citizen, "saw a man who does not belong to this place stop at a tavern at nightfall and steal between our pickets. He came to this house. We have been ordered to find him and call upon him to give an account of himself."

"Are you sure he came in here?" asked Winifred.

"I am," replied the citizen.

"We have been ordered to search the house," said the soldier who had spoken.

"You will do no such thing," said Captain Wharton. "In support of Miss Dudley's testimony I give you my word of honor as an officer and a gentleman that there is no such person here."

There was a brief silence, at the end of which the recently arrived party were turning to leave the house when the closet door was thrown open and a man in citizen's dress stepped forth.

"I cannot permit any one to bear false witness in my behalf," he said. "This person," pointing to the citizen, "is correct. At nightfall I left the tavern and came here to call upon Miss Dudley at her invitation."

Captain Wharton turned his eyes from the Englishman to Winifred, then back to Wharton.

"Who are you, sir?" he asked.

"Captain John Armitage of the British army."

"And in our lines in citizen's clothes!"

"Miss Dudley will bear me out that I came upon her invitation."

"For what purpose?" asked the citizen.

"That does not concern you. I did not come for military information."

"You need not remain here any longer," said Captain Wharton to the searching party. "I will be responsible for this gentleman."

This order, coming from an officer, was enough for those to whom it was addressed and was obeyed. When the men were gone Wharton said:

"Would that I could conscientiously let this matter drop here! My duty as a soldier and to my country compels me to act. I must report your presence here, Captain Armitage, to our commander. If you are not here as a spy you have nothing to fear. I deem it best for your interest that I report the matter privately to General Washington. Give me your parole that you will remain here till you hear from me."

"It is given with thanks."

While this scene was being enacted Winifred, terror stricken for her lover, was crouching beside him. Wharton, with a bow to her, turned, and in another moment they heard him mount and ride away.

It was not long before an orderly rode up to the house and delivered an order for John Armitage and Winifred Dudley to proceed to headquarters. Winifred, having protected herself against the cold, with her lover descended the side of the hill on which Morristown is built, then ascended the slope that led to General Washington's headquarters. They were conducted into his private office in rear of the building. The general rose to receive them, then closed the door, shutting out all but himself and them.

"I understand, sir," he said to Armitage, "that you have admitted that you are a captain in the British army. You are within our lines in citizen's apparel. Will you inform me, sir, why I should not order a court martial to try you on the charge of being a spy?"

"I can only assure you, general, that I came here in reply to a written request from Miss Dudley. When I received it I had no knowledge what was her motive in asking me to come."

"But you know now?"

"I do."

The general thought a few moments, then said, "It is imperative that I have an explanation for your being here; otherwise I must treat you as a spy."

During this brief dialogue Winifred's feelings were pent up and now burst forth.

"General," she cried in agony, "I am the spy. There is another matter between me and Captain Armitage than conveying information to the British, but this was not my real reason for summoning him. I have been taking note of the troops gathered here and other matters pertaining to your army and sent for Captain Armitage to come and carry the information to General Howe. But lest my letter should be intercepted I told him that my father was trying to persuade me to marry a rival—one of your officers. Captain Armitage had no knowledge whatever that I had any other motive for summoning him. I have forfeited my life. Execute me for a spy. No trial is needed; here is the evidence."

She handed General Washington the notes she had made and which she had intended to send by Captain Armitage to General Howe. He scanned them, then looked up at the couple in mute surprise. After deliberation he said:

"Captain Armitage, you cannot be convicted on this the only evidence I have in your case. Had you been caught with this information on you nothing could have saved you. But this lady has been convicted by her own confession and must suffer the penalty."

"Oh, general!" exclaimed Armitage imploringly.

"If Miss Dudley were a man," pursued the general, "it would be my duty to order a court martial, which would undoubtedly convict her. Since she is a woman I shall place her beyond our lines, where she can do no harm."

"But, general," cried Armitage, "what can she, a woman, do without your lines?"

"She can go with you."

"Her reputation"—

"Need not suffer."

"How so?"

"Orderly!" cried the general, opening the door. A soldier appeared, and the general directed him to go for a chaplain. When that person appeared he was directed to marry the couple. After the ceremony the general called for an officer of his staff, to whom he said:

"Put these two beyond our lines and see that they do not get back here."

Do Not Try to Have a Sale Without the Help of The Fulton Evening Times

These Are the Reasons Why:

The Poster reaches at most only a few hundred people: The Evening Times is read each evening by approximately, 10,000 people.

The Poster is seen only by people when they are away from home. The Times goes into people's homes and finds them.

The Poster must be tacked up and distributed—a day or two of hard work for a man with a rig. The Times distributes the same information at every house in the city.

The Poster is not seen in bad weather, because people stay at home. That is just the time The Evening Times is read most carefully.

Under some circumstances it is advisable to have bills, but under all circumstances you should have advertising in The Evening Times. It is the advertising that does the business—every merchant will tell you so.

ALBANY LETTER DAY BY DAY

Cardozo Tells Time' Readers the Doings of Officials and Lawmakers

Albany, Feb. 9.—The "antis" had their inning in the Assembly chambers here this evening. The forces against woman suffrage were led by Alice Hill Chittenden, president of the New York State Association opposed to Woman Suffrage. She reviewed the case against giving the vote to women at length.

"This measure goes before the voters without the endorsement of either the Republican or Democratic party," said Miss Chittenden, "for although both parties had a plank in their state platforms in 1912, and again in 1914, favoring the submission of this question to the electors, neither party declared itself in favor of woman suffrage per se.

"Please remember this fact, Mr. Voter, if any suffrage orator tries to persuade you that you are in duty bound to vote for this amendment because your party endorsed it. In the ballot for every woman—not only considering this subject you must also remember, that woman suffrage means ith ballot for every woman—not only for your female relatives and friends, and since it is a truism that the average woman is no better than the average man, by enfranchising women, you are merely going to duplicate the present elements in the electorate.

"Woman suffrage is not a question of individual right or desire. It is a racial question as well as a serious governmental one. The point for women to consider is, will women as a sex be a valuable contributing force in the electorate? We anti-Suffragists recognize that voting is a small part of the political activity essential to popular government, and we believe that woman, by reason of her sex limitations is not fitted to enter into such activities to a sufficiently sustained degree to make her strong factor in government. Women are citizens without the ballot, but the state requires a different service from its men and women citizens. Man's political service to the state is counterbalanced by woman's service in the home. If there were no families and no homes there would be no state. One service is fully as important as the, but they can never be identical.

"Two years ago, when the wave of Progessivism swept over the country, woman suffrage gained a considerable impetus. In 1913 three States, Oregon, Kansas and Arizona, extended full suffrage to women, and a few months later partial suffrage was attained in Illinois. The suffragsits of that state, knowing that a constitutional amendment would be overwhelmingly defeated at the polls, cleverly devised a scheme to extend suffrage to women, enabling them to vote for offices not mentioned in the constitution. This bill was railroaded through the legislature by a strong lobby and was regarded as a great suffrage victory.

The publicity accorded the agitation of this question, and the noise and clamor of its advocates, have caused some people to jump to the conclusion that woman suffrage was inevitable, and that the country had better swallow the dose and be done with it. But we Anti-Suffragists who do more thinking than talking, realized that with the wane of radicalism, and the decline of the Progressive Party, would come the wane of the woman suffrage movement, and our clarion cry since we began our campaign in the western states six months ago, has been, 'Woman suffrage is not sure to come.' It can be restricted within its present limits by the energetic and concerted action of the man and women who are opposed to it. For instance the suffrage movement has not gained a foot of territory through the vote of the male electorate, east of the Mississippi river. Not one of the New England States, not one of the middle states, not one of the southern States, not on the middle western States, has given full suffrage to women.

Nor is this all Every State east of the Mississippi in which the proposal to give the ballot to women has been submitted to the voters has defeated it by an overwhelming majority. Within the past two years woman suffrage has been defeated in Michigan by a majority of 96,144. In Nebraska by a majority of 10,104, in Missouri by a majority of 140,206, and in North and South Dakota by substantial majorities. Ohio has defeated this proposition twice in recent years in 1912 by a mjority of 87fi455 and in 1914 by the increased majority of 182,905.

The suffragists display a map of the United States, on which are the woman suffrage states in the West are white, while the eastern States are black. They talk about the vast area of these States, and tell us that New York State could be dropped in Montana and be utterly lost. But AREA DOES NOT VOTE. The suffragists fail to tel ltheir audiences that the entire population of those twelve woman suffrage States is about nine hundred thousand less, than the population of the State of New York. The population of Montana is about half the population of the city of Boston. There are fewer inhabitants in the State of Nevada than in the city of Lawrence, Mass. The density of the population of all those twelve States plus the State of Illinois, where women have partial suffragists fail to tell their audiences square mile, while the density of the population of New York, Massachusetts, Pennsylavania and New Jersey, which States will vote on this question next Autumn, is 279.7 persons per square mile. The question may be asked, What bearing has the density of population upon the question of woman suffrage? It is a true statement that the larger the community the more corrupt its politics, so even if woman suffrage had been the unqaulified success its advocates claim, in those sparsely settled western States, it would be a wholly different proposition in our densely populated states in the east.

JAP CRUISER BEARS MARKS OF BATTLE

Los Angeles, Cal., Feb. 9.—Rumors that the wrecked Japanese cruiser Asama, which is ashore off the coast of lower California, had been in battle with a German warship, were revived here today following the arrival of the United States cruisers San Diego and Raleigh from the scene. Members of the crew of both these vessels refused to confirm or deny the reports, declaring that they had orders direct from Washington to say nothing for neutrality reasons. The unofficial rumors had it that the Japanese ship was so badly crippled that her commander ran her ashore, in Turtle Bay to prevent her from sinking. The American ships were sent to aid her crew.

Dictionary Readers.

That the natives of Nigeria are capable of advanced forms of education is apparently proved by this little incident told by Constance Larymore in "A Resident's Wife in Nigeria:"

"My husband told me that in the course of the patrol they passed through a valley where the inhabitants of the rocks and hills above apparently made their homes in holes and caves. One member of the party idly asked what was the scientific name for cave dwellers, the word having slipped his memory for the moment. No one appeared to be able to supply the word. But then the native interpreter, plodding along behind, came up, saying: 'Pardon me, sir. Don't you mean troglodytes?'

"The Englishman, amazed, asked where he had ever heard such a word, and 'George' replied placidly, 'I was reading a dictionary one day and saw it.'

"I cannot imagine myself reading a German or Italian dictionary for pleasure and storing in my mind for future use conversationally a specially unusual scientific term. I only wish I could."

Spartans Kept In Trim.

The ancient Spartans paid as much attention to the rearing of men as cattle dealers in this country and England in modern times do to the breeding of cattle. They took charge of firmness and looseness of men's flesh, and regulated the degree of fatness to which it was lawful, in a free state, for any citizen to extend his body.

Those who dared to grow too fat or too soft for military exercise and the service of Sparta were soundly whipped.

In one particular instance, that of Nauclis, the son of Polytus, the offender was brought before the Ephori and a meeting of the whole people of Sparta, at which his unlawful fatness was publicly exposed, and he was threatened with perpetual banishment if he did not bring his body within the regular Spartan compass and give up his culpable mode of living, which was declared to be more worthy of an Ionian than a son of Lacedaemon.—Philadelphia Inquirer.

A Napoleonic Famine Scare.

Britain was on the verge of a bread famine during the Napoleonic wars, and in 1800 a law was enacted prohibiting the sale of bread till it had been out of the oven at least twenty-four hours. "Food was so scarce and dear," writes F. W. Hackwood, "that a portion of the population refused to starve in silence, and rioting broke out in many parts of England. * * * A royal grant of £500 was made to one Thomas Toden to enable him to prosecute a discovery made by him of a 'paste' as a substitute for wheat flour. * * * The unfortunate seamen fighting Great Britain's battle on the high seas had to subsist on biscuits so badly made that when the weevils were knocked out there often remained nothing but empty shells." A plentiful harvest the following year saved the situation.—London Standard.

WAR STRENGTH OF S. AMERICA

Ten Nation Have 140,000 Men Under Arms; Three Have Navies

South American nations are poorly prepared for war, according to European standard. Only three of them, Argentina, Brazil and Chile, maintain armies as large as one of the several hundred divisions now fighting in Germany. Those three, again, are the only ones provided with a modern navy. Each of the A. B. C. nations had two first-class dreadnaughts, with a sprinkling of older and smaller craft.

Brazil keeps the largest number of men permanently under arms. It has an army of 23,000 and a gendarmerie of 21,000. The latter, of course, is a police force, but has a military organization and is intended to furnish rifle regiments in case of war. Brazil's artillery, excluding coast defense is larger than that of the United States. It has five regiments of 36 guns each of field artillery, nine horse artillery batteries (36 guns), five howitzer batteries and six mountain batteries, a total of 224 guns, mostly 7.5 Krupps. Brazil's system of compulsory service gives it a reserve of about 200,000 partly trained men who would mobilize at predetermined centers in the event of war. Poor railroad facilities would make it impossible for more than 40,000 or 50,000 men to be assembled at any point within several weeks.

Argentina has a standing army of 24,000 men and a trained field army of 174,000. All those have served from three months to a year in active service and later annual periods of from two to four weeks. The Argentine army's training, like Brazil's, has been on the French plan. Both, however, use Mauser rifles and Krupp artillery. Argentina probably could mobilize its entire 174,000 men near Buenos Ayres within a month or so. At the same time the territorial guard and national guard of as many more older and partly trained men could be prepared to assemble.

Chile's army is based on a defense against Argentina. It has 27,500 men in arms with a trained reserve of about 175,000. Colonel Roosevelt paid the Chilean army a high compliment after his recent visit. Its early training was by a German commission, which has since been modified by Chilean Military Academy. It probably is the most efficient of any South American army. Many of its higher officers had valuable training in the Peruvian war, where the Chilean soldiers fought well.

Chile's navy was quite powerful twenty years ago. It later declined. A rejuvenation took place when Brazil and Argentina began building dreadnaughts. Now each nation has a fleet almost equal in paper strength. Argentina has no submarines, while Brazil and Chile have three each. The personnel is about 6,000 in each service, all largely land trained.

Peru has the next army of importance. Before the Peru-Chile war it ranked first grade in South America. The war almost wiped the army out. In late years it has been reorganized by French officers and now is a compact and efficient force of 12,000 in all ranks. Thirty thousand reservists are subject to call to make a field army. Approximately half of the active army is used as a national constabulary. Ultimately, Peru's ambition is to have a trained field army of 150,000 men with second reserve troops sufficient to swell that to 250,000.

Peru's navy has languished since its memorable defeat by Chili. A few old cruisers remain, which are indifferently manned. About 2,000 men compose the naval force. It would be dangerous only to commercial vessels.

The armies of Bolivia, Columbia, Venezula, Ecuador and Paraguay are of small fighting value and few in numbers. Uruguay maintains 10,400 first line troops, admirably trained, as a peace strength. It also has 5,000 State constabulary, trained as infantrymen. In addition, there is a well organized reserve sufficient to bring the field army up to 50,000 men. Because of the country"s relatively small area Uruguay probably could invade Brazil successfully and maintain a war on Brazilian territory for many months. The army was first under German influence, but now is discarding its Krupp and buying Schneider Cruesot 7.5 guns, such as the French army uses.

Ecuador has a most imposing paper army, but it is doubtful whether a third of it would be available, and that probably poorly trained. It has about 7,500 under arms at all times and claims 50,000 trained reservists. Bolivia recently placed its army under German control. The result was an increase in proficiency and a surprise to tourists of seeing helmeted Indians march the goose step through La Paz. It consists of about 4,000 first line troops and 45,000 trained and untrained reserves.

Altogether, South America with a population less than the United States, keeps standing armies of nearly 140,000 men, with about 700,000 first line reserves. The total navies would give a battle squadron of six dreadnaughts.

REPORT THAT HUSON WILL SHORTLY RESIGN

Albany, Feb. 9.—It is said today that State Commissioner Huson will shortly resign his office. Mr. Huson declined to discuss the matter. For some time investigators of the State Comptroller's office have been going over the records of the Department of Agriculture. No criminality was found but but some lax methods in business were found. The result of the inquiry will be made public in a few days.

TRWO MEN HURT IN WRECK AT CAYUGA

Syracuse, Feb.9.—Two men were seriously injured and several slightly hurt in a head-on collision on the Auburn branch of the N. Y. C. this morning at 8.40. The accident occurred when train No. 3 ran into an open switch in the village of Cayuga and crashed into a waiting freight train. George Burns of Rochester, who was in the passenger train, was badly hurt and it is feared that he is fatally hurt. An Albany salesman was badly hurt. A special train and several autos carrying nurses and hpysicians were run from Auburn.

30 IN BREAD LINE WOULD SELL BLOOD

Offer of $15 by Bellevue Physician Meets Quick Response—Life Fuild Needed for Woman.

Announcement of an opportunity to earn $15 in exchange for a quart of blood attracted applicants among the men in the Knickboeker Hotel bread line yesterday afternoon. Out of the throng Dr. M. L. Morris, of Bellevue hospital, picked thirty of the more likely applicants, who were directed to report at the hospital this morning for tests.

The blood is needed for Mrs. Florence Leonard, thirty-nine years old of No. 299 West Twelfth street, who is in the hospital with an abdominal growth that has caused many hemorrhages. She has become so weak that the physicians consider blood transfusion necessary to save her life.

Her husband, a waiter out of work, was unable to provide funds, so Dr. George O'Hanlon, the medical superintendent, decided to offer $15 out of a fund for such emergencies after the husband's blood had been found to be unsuitable. Difficulty at first was experienced in finding any one willing to submit to a transfusion operation for the stipulated price.

There was no such trouble at the Knickerbocker bread line. Each man tentatively selected received a card. The one picked out will have a vein opened and his blood will be injected into Mrs. Leonard by the method introduced here by Dr. Lindmann.

VANDEVERE NOMINATED

Albany, Feb. 9.—Both homes of the Legislature at noon today nominated Dr. Albert Vandevere of Albany to be a member of the Board of Regents for 12 years from April 1. Tomorrow the Senate and Assembly will have a joint session at which the journal will be compared and a candidate elected. There was no opposition to Dr. Vandevere.

Our Flag on Lusitania

Passengers on the Cunard liner Lusitania, who arrived at Birmingham, England, yesterday, state that when the vessel was off the coast of Ireland Saturday she received a wireless message from the British Admiralty directing that she hoist the American flag. She did so and sailed under it to Liverpool. In an announcement made last night the British Foreign Office says:

"The British Government has always considered the use of the British colors by foreign vessels legitimate for the purpose of escaping capture. Such practice not only involves no breach of international law, but is specifically recognized by the law of this country in the merchant shipping act of 1894. In instructions to British consuls in 1914 it is stated 'A ship is liable to capture if a British character is improperly assumed except for the purpose of escaping capture.' As we have in practice not objected to foreign merchant vessels using the British merchant flag as a ruse for the purpose of evading capture at sea at the hands of a belligerent, so we should maintain that in the converse case a British merchant vessel committed no breach of international law in assuming neutral colors for a similar purpose if she thought fit."

The incident of the use of our flag by the Lusitania was the subject of a conference in the White House yesterday between the President and Counselor Robert Lansing of the State Department. The suggestion that the United States will protest against the use of the flag is not regarded seriously by the Washington administration, but the fact that Great Britain may be making a practice of using the Stars and Stripes as a blind to German submarines and aircraft is likely to be made the occasion for an inquiry, followed by representations to the British Government that such acts are calculated to work a hardship against American merchant vessels in the proclaimed zones. There is nothing in the German declaration or in the explanatory memorandum furnished to our Government as a supplement thereto which indicates that Germany will not take summary action against a vessel which she may suspect of flying a neutral flag for purposes of deception. It was pointed out by a high authority yesterday that the use of submarines marks a new era in the international custom governing the search or seizure of vessels in time of war, just as it marks a new era in sea warfare itself. The submarine is unable to send a boarding party to ascertain the actual facts regarding the claim to a nationality which the ensign sets forth. It will, therefore, be necessary when a German submarine stops a suspicious craft, for the latter to lower away and send aboard the submarine her proofs of identity. Should this course be invariably followed it will materially simplify the problem which the German declaration sets for neutral marines.

No briefly considered nor impulsive action is expected from the administration authorities, but at the same time there is cognizance of the fact that the use of the American flag by merchant vessels of the belligerent forces with intent to deceive will not be popular publicly in the United States, and the administration is anxious to arrive as quickly as possible at a definite understanding with Great Britain and the other belligerent powers among the allies as to the extent to which thhe practice will be pursued. Precedents to the contrary notwithstanding, it is felt in Washington that if the German threats coupled with the British practice become a menace to American commerce the American Government will have to speak, and it is the form of this utterance which is giving the administration concern. — Dispatch, Utica.

GIVE FAIR PLAY

The anti-German press of the United States seems to be misinformed as to the objects of the Neutrality League, which was founded in Washington last week. Surely there is nothing un-American in the desire that this country remain absolutely neutral in every possible sense of that world. We are not neutral when we supply the enemies of Germany with all the munitions of war which they desire to buy from us. Not one of the neutral State of Europe is selling war material to any of the belligerent countries. Italy, Holland, Switzerland, Denmark, etc., have placed embargoes on the exportation of arms and ammunition and only in this country, where there has been more pious cant about universal peace than in any other country in the world, do we stultify ourselves by supplying the belligerents with death-dealing paraphernalia. A few days ago the Duke of the Abruzzi, a member of Italy's ruling house, branded the attitude of the United States as the greatest crime of the age. And so think all men in whom every trace of idealism has not been obliterated by commercialism or blind partisanship. The Neutral League does not consist exclusively of men of German blood, as the anti-German press leads its readers to believe. Friends of neutrality of many nationalities are numbered among its members, and they will no doubt resort to every legitimate means to compel this country to follow a course which the most elementary sense of decency and fair play should have dictated long ago.

SOME KING

The things that are most precious, most valuable, are the very things money cannot buy. And still the world weighs a man's success by his money.

Put on the scales good health and modest means; then throw on the other side poor health and plenty of money. Pound for pound, which will you have?

If you are a man with modest means and good health and a position of promise, do not let the money of the boss bother you. I've noticed that the law of compensation works full time in matters of money. At about the hour that a man arrives with a bunch of money he looks around for his health.

This is to encourage and to enthuse men with small means, and to incite them to be satisfied with what is more than money—good health.

If you are well, hungry, and have four or five mouths to feed, you are king of the greatest empire in all the world—the home. And that's some king, believe me.—Van Amburg, in Silent Partner.

Church and Saloon

Is it true that the saloons are more active in feeding the hungry, raising the fallen and cheering the disheartened than the churches? In a letter to this paper a correspondent has much to say of the character of what follows:

It is a fact only too well known to the church and to everyone who cares to look around a little that when a man is "down and out" and has no friends and no other place to go the saloons will always take him in, feed and warm him and give him the companionship he craves. They are always warm and bright and full of good cheer, and he forgets for a time the rebuffs of an indifferent world and enjoys himself with the goods the gods or the saloon supplies. And of course he goes again, and as often as he may return he is made welcome; not one day in the week, but six days.

We should rather say that there is a little overstatement here, for the church and everyone do not know of this condition. If the writer of the letter will dress himself somewhat shabbily and make a round of the saloons in search of a free lunch, a free glass of beer and free warmth and companionship, not on one day, but on a number of consecutive days, his idea of the "good cheer" of the saloon may be quite materially modified. He will find that his approaches to the free-lunch counter are marked with much attention by the saloonkeeper or his employees, and if he escapes "ejectment for cause" on his second appearance he may thank his gods he speaks of.

To be sure, generous sentiment retains lodgment in human hearts in every stratum of society. There are generous saloonkeepers and there are more who are free with money that comes easily; but everyone hasn't remarked that the liquor business is a school for the development of the finer human feelings. Part of the saloonkeeper's stock in trade is affability, but he expects it to yield dividends. On occasion, he can substitute for it, in less time than it takes to shift automobile speed gears, a most robustious brand of "wholesoled" incivility. He is decdedly not the head of o charity-dispensing organization.

The church may properly be blamed for fixing its eyes too steadfastly on some distant heaven, to the neglect of the work to be done on earth; but its doors are much more widely open than they used to be, and, if not everyone, a good many persons find it much more responsive to appeals at this time of much distress than is the saloon. Modern spiritual optics has already done a good deal to correct the vision of the church.—Democrat, Rochester.

IF

From Town Topics

If you can wear your flannels when your neighbors
Are shedding theirs and poking fun at you
If you can take precautions, though your labors
Are watched and criticised by quite a few;

If you can swallow sulphur and molasses,
And calmly wear red flannels round your throat;
And take bad doses from alternate glasses,
Until you feel your very heart afloat;

If you can catch a cold and keep your temper,
While all your friends suggest a dozen cures;
If you have influenza and distemper,
Yet sympathize with cases "worse than yours";

If you hear "How is your cold?" and answer sweetly,
Or hear "I told you so," and not get cross;
If suddenly you lose your voice completely,
And never breathe a word about your loss;

If you can stick to rubbers and umbrella
When all the world is wearing summer suits,
And smile benignly at the other fellow
When he makes fun of you with jeers and hoots;

If you can grapple with that tired feeling,
And force yourself to work that must be done;
Then summer time your ills will soon be healing,
And probably you'll live till fall, my son.

The Keystone State.

There are several theories as to how Pennsylvania came to be called the Keystone State. The one most generally accepted and the one most dear to all who own Pennsylvania as their native state, is that Pennsylvania decided the great issue of American independence.

At the meeting of the Continental congress in Philadelphia July 4, 1776, the vote adopting the Declaration was taken by states. Of the thirteen original states six had already voted in the affirmative and six in the negative, when the delegation from Pennsylvania came in. John Morton casting the deciding vote in the affirmative. Thus Pennsylvania, by her vote, decided and was named the Keystone State.

Another reason advanced is that in constructing a bridge between Pennsylvania avenue and Georgetown, Washington, a single arch was erected of stone left from building the walls of the capitol. On the thirteen "voussoirs" or arch stones, the names of the thirteen states were engraved. Pennsylvania, falling in the keystone of the arch, became still more widely known as the Keystone State.—Philadelphia Press.

Lubbock and the Bees.

In "Ants, Bees and Wasps" it is related that one summer some fifty years ago Sir John Lubbock became interested in a curious parasite of the bumblebee. He wished to complete his investigations, but as the winter came on did not know where to get the bees, so he advertised.

In reply to his advertisement a man wrote offering him a supply of bees at one and six apiece. The price was high, but in the cause of science Lubbock did not demur, only when he had bought all the bees he required he wrote to the man and said, "Now that I have had the bees, for which I am greatly obliged, would you kindly tell me, to satisfy my curiosity, how you are able to procure them at this time of year?" The man wrote back quite courteously, but quite firmly, saying: "No. Since I can sell the bees at eighteenpence each, I think it pays me better to go on doing so than to tell anybody else how to procure them."

The Alaskans.

According to the government statistics, the natives of Alaska are about 26,000 in number, and they are spread over more than 350,000 of the 590,000 square miles of the territory. Their small settlements extend along 10,000 miles of coast and on both sides of the Yukon river and its tributaries, for a distance of more than 2,500 miles. One of the supervision districts contains a full 100,000 square miles. The others average more than 65,000 square miles each. Of the natives of Alaska approximately 11,000 belong to six tribes of Indians in northeastern and southern Alaska and in the valley of the Yukon. About 11,000 are Eskimos on the western and northwestern coasts, along the Bering sea, the Bering strait and the Arctic ocean. Something more than 3,000 are Aleuts and mixed races through the Aleutian islands.—Christian Herald.

The Admirable Towser.

"I've got the most wonderful dog in the world—the smartest, I mean," said one of a party camping in Canada last fall. "When I bring out my rifle he knows I'm going after deer, and he never offers to follow me, but if he sees me reach for my shotgun he knows that means partridges, and when I get to the woods I find him there waiting for me. Actually that dog knows the difference between a rifle and a shotgun."

"That's nothing," said another of the party from his place at the other side of the fire. "You fellows have seen my little Towser, haven't you? Well, when I begin to get out my fishing kit Towser runs up behind the barn and begins digging worms."—Saturday Evening Post.

Our Postal Service.

The beginning of the postal service in what is now the United States dates from 1639, when a house in Boston was employed for the receipt of letters for and from the old world. In 1672 the government of New York colony established a post to go monthly from New York to Boston. A general postoffice was established in Virginia in 1692 and in Philadelphia in 1698. In 1789, when the federal government went into operation, the number of offices in the thirteen states was only about seventy-five.—New York American.

Chinese Language.

Where the Chinese language, written or spoken, came from nobody knows any more than they know where the original Chinese themselves came from. But it is probable that the primary Chinese characters existed 4,000 years ago pretty much as they do today.

A Gentle Reminder.

He—Have you decided what you will wear at the next german? She—That depends somewhat on the flowers that are sent me. I have a perfectly dear gown that, with a dozen jack roses, would be just too sweet for anything.—Richmond Times-Dispatch.

What We Remember.

The will governs the memory. We forget what does not concern us; we remember what is of lasting importance to the will.—Friedrich Paulsen in "Introduction to Philosophy."

Greed perhaps has made more gamblers than avarice, more drunkards than thirst and perhaps as many suicides as despair.

KEEP OFF THE GRASS

I DREAMED a dream, the other night. I saw a sign that caused a fright. The words were these before my sight—Keep Off the Grass. I saw the crowd halt in the street. It seemed as tho' they'd met defeat. They saw that sign that meant retreat—Keep off the grass. I could not find a reason why the crowd should halt or pass it by. A few would falter, then, they'd cry—Keep off the grass. Of all the idiotatic sounds that comes acreeping o'er snow mounds is that which some poor boob compounds—Keep off the grass. While winter's here, why can't we live as tho' we meant our best to give? Don't let your grit slide through the sieve—Keep off the grass. The time will come and don't you fear. The sweetest time in all the year, the season when in truth we'll hear—Keep off the grass. Our boys won't dare to toss a ball for fear they'll hear the neighbors call, "You need your ears cuffed 'till you bawl, keep off my grass." And—when our blades begin to sprout, our neighbor's dog will be let out to scratch and dig and then we shout, 'keep off the grass.' But such is life from day to day; on—qui-vive—pivot we all sway. It seems we've tuned our tongues to say—keep off the grass.

CHURCHES AND THE SOCIAL MOVEMENT

Prof. Rauchenbusch Declared The Churches are Awakening to the Social Movement.

Appreciative of the marked increase of interest in the social movement, Prof. Walter Rauschenbusch of the Rochester Theological Seminary, who was in Syracuse Monday to address the Commonweal Club, of which Miss Mabel E. Todd is president, declared that the ministers are now wide awake to the importance of this issue.

Professor Rauschenbusch occupies the chair of church history at the seminary, and has given the social question careful study for many years. Tow of his books, "Christianty and Social Crisis" and "Christianizing the Social Order," are especially well known, and Professor Rauschenbusch is called upon for a greater number of lectures than he is able to deliver because of his duties in the ceminary, together with extensive writings.

Professor Rauschenbusch is of the opinion that the fault with the church rested for many years in the fact that it was dealing too much with the individual, and therefore failed in getting hold of the causes that depressed the calsses.

"The social movement, "is not socialism. It is broader. It stands for all the good movements. The total of it all is the conscientious effort to do away with all human misery. In the olden days misery existed. Discontent was held down in the beginning. Now there is a world-wide intelligent movement. The main forces at work are moral, religious, organization, spread of education and the selfish desire. The latter has its place because it tends to make the individual advance."

Professor Rauschenbusch was received by a large audience last night at Apollo Hall in the Clark Music building. This was the first of a series of lectures to be given under the auspices of the new club aloog similar lines. Professor Rauschenbusch was entertained during his stay in the city by Prof. W. C. Lowe, No. 728 Ackerman avenue.

Skirts, Then and Now
From Browning's Magazine

Whene'er we took our walks abroad
Not many months ago
My love with mincing footsteps trod
And moved exceeding slow.

Had she perchance once toppled o'er
She could but feebly kick
Until somebody should restore
Her to her perpendic.

When she would board a trolley car
Without the help of me
She found the step was much too far
And hopped up like a flea.

When now her walks abroad she takes
In skirts no longer tight
Her strides are of the sort that makes Me trot to keep in sight.

Should she capsize she'd quickly right
Like that self-righting thing.
The clown who does for our delighht
His flipflops in the ring.

And when the trolley car she halts
Her skirts are so aloof
One would not marvel should her vaults
Negotiate the roof

ALTON HICKS PLEAD GUILTY

With Others Convicted He Will Be Arraigned Thursday for Sentence

Thomas Maera, a well known resident of Oswego was found guilty by a jury in County Court yesterday on a charge of grand larceny, first degree. The case went to trial before Judge Henry D. Coville Monday afternoon.

It was alleged that the defendant stole a quantity of shoes and other goods from merchandise cars in the freight yards of the New York Central Railroad. After receiving the verdict Judge Coville announced that he would defer sentence until Thursday.

District-Attorney Francis D. Culkin and his assistant, Don C. Conley conducted the prosecution, while the defendant was represented by Dennis O'Sullivan.

Alton Hicks, the Southern youth indicted on a charge of placing an obstruction on the tracks of the New York, Ontario & Western Railroad in this vicinity of Fulton last October was arraigned before Judge Coville and entered a plea of guilty. Hicks is 19 years of age. Sentence in this case was also deferred until Thursday.

The case of Natala Muscato, indicted on a charge of assault, second degree, went to trial late Tuesday. The crime was alleged to have been committed in the city of Fulton May 4 last year, when it is claimed he slashed a young man named Fred Bogley across the face with a knife. The complainant received a deep wound extending across the left side of his face from his ear to his mouth.

Jay Gray of Oswego was sentenced to a term in Elmira Reformatory for breaking his parole. He was recently convicted in Police Court on a charge of larceny.

John Bowley, after pleading guilty to a charge of burglary, third degree, and petit larceny, was given a suspended sentence and placed in the custody of Probation Officer W. J. Dempsey. Rosa Farrington and Fred Rosa, who pleaded guilty to violations of the penal law, were given suspended sentences.

Ben Canatazarri, charged with carrying concealed weapons, was sentenced to pay a fine of $50 and six months in the County Jail. The jail sentence was suspended.

Oliver Warner and Charles J. Pearl indicted jointly on a charge of burglary and larceny, pleaded guilty. They were given suspended sentences and ordered to report to the probation officer.

THE BUILDER'S TROWEL

THE young man just returning from college has allowed the idea to grow up in his mind tht the world is clamoring for him with open arms—that people are gathering along the "side lines" to watch his going and coming.

From the college he expects to step among business firms and men of affairs, either as a Diplomat to some foreign country, Manager of a Steamship Line, or as a Railroad Broker.

The man who starts at the bottom is the man who learns the principle on which the institution is founded. Dip deep enough toward the bottom of a thing and you will find the rock on which it stands.

Most men of influence and character and who have acquired fortunes, have once been poor. The man who has developed a great business, or the man who has developed great character, the man who has amassed great wealth, is the man who laid the foundation with his own trowel.

No man can direct the policies or plans of a business until he knows the various channels through which money should be spent. No man can start half way up the scale and make the greatest possible success, because he can never really know what is going on under him.

He is not familiar with what is being done "down stairs." Possible extravagance and error in one-half of the business are unknown to him. A part of the very thing he is supposed to direct is a mystery, hidden away under the partition of inexperience.

The things that have really bettered the world, improved humanity and added to our happiness, are things born of inspiration, adversity, hardship and poverty.

No cult will ever be founded to take the place of the school of experience. The big things of the world are not done on blackboards. Experience is the thing that gives us poise, power, personality——the thing that writes into our being that peculiar, indefinable something that inspires confidence in other men.

CIVIC LEAGUE FORMED FOR EAST SYRACUSE

New Organization Will Take Up Problems for Improving Village's General Conditions

East Syracuse, Feb. 9.—The Civic League of East Syracuse was the name given the new organization formed last night at a meeting held in the High school building. Thirty-four names were signed as members, but this number will undoubtedly be largely increased as the league goes on. The meeting last night was the culmination of a meeting held two weeks ago. The committee appointed at the initial meeting to draft rules and by-laws for the governing of the league reported last night the tentative rules had been prepared, the same being read to those present. It was decided to postpone the adoption of the rules and by-laws until another meeting, in order that those connected with the organization might have time to consider them, the organization, however, accepting them as a basis.

The scope and character of the league will be along general lines for improvement in matters which will be brought to the attention of the league, whose work will be to accomplish things for the general betterment of conditions in the community. The league will be non-political and non-sectarian in character. Public questions of importance and interest pertaining to all parties will be discussed for the growth, development and prosperity of the village. The league will seek to broaden its field of operations in all directions, taking up, discussing and endeavoring to solve problems that will be for the general good of the community. The league will not confine its efforts to any one particular problem, but extend its efforts in a general way as problems may from time to time confront it.

ALBANY LETTER DAY BY DAY

Cardoze Tells Time' Readers the Doings of Officials and Lawmakers

Albany, Feb. 11.—Four weeks of full legislation have resulted in the introduction of nine hundred and ninety-five bills; last year upon the same date, February 6, eight hundred and sixty-ofur measures had been offered.

Attempts to check the avalanche of legislation each year have proved that there is no stopping the members from presenting more bills than can ever be hoped to be properly examined by the senators and assemblymen. The uniform charter law, the creating of the State bill drafting commission and other steps taken with the hope of steming the documentary tide have not yet done so.

The fact that there are so many bills presented this year may be attributed to the reform wave which has been dashed upon the shores of the law-making land of the State. As a matter of fact all of the measures offered in the senate and assembly do not originate with the senators and assemblymen. There is—nothing which can prevent a citizen from having any old of a bill offered, providing he has a friend in the legislature and the bill has been properly drawn up. The bill drafting commisson will do your researching for you and prepare your ideas in official fashion. You do not even have to furnish paper; the cost is nothing.

Bills carrying appropriations are always the most numerous every year. Amendments to existing laws are classified as they are introduced, but all measures carrying appropriations go to the ways and means committee in the assembly.

There are nearly fifty proposed amendments to the Civil code already in, with many more to follow. There are also a score or more proposed amendments to the Criminal Code. A great many changes in the Conservation law have been advocated by legislators, while the proposed alterations to the Educational law are also numerous. It cannot be said that the Health law has been neglected as regards proposed amendments, nor has the Highway law been overlooked in this pacticular.

The Banking law and the Insurance law have been left pretty much alone and probably will be, unless Comptroller ravis finds thinsg awry in the banking department which may mean legislation to reorganize that department.

New York city bills are anything btu scarce and the same condition prevails as regards railroad legislation. There are thirty-odd bills aimed at the Penal law, and nearly a score at the Tax law, with the big measure reorganizing the State ta commission still pending. The town law has come in for considerable legislative attention as has the County law.

There cannot be much additional legislation directed at professions in that dentists, veterinarians, chiropodists, optometrists and embalmers have all come in for attentjon. Even the barber has been singled out for legislative scrutiny as has been the nurse and even the lawyer.

The present session having just begun, it is likely tht during the remainder of February and the first two weeks in March hundreds of measures will be added to the ones which have already been printed.

Practically two-thirds of the legislation introduced each year never leaves the committee rooms and thus do not appear on the daily calendars.

The Pig In Water.

Of pigs it is commonly reported that so queerly fashioned are they that if they attempt to swim they cut their throats with their fore feet, but this is only an old wife's fable. Whether wild or tame, they are all good swimmers, though, owing to the shortness of their legs, they just touch their throats with their fore feet and beat the water very high. Many of the islands of the southern seas are now inhabited by wild pigs, which are the descendants of those which have swum ashore from wrecked vessels.—Pearson's Weekly.

"SANITO" COOKING UTENSILS

are a necessity for housekeepers who wish to excel in domestic science. They are the only American-made cooking ware which absolutely reproduces the high priced, imported German utensils, so universally used abroad. SANITO utensils have an acid proof lining which cannot crack or scale off and retains nothing to taint or discolor the food. When cooked in SANITO the food cooks evenly, retains all its juices and flavors and never scorches or burns. SANITO is a nonconductor of heat and after being heated to the cooking point—212 degrees—it requires but a very small gas flame to complete the cooking process. With proper care SANITO will last a life time.

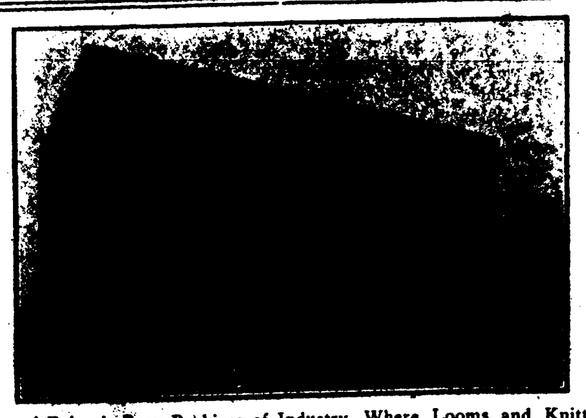
Spanswick Plant Will Work Day and Night to Keep Apace of Orders

The W. H. Spanswick (Monarch Knitting Mills) is now on the threshold of its greatest year of prosperity. Orders are accumalating so rapidly that as soon as W. H. Spanwick can secure experienced employes the plant will run day and night for at least months. At present there are 22 knitting machines running and others are to be installed. Four operators take care of the machines, keeping them in running order.

In the northeast corner of the building is a winder having 30 spindles, and this machine prepares spools for the knitting machines.

In the northwest corner of the building are long tables where about a dozen women fold garments, and prepare them for shipment.

Work throughout the mill is done mostly by girls, and the speed and deftness by which they operate seems miraculous.



Knitting machines in the mill when ed a shirt finisher, and will face and will be evenly knitted all around the body of the cloth.

The woven cloth falls from the machines upon a machine resembling a clotheswringer, or it is wound upon a spool. About 50 yards is required to a cut before being removed from the machine.

Continuing our inspection to the second floor one is introduced to Henry Watt, the foreman. Mr. Watts who gladly explains the workings of the large finishing room, the speed and operation of the many different machines. The first machine shown is one that puts the edge on wash cloths. This is a sewing machine having a speed of 3000 stitches per minute.

The next is a garment finisher and the girl operating the machine can sew the bands on 125 dozen per day. The deftness displayed by the operator shows long experience. In fact every one of the 40 girls employed under Mr. Watt's instructions shows marked skill in her particular line of work.

There are 38 Singer sewing machines upon this floor all driven by motor power, for it seems that in this work, speed is essential.

One of Fulton's Busy Beehives of Industry, Where Looms and Knitting Machinery Will Hum Day and Night.

Another machine in the northeast corner has two distinct motions at the same time. This machine is call-rapidity with which shee can face and bind 200 dozen shirts a day. The young woman who operates the machine earns from $8 to $12 per week. She, too, is an expert in her work, and deserves special mention for the arpidity with which she can face and cut the hundreds of garments that pass through her hands daily.

During the days of the hand work a woman could bind but 20 dozen garments per day; but with the high power speed sewers now installed at these mills, 200 dozen a day are bound with comparative ease.

The button sewer is a machine of much interest. A button is placed on a sort of shelf by the operator, and upon a slight pressure of the right foot upon a pedal the operation begins. The button has four holes and with a certain number of stitches in each button; the thread is tied and cut before it is again brought to a stop.

The girl operating this machine can sew buttons on 200 dozen shirts a day.

After the goods have been packed in long cases, they are taken to the basement and the covers nailed down ready, for shipment.

The entire plant is well lighted and heated, and under Mr. Spanwick's management has improved, until now it is impossible to keep up with the large orders that come in daily.

The plant was established about five years ago, and has manufactured children's underwear from the beginning. Besides the two-piece suits, the company also manufacturers combination suits which are equal in work manship and cloth to any others manufactured article.

The building is of three stories in height and covers about 15,000 square feet of floor space.

The manufacturing of knitted wash cloths was the foundation of the present large plant, and from a small beginning with a limited amount of capital, the firm has make rapid gains until now there are no clouds upon the horizon of its prosperity.

Mr. Spanswick and his assistants are to be congratulated upon their endeavors, and the prosperity now enjoyed is evidence that the manufacturer must "work to win,' and 'Mr. Spanswick can be seen day after day about the plant constantly working and clearing the track for further enterprise.

It was this determination of making things go and pay for their usage that has placed the Spanswick Knitting Company where it stands today, an asset in the community.

THE QUIRK LAST NIGHT

The vaudeville program at The Quirk last night was an exceptionally good one. Comedy gave the audience plenty of food for laughter.

Gus Kelly and company, two men and a woman, displayed the art of bag punching. Two of the comedians managed to keep five bags moving at one time, finished with a burlesque on boxing.

The Isabelle Sisters, musicians, were very good, as were Bernum, Yanb, Trio Lightning Change Artists.

Dunn and Deane, Spanish dancing and imitators of animals, whistling, etc., were a scream and keep the audience in roars of laughter.

Brasins and Brown closed the show. The roller skating and trick bicycle riding of this pair proved to be on a par with anything ever seen in Fulton.

The feature photo play is Lubin 3-reel drama "The Weight of a Crown," supplemented by 3 others of high order.

EVANGELISTIIC SERVIICES

Yesterday's Palladium says: There was a large congregation present last evening, at the evangelistic meeting held at the First M. E. church and addressed by the Rev. George Stockwell of Fulton. Mr. Stockwell's theme, The Holy Spirit, covered the results that follow the Holy Spirit residing in human life. Aside from the eloquent sermon the congregation enjoyed an excellent musical program by the First M. E. choir, assisted by the church orchestra.

The regular afternoon service of Bible readings to be held afternoons was led today by Mr. Stockwell. There was a large attendance.

The Rev. Mr. Stockwell will also preach at this evening's service.

SHUGRUE ONE OF THE PINK TEA ARTISTS

New York, Feb. 10.—A bout between second raters would have furnished the fistic fan more excitement than that produced last night in the ten round go between Joe Shugrue and Freddie Welsh.

The champion and the near champion went through their combat as if it were a pin ktea affair. When the bout began to get warm and it looked as if some hard blows were about to be landed, the fighters clinched. And they indulged in more hugging tactics than exchanges of blows. Shugrue appeared eager to mix it up, but he did not have the attack to get by the clever champion and his clumsy eagerness served to mess the event completely. Welsh gave a fine exhibition of the scientific fighter, but outside of the first round he gave no outward sign of real ability as a champion.

FORMER MAYOR DIED TODAY

James A. Foster Was a Resident of This City for Forty Years. Was Born In Canada

James Alvah Foster, 66 years old died at an early hour this morning at his home, 208 So. Fourth st., following an illness oftyphoid fever.

In the death of Mr. Foster Fulton loses a citizen of sterling worth and integrity, a man, who at all times was interested in the improvement and welfare of this city.

Mr. Foster was born at Whitby, Canada, in 1849, and came to Fulton at the age of 26. With assistance of his brother, Charles Foster, he established the Foster Bros.' Knife Works. Later the company became incorporated and two brothers, C. F. and I. M. Foster, also a son, C. Earl Foster became identified with the firm. Mr. Foster was the president of the firm.

When Oswego Falls and Fulton proper merged as a city in 1902 Mr. Foster was chosen as the first mayor. and filled with ability that office for three years. George Broker succeeded Mr. Foster as mayor, and under Mayor Brooker's administration Mr. Foster became superintendent of public works.

Mr. Foster was a member of the Citizens' club, Nicotine club, the local B. P. O. E. and F. and A. M. orders.

Surviving besides his widow are two sisters, Mrs. David McClure of this city and Mrs. E. M. Worden of New York, also three brothers, John, C. Langdon and Charles S. Foster, all of this city.

The funeral will be held Friday at 2 p.m. from the family home in So. 4th st.

K. OF. C. ENTERTAINMENT

Last night at the K. of C. rooms a meeting was held and captains were elected for the teams to play a series of 3 games of 45's.

Capt. Thomas McCovern's teams was made up from the following members: Roach, Carroll, Sweeney, Mr. Govern, Brosnahan, Culkin, T. McGovern, Goss and W. Watson; won 16 games.

Capt. Schenider's team was composed of Davenport, Malone, Martin, Doyle, O'Hara, Fred Miller, F. Schneider, T. Sullivan, and D. M. Sullivan. Sixteen games were won.

Captain Flynn's team was Frawley, McCormack, Roney, Conley, M. Sullivan, W. Brennan, I. Fynn, John Timothey and Joe Conners. Thirteen games won.

After the games Frank Massaro gave a spaghetti supper.

An entertainment followed the supper in which Edward Rugg gave several recitations, John Frawley, saxophone solos by A. R. Currier, and F. La Porte performed many marvelous feats in the art of acting.

Lawrence Sullivan gave an interesting talk on "Shadowgraph" illustrating his talk with pictures.

COLLEGE WOMEN TO DINE

The college woman's banquet will be held at Lewis' tomorrow night at 7:30 o'clock. The following have responded to an invitation to be present: Mrs. L. P. Smith, Mrs. Berta Lee Royce, Mrs. R. E. The honor guests are Mrs. L. W. Mott or Oswego and Mrs. Cora Dodson Graham of Syracuse.

An especially fine menue has been planned and speeches and toasts will for ma part of the evening's program.

E STRIK RIOT; 1 SHOT

Hoboken, N. J., Feb. 10—One strike sympathizer was shot and is in a critical condition in a hospital and Sam Lehman, superintendent of the plant, is under arrest today, accused of the shooting as a result of a strike riot in front of a hat and cap factory here. The injured man is Max Taskin, who is shot in the left side of the chin, the bullet passing up and out of the top of his head.

VILLA LEADS AND IS WINNING A FIGHT

Douglas, Ariz., Feb. 10.—Fifteen thousand troops are reported to have attacked Guadalajaira, Mex., early today and heavy fighting is said to be going on there today. Gen. Villa is said to be leading the troops in person and the soldiers are reported to have already taken a part of the city, according to advices received from convention cources.

CHARITY.

It is an old saying that charity begins at home, but this is no reason it should not go abroad. A man should live with the world as a citizen of the world. He may have a preference for the particular quarter or square or even alley in which he lives, but he should have a generous feeling for the welfare of the whole.—Cumberland.

Giddy Amusement.

A young working man mother in one of the parks the other day was overheard proposing fresh entertainment to a family party consisting of three or four little children and a grown up sister. "Come on," she said, "and I'll take you to see your grandma's grave." "I don't see much in that," dissented her sister. "Well," replied the mother thoughtfully, "I'd rather see a grave than a wedding. You do know the grave's the end of it."—Manchester Guardian.

CALAMITY.

Countryman's calamities and who would seem happy? But, in truth, calamity leaves fully half of your life untouched.—Charles Dudley.

HOUSEWIVES ARE WARNED

Commissioner Hartigan Recalls the Sugar Panic of the Fall of 1914

New York, Feb. 10.—Joseph Hartigan, Commissioner of Weights and Measures, sounded yesterday a note of warning against the creation of an abnormal demand for flour by housewives who in fear of a wheat and flour famine might think it wise to lay in large quantities of flour at this time

"The public may well keep in mind," he said, "the experience had in the months of August, September and October, 1914, in the panicky condition attending the rise in price of sugar. During those three months there was a frenzied demand for sugar, which forced the price far beyond normal. Housewives laid in considerable quantities for the future.

"Figures furnished by experts show that while there is great demand for wheat and flour for export, nevertheless the supply left on hand to be carried over until the summer crop of 1915 will be sufficient for the needs in home consumption of wheat and flour."

William Steinmetz, president of the United Master Bakers of New York, said yesterday: "There are well defined rumors that the price of a five cent loaf of bread will be raised to six cents next week, probably on Tuesday or Wednesday. Our association has taken no action."

A. J. Gunderson, vice-president of the New York State Bakers' Association, said: "There is no change in the situation up to date. So far as we are concerned we have adopted a policy of 'watchful waiting.' Rumors now going around are all gossip. All are rumors except the increased price of flour. That's a relity. If the price of flour does not come down the price of bread will have to go up."

Commissioner Hartigan sent telegrams yesterday to the United States Attorney-General, the Secretary of the Department of Agriculture and the Secretary of the Department of Commerce asking for first hand information as to the attitude of the Government regarding wheat and wheat prices and the threatened raise in the cost of bread.

The telegram to Attorney-General Gregory was in part as follows: "What action, if any, is the United States Government taking with a view to eliminating the alleged illegitimate speculative rise in the price of wheat? Would it not be advantageous to the public to stop illegitimate speculative wheat in transit between the States on the ground of public policy, prosecution to follow under Federal law? In your opinion should Federal law be enacted to prohibit speculation in foodstuffs on exchanges?"

Of Secretary Redfield he asked: "In view of export figures daily indicating that the United States will soon have the balance of trade and become a debtor instead of a creditor nation, do you believe it advisable that embargo be placed on foodstuffs for export? Export statistices showing that our ordinary articles of export are not wanted now in Europe and munitions of war predominate, would you advise, in view of high price of wheat and consequent increase in price of loaf of bread or a reduced size of loaf, that some form of stoppage of wheat for export be applied?"

The telegram to Secretary Houston asked: "In your opinion will present supply of wheat be sufficient to carry over to June 30, date of summer crop, and be available at reasonably moderate prices? In your opinion is there any reason for apprehension that the constant demand for wheat for foreign export will cause in any part of the country a wheat famine between now and the distribution of the harvest crop of 1915?"

Calls Apprehension "Undue."

In each telegram Commissioner Hartigan explained that the inquiries were made "with the purpose of allaying undue excitement in the public mind if the price of bread is generally in creased and for the purpose of urging necessary legislation."

A representative of one of the largest baking concerns in the United States having stores and agencies in Eastern States advised Mr. Hartigan yesterday that on Saturday next it intends to raise the price of bread unless there is a drop in the prite of wheat.

Another large baking concern told Mr. Hartigan that if an embargo was placed on wheat it would tend to dishearten the farmers in raising future crops, and a large decrease could reasonably be expected, while bankers would seriously object. Eight months ago, he said, bankers were worrying about their credits in Europe, and now gold is coming in in large quantities and they are approaching a sound financial basis.

A representative of a large milling concern told the commissioner that railroads are experiencing much difficulty in clearing the way for cars containing millions of bushels of wheat en route to the seaboard for export.

Wheat exports in November, 1914, amounted to 19,181,602 bushels against 3,850,392 bushels in November, 1913. In November, 1914, 1,485,024 barrels of wheat flour were exported, against 1,273,123 barrels in the corresponding month a year before.

JOHNSON WANTS TIME

Barbados, Feb. 10.—Jack Johnson, world's champion heavy weight pugilist, stated today that he wished to secure a ten day postponement of his fight with eJss Willard at Juarez. He said that he needed more time to get into good shape. He is trying to get into communication with Jack Curley, promoter of the battle.

Johnson also said that he would leave this afernoon for Havana, where he would begin his heavy training. He has been doing light work here since his arrival from Buenos Ayres.

The Juarez fight is scheduled to take place March 6th. If Johnson's request is granted it will take place March 16.

REPORTED EXECUTION OF REBEL LEADER

Pretoria, South Africa, Feb. 10.—The Pretoria News states that Lieut-Col. Maritz, who instigated the Boer rebellion, has been executed by the Germans on a charge of treachery. There is no confirmation of this report.

Lieut-Col. Maritz fled into erman Southwest Africa when the Boer rebellion collapsed.

LOUISE T. SESSIONS,

Mrs. Louise T. Sessions, 83, died Monday afternoon, at the home of Claude Gilbert, 312 W. 5th st. Funeral services will be held tomorrow morning at 9:30, burial to be made in Homer, N. Y.

RITCHIE COMING EAST

San Francisco, Feb. 10.—Willie Ritchie, started east today to begin training in New York for his ten round bout with Freddie Welsh on March 11.

Phoenix, Ariz., Feb. 10.—Smallpox today prevented the Arizona Legislature from meeting. W. B. Lanier, reading clerk of the House, was stricken with the disease and the legislative body adjourned for two days. Governor Hunt was among those exposed to the disease. He and many State officers were vaccinated and the State House is being fumigated.

THE GREATEST RAILROAD.

Africa's Famous Cape to Cairo Line Will Be Unique.

When all the great railroad trunks of the world have been built, a decade or two hence, four of them will appear upon the map in heavy black, indicating that they surpass all others in importance. These will be: The Pan-American, from the arctic wastes of Canada to the strait of Magellan; the Transsiberian, from the Atlantic to the Pacific across northern Europe and Asia; the Transpersian or some other line, from the southeast of Europe to India, and the Cape to Cairo.

The Pan-American and the Indo-European railways may surpass the Cape to Cairo as commercial arteries, and the Transsiberian will doubtless figure more potently as a strategic line, but for the sheer interest of the country traversed—for the picturesque variety and romantic appeal of the panoramas running like double cinematograph films past the car windows—the great African trunk can never know a rival.

Six thousand miles across 65 degrees of latitude; a score of climates, and the lands of a hundred different peoples or tribes; the second longest of the world's rivers and two of its largest lakes; the greatest dam ever built, conserving water for the world's richest lands; the most imposing and ancient of all temples; the greatest waterfall, and the most important gold and diamond mines, and finally one of the last great expanses of real wilderness, the only place in the world where the wild beasts of the jungle may be seen in their primitive state from a train—all these seen, traversed or experienced in twelve days! Surely there can never be another such railway as this.—Lewis R. Freeman in World's Work.

The Oldest Warfare.

They were talking of the great wars fought in the days when this old world was considerably younger.

"But, you know," said Pant, "it always seems to me that those old warriors were very much like our modern financiers."

"What on earth do you mean?" asked Hint.

"Well, they were always investing some one else's capital, weren't they?"—London Mail.

War: Pathos and Humor

A Woman's Escape From Belgium

London, Feb. 10.—Here is the story of a woman's escape from Belgium. She is a London solicitor's wife and the daughter of a Belgian army officer. After five months' separation she has rejoined her husband in England.

Caught in Belgium when the Germans swept over the land, she found no opportunity to get out until in December she obtained a conditional passport entitling her to travel within the eastern half of Belgium.

"Then," she says, "I 'contracted' with one of those shady 'general and commission agents' who make a specialty of conveying passengers in unlawful fashion across the Dutch frontier, and I left the Belgian capital as one of a party of ten under his guidance."

The railways being closed to them, they had to proceed by easy stages on foot or in country cabs when they could get them to the frontier town of X———, and put up at an inn while the contractor hurried to the "Kommandatur," or office, of the local German administrators. He returned looking "rather glum," saying that they had each to apply in person.

"We entered the Kommandatur, and the trap so cunningly laid for us by the Germans, to find ourselves placed under immediate arrest. Each of us in turn was closely cross-examined and re-examined, both publicly and in private, by a Prussian colonel and lieutenant, and then, certain contradictions having struck our warders, we were searched one by one in a neighboring room; the women, at any rate, in most horrible fashion, hardly an inch of their clothing or of their person escaping the fingers of the searcher, a 'nun' of whose real profession and sex I am still in doubt.

"On hearing the order for the search one of my lady companions, a well known Brussels actress, swooned, or pretended to. And when a male companion of hers failed to reappear the mystery was explained to us by the old colonel, who told us that a secret code and official reports to the Belgian government had been found hidden away in the lining of his jacket. He was a spy and would be at once conveyed to the citadel of Antwerp and dealt with. "Tomorrow, pouf! pouf!' grimly added the Prussian veteran, by way of comment. As for ourselves, as we were, to all appearances, associated with such a person, we would at least be detained as 'suspects' pending further inquiries."

Not until nearly midnight were they allowed to return to the inn, which they did under an armed escort. "Sadly we sat in the diningroom, bewailing our misfortunes, when all of a sudden the young actress, now in tears, confessed to us that she, too, was a Belgian secret agent—in fact the partner of the doomed man—and that upstairs, in her bag, there were State papers of considerable importance. She begged us, therefore, as patriots, in case she was arrested, to burn those papers.

"A little later—about two o'clock—in comes a German N. C. O. and an escort to order forcibly her return to the Kommandatur. Completely collected now, she bade us au revoir with a nervous smile and a glance which I shall never forget. When she had gone one of us glided up to the bedroom to fetch the precious papers. The question was how to destroy them without attracting the attention of the sentries placed before our window. There was no other fire burning in the house save in the diningroom. Then one of us, again a woman, hit upon a novel plan for disposing of the papers. We moved the table and, as if to pass the time, started dancing all around the room end in front of the hearth. And then as each of our 'merry' party neared the fireplace he or she flung a share of the papers into the flames until the whole lot were consumed. Then upon some abrupt remark by one of the sentries we quited down very gradually to allay any lurking suspicions in his mind.

"At dawn a German N. C. O. arrived from the Kommandtur and politely told us in excellent French that his chiefs were satisfied of our innocence in the matter, but that as no one could leave the country without a special permit from the Governor General we should have to return to Brussels by the way we had come, this time under German supervision. As for our former guide, he was in a fortress."

But back in Brussels she determined to have another try. "After spending a sorrowful and memorable night in the fortress city I accepted a rather timid offer by a gentleman, who possessed a privileged 'permit' to cross the Dutch border, to accompany him and his wife. He was, however, very much unnerved at the thought of the punishment that might befall him in the event of his administrative and social misdemeanor being found out.

"Still, one fine morning, about five o'clock, off we went, the two of us, in a carriage driven by a courageous 'jobber.' As we drove along we encountered crowds of would-be emigrants, who had been roughly sent back by the German frontier guards, and who shouted to us again and again: 'It is no use trying. They won't let you through.' My escort got nervous at this point, and suggested giving up the attempt altogether. But I would not hear of this, and alternately coaxed and lured.

"So on we go. Suddenly we pull up. Two sentries, with fixed bayonets, appear at the horse's head and cry 'Halt! No joke, this. Only the other day a whole party were shot down for failing to stop when ordered. A moment later both doors of our carriage are simultaneously thrown open by two German officers, one on each side, who demand our passports.

"'Husband and wife'? A timid 'Yes.'

"The danger climax is reached. Will they notice that our passports bear different names and different conditions? The officer who is inspecting my 'husband's' permit grunts his approval, and inquires of his colleague regarding mine. The colleague in reply points out to me that my passport does not authorize me to travel across the frontier. I explain that I should like to see my husband to the frontier limit, adding with a smile, 'Surely, sir, you will understand that wish. tI is a pleasure to meet people who speak French so well, and to whom one can explain things.'

"My German officer beams, my reference to his linguistic accomplishments evidently pleasing him, and, with a friendly nod to the driver, says: All right, go ahead.' And soon we are in sight of th frontier village—half Belgian, half Dutch. We are both all of a tremble, he and I. There is still a German post to face before we reach the land of freedom. We take leave, with many thanks, of our brave and devoted driver. He says only one thing, 'Be cool. Be cool!'

"Timidly on foot we approach the frontier, in our nervous anxiety almost waving our passports in the faces of the sentries on guard. A N. C. O. appears and glances at my 'husband's' document and as I interpose the remark 'those officers over there gave us permission to go through,' does not even look at mine, but is content to say, 'You may pass.'

"We are across. Oh, what a thrill! Free once more! We can hardly believe it, and to make sure of it repeatedly inquire of the people in the streets if we are in Holland. They laugh. 'Oh, yes, you are quite safe.' And now up rushes an automobile, ever on the lookout for 'fugitives.' A dollar a head will take us to the neighboring town, when I can wire to my other 'husband,' who has been waiting for me at Flushing. And as our car whizzes off I proudly pin on my breast the hitherto forbidden cockade of Belgium's heroic black, yellow and red."

Here's a Delightful Spring Hat For the Pretty Little Maiden

BONNET SHAPED HAT.

One cannot but approve of the bonnet shaped hats which are shown for spring. They are designed not only for small folks, but for misses and adults of not too mature years. A pretty hat of this kind is pictured here. It is of fine straw in two tones and is trimmed with satin ribbon of a shade to match the darker tone in the straw. A fancy bow in which a tiny flower is knotted is adjusted at the side.

Interesting Bible Point.

Commentators cannot fix the date of Joseph the carpenter's death, says the Christian Herald. Some hold that it must have taken place before Jesus began his public ministry. In support of this they point to the fact that Joseph is not mentioned in connection with the wedding feast at Cana. Others believe that Joseph must have passed away before the crucifixion; otherwise he would have been at the cross with Mary. Under the circumstances nothing definite can be stated on the matter. Christian tradition asserts that Joseph was over eighty when espoused and that he lived to be a very old man. The "upper room" mentioned in Acts i, where the first gathering of disciples and converts was held after the ascension, may have been in the house of one of the apostles (of John or Mark, as some suppose), but the general view is that it was probably the upper chamber in a house the owners of which made it a custom to hire out such rooms for meeting purposes. This custom, it is claimed, was known in Jerusalem long before Christ.

Waters of the Nile.

The waters of the upper Nile start to rise about June 15, reaching the greatest height at the autumnal equinox, and then gradually subsiding until the following April. That the Nile should thus save the country from total barrenness and make it one of the most fertile lands of the earth is reason sufficient for the bestowal on the mighty stream of the name of "the most holy river" and that the good Mussulmans of Egypt should believe that it has its source in paradise. In ancient times the river had its appointed priests, festivals and sacrifices, and if its rising were delayed a single day they took the most beautiful girl they could find, dressed her richly and drowned her in the waters as a sacrifice to turn away the wrath of the river god and merit his favor. The quality of the Nile water has been highly extolled. Some have said that it is to other waters what champagne is among wines. The priest of Apis would not give it to the sacred bull lest he should become too fat.

Lucky Stroke.

"Did you save anything in that hotel fire?" "Yes, my hotel bill."—Baltimore American.

As Good as a Clock.

When Rossini, the Italian composer, who was noted for his punctuality, was director of the Theatre Italien in Paris he used to attend the rehearsals every morning. Precisely as the clock struck 9 he came out of his house and hailed the nearest cab. Eventually a certain cabman noticed it and was at the master's door each morning. As soon as Rossini entered the cab the driver would look at his watch and then drive off at a good pace. This proceeding was repeated every day. Rossini often wondered whether the driver looked at his watch to see how much time he had to get to the theater.

Finally one day he said, "My friend, why do you always look at your watch as soon as I enter your cab?"

"Monsieur will pardon me," replied the cabman, laughing, "but I do it to see whether my watch is right."—Novellen-Schatz.

Won a Title.

December, 1854, when Napoleon III. offered to send re-enforcements of 20,000 men to the Crimea if the British would convey them, the government was on the point of declining on the ground that no transports were available for such work. It was eventually decided to ask some of the great steamship companies for assistance, and at the next cabinet Sir James Graham announced that this had been done. "Mr. Cunard," he added, "can provide immediate transport for 8,000 men, leaving the question of payment to be decided subsequently by arbitration." "What is Mr. Cunard's Christian name?" asked Palmerston. "Samuel," replied Graham. "Sir Samuel," said Palmerston, with emphasis on the "Sir." And at the close of the war the ship owner was created a baronet.—London Chronicle.

A Card Problem.

Can any reader, asks a writer in the Strand Magazine, verify and explain the following, brought to my notice recently? Deal out four whist hands, purposely making a misdeal—i. e., two cards to one hand. Pick up the hands, shuffle to an extent and then redeal—properly this time. It will be found in nine cases out of ten that one of the hands contains either a singleton (one card of a suit) or lacks a suit altogether. I have tried this repeatedly and nearly always with the same re-

About Sports Generally

By Frank G. Menke.

New York, Feb. 10.—Ed. G. Barrows, who presides for the International League, has come to the conclusion that this is a harsh cruel world. Ed is doing everything that he can to hold his league together, but pretty nearly every morning he awakens to find that some newspaper gent has shot his league to pieces and dumped the pieces into a scrap heap.

Busting the International League seems to be one of the most popular winter sports among the newspaper folks here and hereabouts. When the boys have nothing else to write about, they draw their typewriters up close and pound the International League into bankruptcy.

Barrows admits that the League isn't in what might be called a strategic position. And Barrows doesn't try to kid the public into believing that it is. Barrows, in his statement concerning the International League, had been playing fair. He admits, frankly, that the League's affairs aren't in extremely good shape, but he says that this condition doesn't mean the dissolution of the League.

And we believe what Barrows says. Barrows, in denying the various reports that the league is going to turn up its toes and furnish a job for the undertaker, puts forth some logical reasons. Here they are:

"The magnates of the International League have about one million at stake. That covers stands, grounds, players and similar assets. Among the magnates in the league are Joseph Lannin, owner of the Red Sox; Charles Ebbets, owner of the Brooklyn Dodgers, and other men who have been identified with baseball for more than a score of years.

"Those men have too much at stake to quit simply because the going just now is a bit rough. It is true that the 1914 season was not much of a financial succes for us.

"The 1915 season outlook isn't extremely bright. But the men who are identified with the International League aren't in the game for just a year or two. They are sticker—and they are good sportsmen. They know they can't always win and they are willing to suffer a loss, if necessary, hopeful that better times are coming in the near future.

"The International League will open the 1915 season, just what the circuit will be has not been decided, as yet. There is plenty of time. The Jersey City-Syracuse proposition has held us up, but we expect to make some definite arrangement concerning the Jersey City transfer very shortly.

"It is possible—but not probable—that we will operate with a six club circuit in 1915. That matter is under consideration but it is being considered only in a vague way. Our present plans call for an eight club circuit."

The newspaper gang that is making life unhappy for Barrows, prints yarns that seem to have no basic foundation. They do not quote any actual person as passing out the reports concerning the alleged deplorable conditions of the International League. They merely state that "I hear that the International League is close to bankruptcy" or that "reports from the inside have it that the International League won't open the season."

Those yarns, that attempt to show that the International League is in the brink of ruin, make statements to this effect:

"The owners of the Buffalo club are in financial straits and are not keen about putting more money into the league; the war has effected sports in Toronto and Montreal and the drawing power of baseball there will be reduced to a minimum this year; Richmond, which takes Baltimore's place, is an uncertain position; Newark has soured on the International League, feeling it ought to have major league representation, and with "Wild Bill' Donovan removed from the managerial job, Providence won't support the club as it did in other years."

Stories of that kind do harm to the league, harm to the club owners and they do no one good," said Barrows. "They can be classed as stories that are little better than 'pipe stories', for the conditions cited by those writers are gross exaggerations of real conditions, and they tend to give the public the wrong impression concerning the International League, its present and its future."

HOT LINERS

By Frank G. Menke.

Adapted from a popular, so to speak, song after reading about the rush of youngsters, who are after the mascotin' job on the Yankees:

I didn't raise my boy to be a mascot,
I do not want him on the firing line;
I do not want to see him on a grass plot,
Engaged in bawling out the other nine.
I do not want to have him fighting jinxes,
I think there's better things in life for him,
I do not want to see him ragging umpires;
And listening to the talk of Heinie Zim.

Freddie Welsh and Young Shugrue are scheduled to perform a 30-minute hugging match here tonight.

'Twas ever thus in those no-decision affairs.

A Woman Hater

How She Won Him

By IDA SPEED

Copyright by Frank A. Munsey Co.

Women folks can usually git the wildest kind of fellers to eatin' out of their hands by just feedin' 'em flattery.

The sorriest horse in the world can tell the difference between just good smellin' feed and the kind that will stick to his ribs, but it's just once in awhile you'll find a man that knows what's good for his soul.

Bill Christy was this kind. He was also the handsomest man I ever saw.

He come to work at the Walkin' Stick ranch and went by the name Chris.

He had so much energy he worked the rest of us to death tryin' to keep up with him. There wasn't any undertakin' he wasn't equal to except one that had women connected with it. He just wouldn't stand for the skirts, and his favorite pony, Limbo, was just like him in this respect.

Ed Beverstock, owner of the Walkin' Stick, had been married just a year. His wife had been to school back east and liked to put it on strong. She brought a cook with her, and us boys was so tired of batchin' that we welcomed her right now.

When summer came Mrs. Ed takes up a notion to have a big house party. So she invites a crowd out from town and also Mr. Lawson, the rich, unmarried owner of the D Blanks, a neighborin' ranch. Ed tells us boys he has hired a band of three pieces at $25 a day to play for the dancin'.

"You fellers have at it," he says. "Your pay goes on just the same, but you are paid to show the company a good time."

The evenin' before the bunch arrived the wind stopped blowin', and so naturally the windmills stopped pumpin'. No matter how many fiestas are in progress, cattle still want to drink water.

"This is too bad," Ed says, "but you fellers can take turns runnin' the engine so none of you will miss much of the fun."

"No need of that," says Chris. "I'll run the engine night and day. This is where I slough."

The whole house party centered around Delia Dumont, a schoolmate of Mrs. Ed's, who had never been in the west before. She seemed powerful pleased with our way of doin' things.

By the first evenin' they all got on to Chris not likin' the girls, and every female in the bunch begins to make a smoke at him. They nearly badgered him to death, but timidity ain't a failin' with Chris, and he held his own.

The second mornin' several couples of us have just come in from a ride and are loungin' on the front gallery, with our saddles on the fence, where we've left 'em.

Chris rides up in a gallop on Limbo and throws the bridle over his pony's head and makes for the dog house, which is our name for the bunk house in this country. He never looks at us, but runs in for a pair of pliers to fix somethin' about the engine.

Dee Dumont runs out to Limbo, intendin' to put her saddle on him for fun and show us a stunt, though nobody knew her intention.

Dee don't know about western saddles, so she starts to pull this one off, and, it bein' strapped to Limbo, he begins to kick, and Dee trips over a root and falls. In a second or two Limbo has made some bad dents in $75 of Bill Christy's increment invested in that hand carved saddle. We all run to Dee, but Chris beats us.

He helps her up without even askin' if she's hurt and then calls Limbo some awful hard names, tellin' him to come there.

"I'm so sorry about your saddle, Mr. Christy," says Dee. "I was just seized with a wild desire to ride your pretty pony. I do hope you'll forgive me. It was all my fault."

"Limbo won't stand for women," he says and rides off.

The last night of the house party the wind began to blow so the engine wasn't needed.

Ed Beverstock looked up his engineerman.

"Step to it tonight, Chris," he says. "It's your last chance, and the ladies are all anxious to dance with you."

There wasn't any gettin' around it, so Chris washed up and put on his serge clothes and a soft white shirt and a dark blue strip of tie down the front.

"Wonder if he dances as well as he looks," says Miss Hubbard, the schoolteacher from Headwater.

"Divinely," says Mrs. Ed. "I don't know what might have happened if I'd seen him before I saw my husband."

"Nothin', believe me!" says Dee Dumont, and they all laugh.

Dee had been the life of the crowd all week, teachin' us turkey trots and aviation glides and learnin' our fancy stunts like "Put Your Little Foot" and "Comin' Thro' the Rye," that was so old they was new to her.

I had just had a twostep with her and kept sayin' to myself that tomorrow was the last, and I was half glad.

Dee makes for the back door of the big, broad hall, where Chris is smokin' and chattin' the musicians. I'm trailin' along after her, and Lawson saunters up just as we do.

Chris has been dancin' every time, but has never got around to Dee.

"Mr. Christy," says Dee, "if they'll play for us I'll teach you the turkey trot next time." And she smiles at him and the musicians too.

"Thanks," says Chris, throwin' away his cigarette, "but I've got this number. Try me again."

She turns away to hide the way her lips is quiverin'.

Lawson steps up.

"Miss Dumont," he says, "may I have the honor?"

I was glad he accented honor. I liked him better than I did Chris right then.

But don't you know before the dance broke up Chris asked her to waltz with him, and she did.

I tell the whole outfit goodby at breakfast the next mornin' and make a sneak. You know how it is the day after. I was sleepy, and we was goin' to round up and brand the next week. Some of the boys had to drive the visitors and musicians to the railroad; others helped to clean up at the house.

Chris had been down tinkerin' with the engine since before day. I intended to help him, but when I got down to the tank he was inside the shack and didn't see me. He had an old cot out at one side of the engine house screened by a clump of mesquite. I dropped down on it.

I could see a blur of green made by the Bermuda grass on the bank of the tank and the droopin' willows that bend to the water's edge. There was no sound but the creak of the windmills and an occasional unpretty word that Chris let go at the engine he was tryin' to fix. The ranch house was a quarter of a mile away, so I was surprised to see through my half closed eyes a white spot against the green.

This kinder woke me up, and at the same time Chris said an awful word and hurled his monkey wrench through the door of the engine house.

There was a big splash and a little scream. Chris come runnin' out on the bank.

"Did it strike you?" he says, with more excitement in his voice than I had ever heard before.

"No," says Miss Delia Dumont, holdin' her handkerchief to her face, "it only splashed mud and slime on my clean white linen. And I suppose the curl has all come out of my hair and my face is wet and dirty. No, it didn't strike me," she repeats. "Aren't you sorry that it didn't?"

"Why, no," says Chris, and there was laughter in his voice now. "Why should I want to hurt you?"

"Because," she says, "that seems to have been your sole aim in life durin' the last week—that, and makin' me ridiculous. I want you to know that I have not forgotten your failure to accept my apology when I tried to remove your saddle and got it all scarred up. I shall never forget your rudeness when I asked you to dance with me."

"I couldn't stand my partner up, could I?" asks Chris, innocent. "I asked you to try me again," he says. "And, besides, Lawson was there. He's one of your gallant scouts."

"Yes, he is," she says, "but I sacrificed his friendship in dancin' with you afterward. He said if I had had one ounce of independence I would not have done it."—

"Well, I don't know that you would," says Chris, thoughtful.

At that she boiled over.

"You brute!" she says quick and furious. "You are the most insultin' man I've ever known. All the rest have seemed to want to please me. I'll tell you why I danced with you, though I scorned to tell Lawson. It was because Eve asked me to overlook your —peculiarities."

The way she said that last word made old Chris wince a little.

"She told me you practically owned this ranch and had been backin' Ed all this time; that without your money it could not run. She is afraid to cross you, but I'm not. Because you are good lookin' and conceited you believe all women are attracted to you."

"And now you've told me what I am and what I think," says Chris, cool and calm, "maybe you'll tell me how you happened to come down to the engine house this mornin'."

"I was leavin' today," she says, "and I could not go until I had seen you. I wanted to tell you that if this was my ranch you shouldn't stay on it a day; no, not an hour. I hate you. I loathe and detest you! You dog!"

But before she got the last word out he had her in his arms. He kept pushin' back the little curl that falls against her face and kissin' the spot beneath it.

"Why, you little cat!" he says delighted. "You have got a temper. Thank goodness you are not one of the spineless kind. This is all you lacked to make you perfect in my sight. I'd begun to despair of your havin' any spirit. I'd almost made up my mind I'd have to lose you, but now —now! Why, it's my ranch," he says, "and you shall stay on it—always!"

She was struggin' hard to git away from him.

"You beauty!" he says, low and caressin'. "You darlin'! My, how I can love you!"

He kept holdin' her that way and kissin' her face and hair because she would not give him her lips.

"Stop!" she says at last. "Stop holdin' my arms this minute!"

There was somethin' in her tone that made him let her go and step back a little. I expect he thought she was goin' to slap his face—I did.

I'm goin' to tell you what she done.

She puts her arms around his neck and holds up her lips to be kissed.

I hear him draw a sharp breath.

"You old dog!" she says when he gives her a chance to speak.

Funny what a difference that word "old" made!

A Miser's Money

And How It Was Turned to a Useful Purpose

By ESTHER VANDEVEER

John Borlan was a country boy who had gone to the city to make his fortune. He had parted, the night before leaving home, with Mabel Burroughs at the gate of her father's home, both pledging themselves to be true to each other till John's return, when he had become successful, and they would be married.

Mabel was a practical girl. She had known of other young men going to the city to make their fortunes, some of whom had come back threadbare and hungry and some remained away, but she had never heard of any of them making fortunes. One had been crushed under the wheels of the juggernaut car that rolls over those who fail in the struggle in a great city. While John was picturing to her how he would work early and late, saving all he made except for a bare living, she listened doubtingly.

"Anyway, Johnny, whether you come back rich or poor, you'll find me here waiting for you, and I'll welcome you just as heartily if you are poor as if you are rich. But against one thing let me caution you. If you find that the battle is going against you come back. Don't stay in the city to be crushed."

John promised, and with a long embrace they parted.

When John rolled on the raised tracks through the outskirts of the city and saw the miles and miles of houses, the throngs, the traffic, his heart sank within him. But he repressed the feeling of despondency, gritted his teeth and resolved that he would succeed. He had read the story of Whittington, who went to London a poor boy, became discouraged at the sight of the great city in the distance and resolved to go back to his home. But he heard the bells ringing, and they seemed to say, "Turn again, Whittington, lord mayor of London." He entered the city and became enormously rich.

This story, familiar to many a schoolboy, came back to John Borlan and gave him courage. When he alighted from the train he felt strong enough to breast the tide that seemed rising to oppose him.

The game of life is similar to a game of cards. If we have good cards, which is the same as having good luck, we win. A few there are with such aptitude for the game that they may win with poor cards; but, generally speaking, poor cards mean the loss of the game. In other words, success comes with opportunity.

John Borlan found one bit of opportunity in the city or, what is the same thing, a bit of luck. But this did not come to him for several years after he had entered the fray there. On his arrival he spent a month looking for a job and just as his money ran out found one in running an elevator. A gentleman whose business was in the building took a fancy to him and gave him a subordinate position. But this man failed, and John was thrown out. Again he walked the streets hunting a job.

John's hardships are not interesting, and I will pass over them for his opportunity. After drifting a long while, sometimes earning a few dollars a week and sometimes hungry for food, when in the latter condition he remembered his promise to Mabel that if he found the battle going against him he would go back to the country. At the time of his arrival he had put away enough to pay his fare on the train, but he had spent it for sustenance. He had no money to take him home, but he resolved to keep his promise and would set out the next morning to tramp the distance.

To one person in the metropolis he resolved to say goodby. That was the man who had given him a position when he was running an elevator. On his way to this friend he saw at his feet on the sidewalk a pocketbook. He picked it up. It was rectangular in form, about six inches long by three wide, just large enough to hold a bank bill not folded. Opening it, he found a number of such bills inside. He closed the pocketbook without counting them and looked about to see if any eye was upon him. Since no one seemed to be observing him he thrust his find into his pocket, for he desired to have time to think over what he should do in the premises. Finding a place where he would be alone he counted the money he had found. There was $354.

Johnny was one of those men who cannot bring themselves to appropriate anything belonging to another. Besides, he had the sense to discover that anything so appropriated would do him no good and might do him harm. He certainly could not return to Mabel without an effort to find the owner of this money for she would condemn him if he did. He knew that the owner would advertise the loss of his property, and it was his duty to look for such advertisement.

The next morning he went to a newspaper stand kept by a man he knew and received permission to examine the principal journals. He found a notice of the loss just the other of half the contents for the return of the pocketbook at a given location.

Johnny went to the place named and found a seedy looking man who proved to him that he was the owner of the pocketbook by giving the exact number of bills it contained. John was about to extract the reward when the owner said to him:

"There were certain vouchers in the pocketbook which are more valuable to me than money. Are they with the bills?"

"There are no vouchers and were none when I found the pocketbook," was John's reply.

The man began to storm at John, calling him a thief, and while doing so attempted to snatch the pocketbook. John resisted, and a scuffle ensued. Tenants in rooms adjoining came in and, seeing what was taking place, called the police, and the two opponents were arrested and taken to a station.

When the case came up for examination the justice directed that the owner of the property in question bring suit against John for the recovery of his property. This having been done, the justice assigned John counsel, and the case of Hargrave versus Borlan was tried at once.

Hargrave told how he had lost his pocketbook. He had been walking the street when he was jostled by some men. He shouted for the police, and the men ran. On reaching home he discovered his loss. He supposed that the robbers had dropped the pocketbook in their flight.

John's counsel, a lawyer named Dexter, advised his client to summon as many persons as possible who knew him to testify to his honesty. This was done, and quite a number were present. After taking their testimony Dexter called Hargrave to the stand.

"Why did you not mention in your advertisement," asked the lawyer, "the vouchers you claim were in the pocketbook?"

"Because they were not money and of no value to any one but me."

"What was the nature of the vouchers?"

The witness hesitated, then claimed that they were receipted bills for money expended.

Before the case went to the jury Dexter claimed that he had proved John's good character and that there was neither any evidence that he had stolen the vouchers nor any necessity for such evidence, because if he had been a thief he would have taken the money and left the vouchers instead of taking the vouchers and leaving the money. He also claimed that his client had a cause of action against Hargrave for slander and that the evidence had shown the plaintiff to be a miser. To this the judge added instructions that were favorable to the defendant.

When the verdict was brought in the foreman said that the jury had found for the defendant. Since the pocketbook contained other articles than had been mentioned by the advertiser, it could not be the one for which he had advertised. Therefore the property belonged to the defendant until a claimant for it could prove that it was his.

Before John and his counsel had left the court Hargrave's counsel came to John and offered, on behalf of his client, all the money that was in it and $100 for the book. Dexter at once became suspicious and made an examination of the pocketbook. One side being remarkable for its thickness, he inserted his knife between it and the lining and took out seven $1,000 bills.

He at once called his client to him for a private conference and showed him the find. John was astonished, but he had decided to return both the money he had found and the pocketbook to Hargrave, to whom he believed it rightfully belonged. He now took the same ground with respect to the concealed bills.

"You will do no such thing," said the lawyer. "I am acting in your interest, and it is my business to protect you in your rights. The miser tried to beat you out of the reward offered and accused you of being a thief. Leave the matter to me and I will make an equitable settlement for you."

John finally consented to abide by whatever his counsel did in the matter, and after a long conference with Hargrave's attorney John's lawyer announced that a compromise had been effected by which one-half of all the contents should go to John and the rest to Hargrave, this being the reward offered in the advertisement for the property.

"And now, young man," added Dexter, "I would advise you to take the money that has come to you and go back to the country. You are not fitted to make your way in the city. There is plenty of honesty here, but there is a lot of sharp practice. You would be better where you were born and raised. If you remain here this money will soon slip through your fingers."

When John asked his lawyer for his bill for legal services he was surprised at the modest charge of $10.

John returned to the country with his capital and found Mabel waiting for him. Notwithstanding his lawyer's opinion she did not like to have him take money that he had found. After much conferepce they decided to use it for a starter and if they succeeded in rolling up a snowball to resign it. John bought a farm. They were married and prospered. At the end of five years they inquired for the miser from whom it had been derived and, finding that he had died, gave the funds to charity.

It was thus that John Borlan found his opportunity. But he never referred to it with pleasure and felt relieved when he turned it over to those who he considered had a better right to it than himself. To this his friends assert that Providence designed him as an agent to turn it into a useful channel.

DRUDGERY.

We may set it down as a great truth that the sense of monotony and drudgery in our work generally shows that we have come to put our emphasis in the wrong place; that we have become concerned more in getting our work done and off our hands than in the way we are doing it. Change the emphasis to the latter and the situation will be mastered, the sense of drudgery will vanish, and the life and the work will have another aspect.—Simons.

You Have Only One Chance When You Hold a Sale of Merchandise

YOU STAKE ALL on the FORTUNES of ONE DAY or MORE

How very important it is, then that you do everything possible to insure in advance success. No reasonable expense should be spared Upon whether or not you have a crowd depends several hundreds dollars' difference in your receipts.

Do Not Try to Have a Sale Without the Help of The Fulton Evening Times

These Are the Reasons Why:

The Poster reaches at most only a few hundred people: The Evening Times is read each evening by approximately, 10,000 people.

The Poster is seen only by people when they are away from home. The Times goes into people's homes and finds them.

The Poster must be tacked up and distributed—a day or two of hard work for a man with a rig. The Times distributes the same information at every home in the city.

The Poster is not seen in bad weather, because people stay at home. That is just the time The Evening Times is read most carefully.

Under some circumstances it is advisable to have bills, but under all circumstances you should have advertising in The Evening Times. It is the advertising that does the business—every merchant will tell you so.

Civil Service Commissioner Rice Leads in Faculty of Sewing Expense

By FREDERIC T. CARDOZE

Albany, Feb. 10.—Office seekers in search of lucrative State places which are not fenced in by barb-wire civil service regulations, will doubtless discover that the new civil service commission is to be less lenient than the old.

For the first time in the recollection of the employes of the civil service department a commissioner has settled down as a regular visitor at the office. Every morning he is the first to arrive and every evening the last to leave. The energetic commissioner is William Goreham Rice, Democratic member. The fact that he is a resident of Albany and resides within two blocks of the Capitol makes his daily visits convenient. Being a man of considerable means he is so situated that he can devote the major portion of hi stime to the requirements of his office, which he does.

Not since the early "eighties" has there been a State civil service commissioner from the city of Albany. Then George H. Thatcher and James H. Manning served. Neither, however, attempted to vie with the employees from the standpoint of punctuality or application to duty upon such an extended scale as is the apparent policy of Commissioner Rice.

Shortly after his appointment and confirmation by the Senate, Commissioner Rice was ready for all comers. Without notice a handsome desk was carried into the main office of the civil service commission by four stalwart and muscular porters and deposted in the most desirable portion of the room. The desk was a capacious one containing many pidgeon holes—of a nature capable of holding innumerable applications for snap places should such applications be thus relegated.

When Secretary John C. Birdseye was congratulated upon having secured new furniture he shook his head and denied that the desk was for him. The truth of his statement was exemplified when early the next morning Commissioner Rice briskly made his appearance before the clock had struck nine and sank down in the yawning chair to attack the documents which he carried.

Commissioner Rice intends that nothing shall go on in the civil service department unless he knows of it. He has taken personal charge of the office. While the interest he takes in his new duties is generally favorably commented upon he nevertheless has come in for not a little notoriety because of the precedent he has established. Already he has started on to save money for his department, havselected the paper for the commission which is to cost considerably less than that used by the Democratic commissoin.

Commissioner Rice has a fine grasp upon State affairs. As secretary to the late Governor B. Hill he learned many things about the many departments which he will now turn to good account.

That there is going to be numerous reforms in civil service circles has been promised by Gevernor Whitman and the new commissoin as well. At the present time the three commissioners are going over the proceedings of their predecessors with exceeding care.

Already complaints have been filed with Governor Whitman's commission as to the methods employed by the Glynn commission in conducting competitive examinations. Favoritism in preparing papers, and questions so that certain candidates might be given an advantage, is claimed in one of the complaints which the new commission is carefully investigating.

CARNEGIE ALASKA-SIBERIA MOTION PICTURE

Lovers of nature study and animals will have in inning at the Quirk Thurs day Feb. 11, when the illustrated reports of the Carnegie Museum Alaska-Siberia expedition will be given by means of the motion pictures taken by Capt. Kleinschmidt throughout the cruise. Arctic monsters of land and sea, mighty glaciers moving majestically down the mountain sides, icebergs in formation and afloat, and the wild life of the frigid north are shown in all phases.

Herds of seal on rock bound rookeries, polar bears swimming and diving, hordes of walrus, moose and caribou in their native haunts, sheep on their snowclad fastness, and enormous colonies of Arctic birds, native sports and afield, hunting the big game animals which provide their every need of subsistence. Comedy is furnished throughout the family life of the creatures, particularly the readiness of huge animals, such as the bear, to correct their offspring, by the old-fashioned method of spanking. Excitement is provided by the films that show the chase and capture of the polar bear and the giant walrus by means of the lasso, and seal, moose and mountain sheep hunts in all their details.

The pictures have been exhibited before the American Museum of Natural history in New York and the Carnegie Museum of Pittsburg, where they received the unqualified endorsement of prominent naturalists and educators. They were then placed on view before the general public as a theatrical attraction, and enjoyed a brilliant eight weeks' engagement at the Maxine Elliott and Broadway theatres, New York City and the Savoy theatre, San Francisco, and Mort Singer's Palace theatre, Chicago.

An explanatory lecture by T. D. Jackman, who was a member of the expedition.

LUCKY CARRIERS

If you go into the Post Office don't mention bowling to any of the clerks or carriers. The squad representing the local office and comprising Mentro, Lloyd, Grant, Cook and Newcomb, opposed the Fulton Post Office bowling team on the Onyx alleys in Fulton last evening. Although the locals dropped three straight to the Fultonians they have no fault to find with their treatment. They were escorted to the Elks' Club by a committee and there were served with an elaborate supper, cigars, etc., a gift of Postmaster Connolly, of Fulton. At the alleys the locals found a large crowd of Fulton rooters on hand. Everything had moved nicely up to this time, but at the opening of the match the trouble started and all friendship ceased when the Fultonians got their eye on the head pin. Ernest Mentro, manager of the locals, stated this morning that the Fulton bunch were getting strikes by nailing numbers seven and ten. Gutter balls and fouls were common in the Oswego ranks and at the end of the match Captain Newcomb, of Oswego, ordered the score sheet destroyed.

Plans are being formulated at the local office for a banquet to be tendered the Fulton carriers within the next two weeks.

GERMAN SHELLS FIRED SOISSONS; A TARGET

By Franklin P. Merrick.

Paris, Feb. 10.—A slight gain for the British northeast of Ypres, in West Flanders, is reported in a dispatch from St. Omer which says: "It had become necessary for the British to evacuate some of their trenches because they had become so foul and unsanitary that they were untenable. Details of troops, armed with picks and shovels, were sent forwrd at night and a new line of works was begun a little in advance of the old ones. Although the troops were fired upon by the Germans the darkness prevented accurate firing. The next night the works were completed and they were occupied under the fire of the German artillery. It was exciting and dangerous work but the British soldiers threw themselves into the task with the hearty enthusiasm which has marked all their labors."

Numerous artillery duels were reported all along the line. It is now learned that the massing of fresh French reserves around Soissons was responsible for the bombardment of that city by the Germans on the Aisne. German aerial scouts reported the French troop movements and soon the Kaisers' artillery was throwing shells not only into Soissons, but on both sides and behind the town. At one time Soissons was on fire and the dense clouds of black smoke which rolled heavenward gave the Germans a good target.

In the Argonne and in the district northeast of Amiens German attacks of more or less intensity took place. A deadlock seems to have developed for the time being in front of Muelhausen, in Upper Alsace.

Belgian refugess in northern France give a gloomy picture of conditions in Belgium. Before the war Termonde and St. Gilles had a combined population of 16,000. Now about 7000 persons remain in these Belgian towns. Less than 10 per cent of the houses in Termonde are standing. Real famine is raging and thousands of cases of serious illness are unattended because there are no doctors left.

BONI'S SUIT REJECTED

Paris, Feb. 10.—Following the delivery of arguments in the third trial, the Rota Tribunal of the Roman Catholic church, has rejected Count Boni de Castellan's suit for the annulment of his marriage to Anna Gould, now Duchess De Tallyrand, according to a private dispatch from Rome today. This litigation has been before the Vatican court for several years.

INSPECTION DESIRED

Judge Ray insists that before an offer of $500 for the claim of $79,000 of the Hunter Arms Company against the Sleeper Ranch Company of Wyoming, is considered in any way, some one interested in the arms company must go to Wyoming and make an investigation of the value of the property and the maunt which would be likely to be realized on the claim if it were prosecuted.

WOULD GO BILLY SUNDAY ONE BETTER

The late celebrated Peter Vinegar, who in days gone by used to make periodical visits to Danville, says the Advocate, for the purpose of delivering his sermons, remarkable on account of their startling texts, on one occasion spoke to a large assemblage of the colored population and a few whites at the old colored Methodist church on Walnut street. He arose, raised his spectacles from his eyes, and said:

"My beloved brederen and sisteren, I take my tex' dis evenin' in dat portion uv de Scriptur' whar de 'Postle Paul pints his pistol at de 'Phesians, an' whar it says, 'Whar de hen scratches dar's de worm, 'ceptin' de case whar sum previus hen hav bin dar.'" He then proceeded to tell his hearers what a horrible personal appearance the devil presented, with the following description: "His eyes look like two balls uv fire, his teef like two skinned saplins, his ears hang down like a 'baccer leaf an' his bref smoke like a tar kittle." That night Peter made many coaverts.

VON BUELOW TAKES COMMAND; MAY CUT HIS WAY TO COAST

Kaiser Making Ready for Change of Commanders, Is a Danish Newspaper Report

By Franklin P. Merrick.

Paris, Feb. 11.—Another furious effort of the Germans to break through the Anglo-French lines near La Basse, in France, is expected. French aerial scouts report a movement of part of the armies of Grand Duke Albrecht of Wuerttemburg and Field Marshal Von Buelow to strenghten the German front between Bethune and Arras. Although it has generally been supposed that the Grown Prince Rupprecht of Bavaria has been in command of the Kaiser's forces which have been delivecing smashing attacks against the British North and South of the La Basse canal.

It is now reported that Field Marshall Von Buelow has been put in command of the operations in that region. If this is true it means that the important task of piercing the allies' line east of Amiens has been entrusted to VonBuelow, the onlyy German general in the western theatre of war to be elevated to the rank of field marshal since the war began. It is evident that the Germans have not given up the idea of cutting through to the English Channel through Amiens or Arras in order to cut off the French, British and Belgian forces operating east of Calais and in West Flanders.

Official dispatches report a renewal of fighting in the woods around Bagatelle in the Argonne region. It is also stated that the Germans holding the line near Manonville, in Lorraine, have been compelled to flia back. In the Vosges attacks by the German landwehr were checked by the heavy artillery fire of the French.

The artillery duelling in Belgian continues without interruption. The Belgian troops holding a position among the dunes on the North sea coast have been violently shelled.

President Poincare of France has arrived at the front. Before his return he will confer decorations upon a number of French officers and privates who have won distinction through bravery in the recent fighting.

German prisoners, takein in the Aisne valley, report that the rations of the German troops have been cut down.

VON MOLTKE TO COMMAND THE EASTERN FRONT

Copenhagen, Feb. 11.—Close observers of conditions in Germany asserted today that the hurried return of Emperor William from the Eastern front and his conference with General VonMoltke and other army leaders in Berlin indicated that he was dissatisfied with his army's efforts.

They predicted another shake up in the army by which General Von Moltke would become chief of the general staff and General Von Falkenhayn would return to his work at the war office. They say the fact that General Valkenhayn was not present at the conferences held by the Emporer last night is most significant. General Von Moltke has now completely recovered from his attack of illness.

The Danish newspapers describe Emperor William's conferences in Berlin last night as "a hasty council of war to diseuss ac ritical situation." The National Tidende's Berlin correspondent hints thta the German capital is being kept ignorant of the fearful slaughter in the Eastern theatre and declares that the mysterious silence there forebodes great events which may change the course of the war.

"Because of the strictness of the censorship I cannot do more than indicate the expected happenings," he concludes.

BERLIN REPORTS IT IS SATISFIED WITH STATUS

By FREDERICK WERNER.

Berlin, via Amsterdam, Feb. 11.—Emperor William held a series of important conferences last night at the Imperial palace during which important phases of the military and internal situation were discussed. The Emperor informed his visitors that he was thoroughly satisfied with conditions as he found them on his tour of inspection in the eastern war theatre and is said to have predicted a complete triumph for the German troops over the Russians.

Among those who conferred with the Emperor were Gen. Von Moltke, former head of the general staff. He discussed the military situation with these officers thoroughly and later received the ministers of commerce and finance.

After the conference ended, the officials were entertained at dinner by the Kaiser and Kaiserin in celebration of the anniversary of the Emperor's becoming honorary colonel of the First guards regiment.

LONDON SAYS U. S. NOTE ALLAYS ALL APPREHENSION

London, Feb. 11.—The British Foreign Office today received from the U. S. Government a note of inquiry relative to the use of flags on English ships.

While the Government declines to give it out until Washington says so, it is said thatthe note is of a friendly nature and will cause no complications. An answer setting forth the position of Great Britain will be sent as soon as possible. The Government understands that a note has also been ent from Wahington to Berlin asking what methods the German Government will use in carrying out its proclamation of a war zone in British waters.

AFTER 80 HOURS FIGHT IS A DRAW

One Hundred Twenty Thousand Men Surge Along Ten Mile Front in Mountain

Petrograd, Feb. 11.—Despite their terrific losses in the battle of Koziowa, the German and Austrians are continuing their attacks upon the Russian positions there. The conflict has now been in progess for eighty hours and no decision has been reached. Despatches from Lemburg declare that the ferocity of the German assaults exceeds even that shown in the battle of Borjimow.

Thus far the Russians have succeeded in maintaining their hold upon the heigths of Koziowa, which are the key to possession of Tucholka Pass. In bringing up the ir fresh troops the Germans and Austrians are subjected to a heavy cross fire that results in terrible losses.

Because of this the chief movements of the Teutonic troops are made at night. To balk the efforts of the German and Austrian troops to bring up superior forces under cover of darkness, the Russians keep great bonfires burning all night. In the dim light afforded by these fires the bayonet ghts are of constant occurrence, the Russians charging their foes with sold steel as soon as they appear.

The use of bonfires by the Russians resulted in a clever counter-scheme on the part of the Germans. The latter sent out a number of aeroplanes on Monday to drop bombs upon these fires and they succeeded in scattering a number of the blazes. Learning from this experiment, the Russians the next day mounted guns near each fire and when the aviators again appeared they were met with a fire that compelled them to rise high in the air, when they were unable to drop bombs with any accuracy.

While the popular interest centers in the Carparthian campaign, the military experts here are closely watching the situation in East Russian, where the Germans and Russians are now locked in battel over a front of fifty miles stretching southward from the Memel river.

According to the expert of the Bourse Gazette, more than 120,00 men are engaged in this conflict, which may be called the "Battle of Three Rivers," it is being fought on the banks of the Memel, Inster and Schechuppe rivers. The heaviest fighting is now in the district about Lasdehnen.

This town is now held by the Russians, but the German front is in the form of a half circle west of Lasdehnen. On the plain between the Memel and the Schechuppe the Germans have dug nine lines of trenches that can be taken by assault only with heavy losses.

LATE WAR BULLETINS

London, Feb. 11.—The possibility of a British blockade of the German oast coast was voiced to the House of Commons by Premier Asquith today. The Premier said that the British Government is considering thatt "this measure will paralyze the small remnant of German trade as the result of the flagrant breaches of the rules of international warfare by Gefman." The Premier was questioned upon the matter of contraband and, in reply revealed the fact that the Government has under consideration measures retaliatory measures against ermany.

NO COMPROMISE, SAYS PRESIDENT

But the Senators Hope for Such Action, As the Democrats Have Given Up Hope of Putting Nation in Shipping Business

President Wilson will stand pat on the Ship Purchase bill, it was announced at the White House today. No compromise will be accepted, and the Gore Bill as it now stands will be adhered to bythe Administration until the end. If necessary, the President will bo before the country on the measure. If this measure is defeated at the present session of the Senate, an extra session will probably be called to pass it. Action in the House is beconsidered now as the result of the conference held by President Wilson today, with Senators Fletcher and Simons and Representative Kitchen, joint leader of the House.....

Washington, Feb. 11.—Most of the members of the Senate slept late today to make up for the slumber lost in the record-breaking session precipitated by the filibuster on the administration's ship purchase bill. Leaders in the opposing camps were up and about early, however, laying their plans for a renewal of the fight that terminated when an adjournment was forced last evening by an alliance of the Republicans and Democratic insurgents.

Conferences were held before the Senate was again called to order. These were held in secret by those participatin in them, but opponents of the measure that had held the Senate in a continuous session of 54 hours and 10 minutes declared that the administration forces would have to ocmpromise. No sign of surrender came from the White House in the early morning however.

The fate of the President's measure to put the United States government in the shipping business was more uncertain than ever when the Senate assembled. With the return of Senators Norris and Kenyon, Progressive Republicans to the side of the allies, the administration's Democrats now able to muster only 46 votes to 48 for their opponents. It was this vote that forced adjournment, and made an extra session of Congress after March 4 practically certain, the leaders of both houses concede.

It was the plan of the Democratic chiefs today to press Senator Fletcher's motion to recommit the bill with the instructions for its amendment to satisfy the Progressive Republicans. But with Senators Norris and Kenyon convinced that further efforts to pass a shipping bill this session are futile, the bills opponents declared that this motion would be defeated and that Senator Clark's suggestion to refer back the bill without instructions would eventually prevail. Senator Fletcher, in charge of the bill, conceded that it could not be sent back with instructions. There was some talk or trying to get the Gore bill out of committee, but Republicans promptly served notice that the filibuster would be renewed against this.

Senator Hardwick, one of the bolting Democrats, suggested a party conference to try to reach a compromise and prospects were that this course would be followed.

2450 YEARS LOST BY LABOR IN '14

Strikes and Lockouts Cost Working Men of This State Nearly 1,000,000 Days

Albany, Feb. 11.—Twenty-four and a half centuries is the aggregate of time lost by workmen through industrial disputes in New York state in 1914, but tremendous as this total is it is but a trifle more than ten per cent. of the previous year's aggregate. These figures will be shown in the forthcoming annual report of State Labor Commissioner James H. Lynch in connection with the work done by the labor department's bureau of mediation and arbitration.

The years of 1913 and 1914 show a striking contrast in the amount of labor disputes in the State, according to Commissioner Lynch's report. While 1913 with the unusually large number of 268 strikes and lockouts broke all records as to the number of workmen involved and the time lost, 1914 produced less than half as many strikes and lockouts with the number of workers participating was about one fifth of the previous year and the time lost was 889,087 days as compared with 7,741,247 for the ear 1913. Last year's strikes and lockouts numbered 125. There were 36 strikes that were successful, 38 that were partially successful and 49 that were lost.

Lower Rates to the Pacific

Washington, Feb. 11.—Because of competition through the Panama canal, transcontinental railroads today were permitted by the Interstate Commerce Commission to charge lower rates from Eastern points to Pacific coast terminals than to intermediate points. With a few specific exceptions the decision permits a reduction in the long haul rates.

The decision was in what was known as the Intermountain rate case and was regarded as second in importance only to the 5 per cent. case.

MASSARO BUYS TRUE MILL

The Macaroni Industry; Quarters to be Enlarged; Bridge May Join Buildings

The Oswego River Mills, for many years occupied by the True Brothers, in the manufacture of flour, has been purchased by the Peter Massaro Co.

The building has four floors and basement, and the dimensions are 80x45 feet. This will give Mr. Massaro an additional 18,000 more feet of floor space.

Owing to the European war, it is impossible to import macaroni from Italy, and the demand for the food in the United States is increasing daily.

The Massaro Co. is at present enlarging the Wall st. plant now used for the manufacture of the food, and as soon as machinery can be installed and repairs made in the mill building just purchased, the macaroni making will jump by leaps and bounds, or until the output reaches three times that of the present.

The True mill building was used as a warehouse in the balmy days of the Oswego canal, and was built by J. J. Walcott.

About 45 years ago it was converted into a flour mill by the Gilbert Bros., and since that time the mill has been enlarged.

A bill has passed the Legislature giving the muncipalaties the first right to bid in on canal property not occupied by the Barge canal.

Another bill, however, is now before the Legislature giving this privilege to the adjoining property owners. Should this bill become a law there is no reason why the Massaro Company could not build a bridge across the old Oswego canal and join together the old macaroni plant with the True mill.

A Proposed Bird Refuge

The proposal to make a game and bird refuge of Nine Mile Swamp near Watervilie is a good one. There should be such refuges all over the State and all over the nation. Refuges are a simple and cheap method of propagating game and useful insect-eating birds. They are more important than game farms and far cheaper to maintain. A game refuge needs no superintendent and employs no keepers. It requires little more than the watchfulness of an efficient game protector. An unhunted patch of wood soon teems with game which spreads to other patches of woods, and there hunters may kill if they must.

The greatest use of a refuge, however, is the shelter and protection it affords to insectiverous birds. It is now a well settled belief that birds do an immense amount of good in keeping down insect life which otherwise would do untold damage to crops. But birds maintain a balance of nature. Patches of woods where the birds may nest undisturbed at any time of the year are very useful in maintaining bird life.—Utica Observer.

A Senator's Speech

By casually looking through Senator Gallinger's filibuster speech against the shipping bill ,one observes that he made such bright arguments as follows against the measure: "Senate bill 3739 passed the Senate July 12, 1890. * * * The persuasive argument made by the senior Senator from New York might well have concluded this discussion. * * * Never in the history of the world has there been an organization or any body of men so weary, worn and completely spent as this present Congress of ours. * * * I read the following newspaper article * * * There are two bills dear to the Democratic heart. * * * I now read three columns of an argument against government ownership of telephones and telegraphs." Senator Gallinger followed by reading a report of the Chamber o: Commerce and some editorials from newspapers. Some one suggested an absence of a quorum,and while the roll call was being taken of the 67 Senators present, Senator Callinger had time to catch his breath. Then he continued for some hours more.

The speech is not remarkable for brevity, conciseness, continuity, adherence to theme, or for other rhetorical qualities. tI is, however, an example of long-windedness—an example of how the great Senate of the United States is carrying on its business.—The News.

MOTHERS' PENSION BILL

Judge Aaron J. Levy as head of the State Commission for the investigation of widowed mother's pensions, marshalled a strong force of supporters of such pensions before thhe Senate Judiciary committee and the Assembly Social Welfare committee at a hearing early in the week. It is believed the best features of the bill will be welded into one bill.

There has been no proposed bill for direct human welfare that has caused more discussion than the Mother's Pension Bill. The bill has met severe opposition. Advocates of the bills declared widow's pensions would not involve the state in any great outlay of money, for the funds now used in keeping children of widowed mothers in institutions could be turned over to the mothers and the families, and the families kept together. It was argued the breaking up of homes by placing children in institutions was one of the greatest causes of crime. Judge Levy claimed 55 per cent of the inmates of prisons were inmates of institutions when children.

There seems but "one fly in the ointment" in this case of working for the bill and that is the pity the mothers cannot raise their voices via ballot and make known what is their desire. This is the affair of mothers. Mothers should know best whether they wish to keep their children or to place them in institutions.

And yet there are at this age people who do not see that the ballot and the home have any relation.

THE GOVENOR'S STAND

Governor Whitman has let it be known that he has no intention of taking the back track on his proposal to remove from the Controller the power to levy corporation taxes and place it in the new Tax Department. That is one of the most important features of the Governor's tax reform bill. Lacking it the bill will be like "Hamlet" with Hamlet left out. It is, therefore, gratifying to have authoritative denial of the recent reports that the Governor and Controller Travis had compromised this question.

It is bad theory and worse practice to have the Controller's office levying taxes. That function of government belongs in whatever agency there is to handle tax matters; it does not belong in an office which is primarily and chiefly an auditor's bureau for the state. Transferring it would disturb job holders and the distribution of future patronage. That is a mighty slim reason for opposition. Yet it is the best and strongest which has appeared against the bill. It certainly should not prevail.—New York Tribune.

PLAY BALL

By I. E. Hyde

I said I was not counting foes,
By snubbing Sammy's baby's nose,
But, Gee! I've trod on daddy's toes
Right hard, I guess.

I'm sure that Fulton must be pleased
To find a Yankee can be teased
By a Canuck, because she breezed
A pun—no less.

I do perceive your wit is keen,
I wonder if you're fat or lean,
Do tell us if you're ever seen
A moon of cheese.

Poor Sammy's youngster;- did you bawl?
And did you hear dad's eagle squawl?
And did you see him slip and fall,
And hear him wheeze?

Now take your pen or pencil, son,
And give the press another pun
I'm sure you'd like to see me run
And H(y)de twice more.

But, Yankee courage is,—alright -
I will confess—for by this might
"When son gets pinched, then dad will fight"
O, Morey! ——"more."

THE QUIRK

The Alaska-Siberia Game Hunting motion pictures at The Quirk premier public presentation in this state of wild life of the Artic regions; the engagement will begin Thursday, Feb. 11.

This great set of films was secured by Capt. F. E. Kleinschmidt, commander of the expedition, during a long cruise throughout the ice locked coasts of the American and Asiatic Northland in quest of specimens and scientific data. It is a sensational presentment of polar bear, sea lion, walrus, seal, moose, caribou, mountain sheep, fox, Arctic birds, etc. In their native wilds their family and habits are shown in a series of stirring scenes from nature's great and everlasting drama. The intrusion of man in their vast solitudes resulted in hand to hand battles with the giant bear and tusked monsters of the deep, often with no other weapons save a lariat of hide, all of which are graphically recorded on the films.

Bears diving under icefloes and fighting with the pursuers, walrus battling to their death over possession of their homes, seals at play on their rookries, moose and caribou in large numbers, mountain sheep on their snowclad peaks, and myriads of birds on their icebound island homes; these and many similar subjects are depicted and fully described. The pictures received the unqualified endorsement of naturalists and educators when presented before the Carnegie Museum of Pittsburg and the American Museum of Natural History in New York City, and when placed on public view in one of New York's largest and most exclusive houses, The Broadway Theatre, crowded that playhouse during a two months' run which extended into the middle of the summer. Two hours of wholesome entertainment is furnished by the wonderful pictures. A complete two hour entertainment with a descriptive lecture devoid of technical terms is as interesting feature of every performance by T. D. Jackman, a member of the expedition.

GERMANS FEAR DUTCH ALLIANCE

Half Million German Troops Waiting to Invade English Soil

London, Feb. —.—Besides Rumania, Bulgaria, Greece and Italy, it is quite probable that Holland will enter the war soon. The Germans seem to have less doubts about the advent of the Netherlands and as combatant than the Allies. An American who has just arrived here after extended travels in Germany makes this clear.

The Kaiser has concentrated two full army corps near the German-Dutch border, he said, and many troops have been placed on Belgian-Dutch border. Defense works have also been erected in the latter region.

Germans realize that the open hostility of Holland would be a great blow to their cause. They believe the Allies have no chance to push them out of Belgium if Holland remains neutral, but both in Berlin and at the Hague, it is realized that a declaration of war would be a blow at the heart of Germany. It would imperil the rich Westphalian mining and industrial district.

The Dutch believe that if Germany wins this war the Netherlands will be part of Germany in all but name. Many argue that this reason should be strong enough to induce Holland to cast in her lot with the Allies. The entry of Rumania or Italy in the lists against the Teutonic nations would go a long way to bringing the Dutch too.

There are rumors in Germany, said this American, that an army of 250,000 is concentrated at Bremen waiting a favorable opportunity to invade England. He said:

"I visited much of the Rhine district, and at Cologne there are 100,000 troops concentrated, 40,000 at Duesseldorf, and 100,000 at Wesel Germany will have more than 2,000,000 men in the western area of war by spring. As for food, there is not the slightest indication of a shortage, and much laughter is caused among Germans by the phathetic accounts of their supposed sad plight, as related in the English press. German officials are well aware that British officials know Germany can hold out for two years or more.

FEDS WILL HIKE SOON TO CAMP

They Will Steal Some of Organized Base Ball Glory

New York, Feb. 11.—It seems just a day or two since we heard the echo of "Hank" Gowdy's home run smash in that world series battle, yet here we are right on the eve, as one might say, of the 1915 baseball season.

A week or ten days more and the advance guard of the players in the American, National and Federal leagues will be traveling southward for the purpose of working sundry kinks out of their systems. The main squads will be well along on their way before March 1st, in most cases. What's that? The "no training-before-March 1st," rule? Sure, there is such a rule. But rules, like eggs are made to be broken. Laws, like automobiles, can be dodged. And that's what the Organized Baseball folks are going to do.

The "no-training-before-March 1st" rule was adapted by the magnates last winter when they were all excited about that economy stuff. They were in a mode at that time where they would have hacked off a couple of their legs if someone had told that such an action would result in economy. This rule was adopted by the magnates as a means of saving in training camp bills.

The magnates thought by adopting the rule they had accomplished a needed reform. But the managers didn't. They yowled. Most of the managers said that March 1st wasn't early enough to begin training. Furthermore some one argued that if the American and National League clubs didn't go into training until after March 1st it would give the Feds a chance to grab a lot of early publicity by sending their teams south during February.

That the magnates took a tumble to themselves and word was passed along the line that "rules is rules" don't let rules stand in your way too much."

There is nothing in the wording of the new rule, as we interpret it, that bars a manager from sending his battery men to some place south of the Mason and Dixon line two weeks or so before March 1st, just so long as he doesn't send the men to the regular camp. Because there is no rule against this, it is a fairly safe wager that some of the pitchers and catchers will be working out in the south quite some time before March 1st.

Here are the places where the teams will train and the dates of their departure for the camps:

MOVIES AID PENSION BILL

Films Shown in Behalf of Mothers' Pension Bill; Speaker Pleaded

Albany, Feb. 11.—A dozen speakers aided by three thousand feet of motion picture film depicting the troubles of a family parted by poveryt, spoke in behalf of the mothers' pension bill before the Legislative Committee in the Assembly today. Three speakers appeared to oppose the bill.

The measure, drawn by Senator Mills and Assemblyman McCue, would grant to dependent, worthy widowed mothers the amount of money for the support of their children that it would cost to keep them in a public institution. A state board would pass on the merits of all applications. The chief argument advanced in its behalf is that the mother is better prepared for caring for her children than any institution.

"We must give aid to the poor," Robert W. Hebbard, secretary of the State Board of Charities, declared. "They cannot be relieved by our various charities. There must be created a system of taxation that will make the rich man, the stingy man, the careless man and the selfish man give equally with the others."

"But will a pension system not greatly increase the number of dependent mothers?" Senator Gilchrist, of Brooklyn, interrupted.

"It will cost no more under this bill than any community wants to pay," Hebbard explained. "Boards will pass on all calims. Furthermore, it should make no difference how much this relief will cost: If the people are worthy, they should have help."

Miss Sophie Irene Loeb, who was a member of the Levy commission, appointed in 1913 to investigate the mothers' pension situation in this and other countries, said she was first drawn into the work by learning that the state had provided care for a sick cow and its calf but not for an ill mother and her dependent children who owned the cow.

"We are trying to conserve the fish, the forest and the cattle, but we have yet to take the first step toward conserving the child," she said.

Fifty Per Cent. Children

Fifty per cent. of the cases attended by charitable institutions were those of children, she declared, and added that it would cost no more to give the relief through mothers than through institutions and better results would accrue. Miss Loeb accused persons who hold positions in charitable institutions of fighting the bill. In Westchester county alone, she said, there are 150 persons with the right to commit children to institutions.

"The reason we have so much opposition to this bill is that the charitable job is placed in jeopardy by it," she declared.

Dr. Abraham Korn and Charles W. Eidt, both representing New York taxpayers' associations, and William Brown, representing a part of the United Real Estate Owners of New York city spoke against the bill. They insisted that passage of the bill would mean an increase in taxes.

Judge Aaron J. Levy presided at the meeting. Others who spoke in behalf of the measure were Professor Felix Adler, head of the Ethical Culture Society, of New York; former Senator George Green, of Binghamton; John L. Elliot, President of the Hudson Guild of New York; Mrs. Hannah Einstein, president of the Widowed Mothers' Association of New York; William Hand, a magazine writer; Mrs. George Simkevitch, of the Greenwich Village Settlement; John J. Henley, of New York State Federation of Labor, and Judge Cornelius Collins, of New York.

HOT LINERS

BY F. G. MENKE

The baseball teams are going South
To fit themselves to play——
It is a joyous life down there,
Free grub three times a day.

John M. Ward struck it right when he classed the minors as the Belgians of the present baseball war.

Notice how the big moguls are looking out for them? They refused to allow the Jersey City team to be transferred to the Bronx.

It is cold in ElPaso today. The chilly atmosphere has permeated Jess Willard's big frame. Reason — Jack Johnson has sailed for Mexico.

There are some big bank rolls at the National league meeting and bids of thousands for players are numerous. Wonder if the managers are kidding?

OSWEGO'S CORPS CAME TO TOWN

Ensign Fitzgerald's Promise Was Made Good by the Aid of Able Speakers

When Ensign Fitzgerald promised a good time to those who would attend the Salvation Army meeting last night, he knew whereof he spoke. He knew that in the Oswego visitors were comrades who had a large supply of humor and wit in their makeup, and at the hat night's meeting these elements seemed to pour from every pore of their skin.

Captain Purveance accompanied by Ensign Brown, Sergeant Major Metford, and a number of comrades, all of the Oswego barracks, were here to give the Fultonians a good time, and the large audience that gathered at the army hall last night in anticipation of an extra treat got what they looked for.

During the time for testimonies Ensign Brown, the life and wit of the visitors, told a story of the children; how they became mischievous at times and caused their attendants no end of worry. "So, to avoid all that," said the Ensign, "we have brought along with us tonight, a few of the mischievons ones, and a few of the good ones." And this proved later to be a fact.

Many converts were with the visitors. They testified that they were much happier in their new occupation (saving souls for God) than they ever could have been, in the life they formerly led.

Sergeant Metford: "I rejoice tonight to be able to raise my voice in God's mercy—the God that can take the rum and whiskey out of men's hearts and bring them to a life of perfect happiness. It makes no difference at what hour, or in what place, you go to God, he will let you in; and I know he will help you to lead a life of love and happiness just as he has helped me."

Love for the Army.

Captain Purveance: "I love the Salvation Army, because, everyone in testifying to God's saving power, preaches part of the sermon. If I had to depend upon preaching a sermon of one, two or three hours' duration, I'm afraid I never would be employed.

"What a power Jesus has over our lives; how willing He is to save men and women from sin if they but come to Him. The trouble is, we sometimes forget to call upon God in the time of trouble.

"If we start out with a determination to do better we shall do better. It pays to serve God. If I were to tell you of all the good derived from serving God, I'd be here until tomorrow morning. The man or woman who is steeped in sin has rejected God's mercy so often that they have become hardened. You have been asked so often to come forward, and you have so often refused, that it has become natural to you.

"There are a great many people who want to come into God's sheltering arms, but they are either too lazy, or they are afraid of what their neighbors may say about them. When they are sick, physically or mentally, they send for a doctor; but when their souls are sick with sin, they are too lazy to ask God to heal their wounds. He will never come to you unless you make an effort to go to Him.

"I do not know which is the worst, 'chewing the rag', or chewing tobacco. Either one is bad in itself. In 'chewing the rag' you generally talk about your neighbors, and that is just as much a sin as any other in the sight of God. When you are tempted to sin, the spirit of God will warn you against it; some people call it your conscience, but call it what you may, you are warned against that sin, and you let the warning pass you by unheeded."

A Comrade Cured

Comrade Woods spoke of how at one time he cleaned out saloons and washed spittoons that he might get a drink. The drink had such a firm hold upon him that he could think of nothing else but drink. "But thank God, since I have given my soul to God, I no longer have a desire for the stuff."

At this point, a baby, belonging to Mr. and Mrs. Woods, dropped a milk bottle to the floor. The bottle was smashed, letting the contents flow over the floor.

Captain Purveance, remarked: "A great many people resemble the infant in the cab. A few minutes ago it had settled itself down to enjoy a meal, and was contented and happy, but without a moment's warning its pleasure was taken away, and it had to go without its supper. Therefore its enjoyment was gone. That is the way with many people. They believe that they are enjoying themselves in this world, but the moment they seem to be happiest their pleasure is taken from them. God is over us all; he controls our destinies; we are His subjects, and unless we serve Him faithfully in this life, we cannot hope for reward in the future.

"We have tried to tell you the message of God in a simple way, that you may understand, and I ask you to examine your conscience and let that dictate to you whether you are in need of God's all serving power or not, and tonight we appeal to you through that conscience to come to Jesus."

Ensign Brown and Mrs. Metford entertained by singing.

FIREMEN'S GOOD FORTUNE

Oswego, Feb. 11.—A check for $100 was received yesterday by Chief Robert G. Blackburn, of the fire department, from the Schwill Malting Co., of Chicago. A letter signed by Oscar J. Ruh, secretary of the company, stated the money was in appreciation of the work which the firemen did when the company's plant burned and is to be placed to the credit of the pension fund of the department.

RUSSIANS PREPARE FOR STRUGGLE THAT MAY BE DECISIVE

Czar's Forces, Howeve[illegible] Driven From East Prussia [illegible]Acknowledgment of Official Statement Issued Today

By Francis Lavelle Murray

Petrograd, Feb. 12.—Heavy reinforcements which the Germans are receiving have practically driven the Russians out of East Prussia it was admitted in an official statement issued by the general headquarters today. The statement says, however, that the Russians are falling back simply to rearrange thei rforces and effect a greater concentration, which arrangement can best be made on Russian territory.

Dealing with the general situation the statement says that small encounters have taken place on the right bank of the Vistula, cannonades on the left of that river and in the Carpathians all attacks by the Austro-German forces have been repulsed.

The official statement follows: "It was recently definitely ascertained that a new army corps had appeared in East Prussia, formed partly from Prussian troops from the western front, partly from new recruits and partly from reserve forces. This radically changes the situation and necessitates the falling back of our troops in order to assure the possibility of rearranging them and effecting a greater concentration.

"Such an object can best be attained on our own territory and in the shadow of our own fortresses. It must be presumed that we are on the eve of a great long operation which ought definitely to decide the struggle in eastern Prussia.

"These circumstances will render necessary some brevity in our communications regarding future fighting, taking into account the strict necessity for keeping our operations secret. On the right bank of the Vistula some small encounters have taken plaee in the direction of Myschentez, toward Ostrolenka, and in the region of Serpec, on the Skrwa river.

"On the left bank of the Vistula there have been only cannonades.

"In the Carpathians the enemy has made attacks to the west of Meze Laborez in the direction of Iablenow to the east of the Uzsck pass. We repulsed all these attacks and also a German offensive on the heights of Koziouvau.

"After 22 ineffectual attempts the Germans succeeded in occupying with large forces and after a sanguinary attack, the heights of Koziouka, but they were dislodged after a fierce bayonet fight and left 400 dead on the field.

"We seized the heights near Rabbe, to the east of Lupkow pass, after a hard fight and captured as many as 1000 prisoners.

"The garrison at Przemysl is exhausting itself with vain sorties. It keeps up an irregular fire upon our investing troops.

"In the Black sea the Russians sunk a Turkish transport, laden with 50,000 pounds of provisions."

SCYTHE-LIKE, RUSSIAN GUNS KILLED 40,000

Paris, Feb. 12.—German attacks in Poland completely stopped and the Kaiser's forces have lost 40,000 men in killed alone according to an official statement issued by the War office this afternoon.

The statement says:

"The German attacks in Poland appear to have been completely checked by the Russians. The losses inflicted by the Czar's troops surpass the worst carnage since the war began. The number of Germans killed is 40,000. The reason for the failure of the German attacks being the severe cold, being 7 or 8 degrees below zero, and the inability of the Germans to attack except in close formation. An eyewitness of the attack says that the Russian guns mowed down the ranks of the enemy lik a scythe."

HORSE FLESH AND BOOTS, SOLDIER'S DIET

By Francis Lavelle Murray.

Petrograd, Feb. 12.—The Austrian garrison at Przesysl, the Gal[illegible] fortress which is being besieged by the Russians, are subsisting [illegible] horse flesh, according to deserters from the Austrian army who [illegible] entered the Russian lines. The garrison in the town numbers [illegible],000 men and the commander says he will not surrender. The [illegible] flesh is preserved and prepared within the fortress. The [illegible]rian commander declared that if the supply of food becomes [illegible]usted he will compel soldiers to eat their own boots.

Seven hundred porters and drivers, mostly Jews, were ordered [illegible]ve th fortress owing to the lack of food. They came to the [illegible]n lines, but the Czar's commander sen them back because they [illegible] not prisoners of war. The commander at Przemysl insisted [illegible]leave town and they were finally given shelter within the Rus[illegible]nes.

Madrid, Feb. 12.—One officer and 33 soldiers were drowned [illegible] when the steamer Lazarc entering port struck on a rock. The [illegible] returned home, their time having expired.

PARING DOWN SALARY LIST

Baseball Magnates Oppose Continuation of Expensive National Commission

By Frank G. Menke

New York, Feb. 12.—There is a strong possibility that the National baseball commission will be dissolved upon demands of the magnates of the American and National Leagues, even if Judge Landis, in his decision, does not make such a recommendation.

The magnates, after ten years of experiment with the National commission have concluded that it is an unnecessary body and one that is far too costly to continue in force longer merely for ornamental purposes.

The annual expenses of the national commission are close to $50,000. Over a stretch of ten years it will be seen that the natural commission has cost the magnates, who had had to "chip in" for its upkeep, a total of about a half million dollars.

Secretary Bruce gets $6000 a year and the clerks and stenographers of the commission down a total of about $12,000 more.

The other items consist of traveling expenses, etc.

John K. Tener, president of the National league and Ban Johnson, president of the American league are members of the national committee, but they do not get any salary for their work as members.

There has been a feeling among the big league magnates for some time that the commission isn ot worth its keep. Since the retrenchment policy has been adopted by the magnates as regards their own teams, some of the magnates have suggested that a further step in retrenchment be taken by the abolishment of the commission.

It is pointed out by several of the magnates that the commission's main job lately has been to selve minor league problems and that there is no need for a commission to handle the affairs of the big leaguers, as they're to handle themselves.

"The minor leaguers who do not pay for the keep of the commission get the benefit of its existence, while the major leagues who have contributed about $500,000 for the upkeep of the commission get no benefit," said one National league magnate. "So what's the use of maintaining the commission. We are going to get busy and try to put the national commission out of business if Landis doesn't beat us to it."

GRAND TRUNK SUSPECTS PLOT

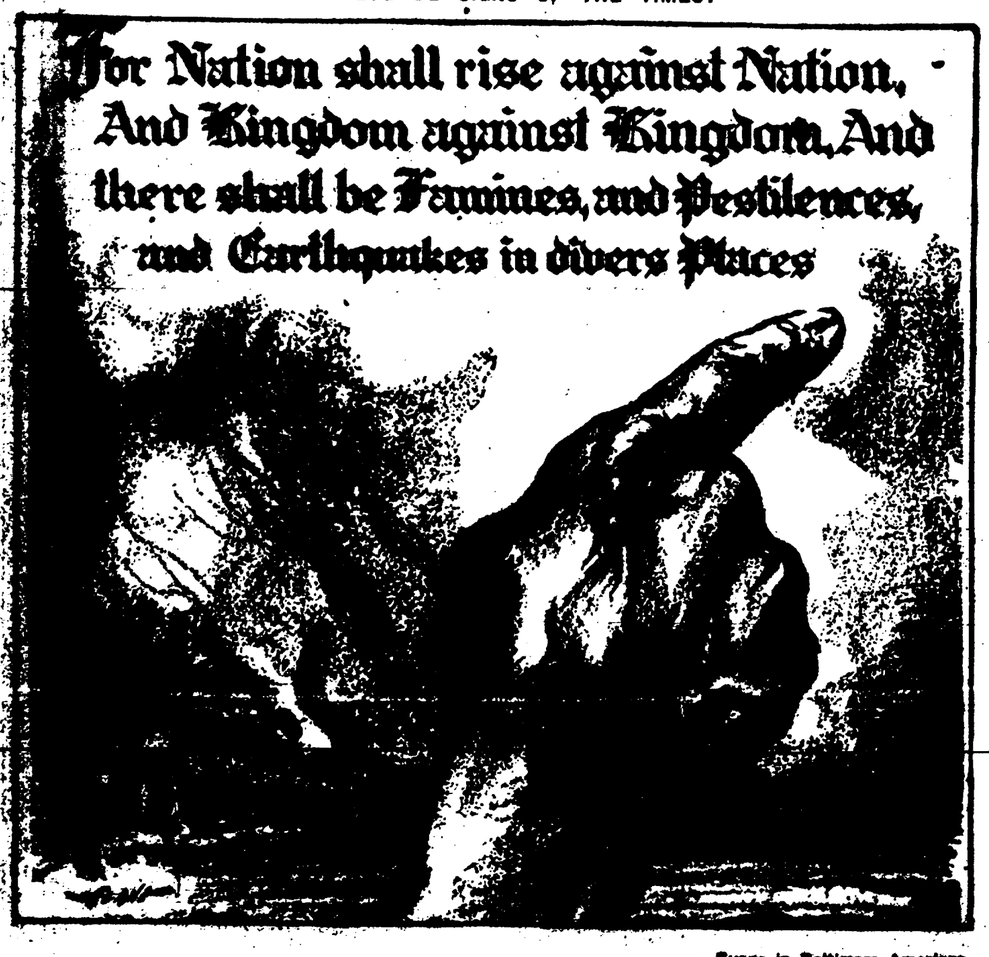
Canadian Railway Officials Fear Dynamiters Are Ready to Wreck Their Property

Portland Me., Feb. 12.—The Grand Trunk railway from its headquarters in Montreal has sent an official warning to all its agents in the U. S. and Canada of a plot to dynamite property owned by the railway.

This warning is to the effect that the plot was hatched in California and that the plotters are now speeding across the country towards the East.

Following this notification steps have been taken to guard the property here, according to dispatches today.

Plain clothes men from the Portland police department are on watch day and night over the elevators, freight and passenger yards here.



John M. Riddell, Portland agent of the Grand Trunk, was the first man to be notified of the plot. After the warning from Montreal he called on the police for protection of all Grand Trunk property in this city. Two suspciious characters were ejected from the company's property here.

Throughout Canada close watch is being kept on all the railroad properly. Suspicious persons are being trailed by detectives and every effort is being made to discover those responsible for the origin of the plan to destroy the property.

SENATORS PLAN A CLEVER RUSE

Smoot Declares There Shall Be No Compromise With Democrats

Washington, Feb. 12.—Uncertainty marked today's maneuvers in the struggle over the shipping bill.

Administration Senators and House leaders set to work to lay out a new course by which the Gore bill assured of a majority in the Senate, might be rushed through the House as an amendment to the Week's naval mail shipping bill, and sent to the Senate as a conference report.

Republican strategists of both houses were in council to prevent such a move. They proposed a filibuster against the sundry civil appropriation bill in the House and in this way delay the adoption of a special rule by which the shipping measure might be considered by the lower branch of Congress.

Reports of a compromise in the Senate between the administration Democrats and the recalcitrants of that body denied yesterday by Senator Hitchcock, cropped up again. But the situation was said to hold better prospects for an agreement by the Democratic organization and their Progressive Republicans allies—La Follette, Kenyon and Norris—to vote to take up other legislation until the House shall have acted upon the shipping measure.

Senator Smott, who is opposed even to an emergency measure for government ownership of merchant vessels, declared that the Republicans would continue the filibuster, rather than let the Democrats hold the measure over their heads, while disposing of other bills. He intimated that the Republicans would block all business until the shipping measure actually was abandoned.

FIRM TONE OF NOTES STARTLES DIPLOMATS

They Believe the Declaration to Protect American Merchant Marine May Lead to Trouble With Germany

Washington, Feb. 12.—That the notes sent by the United States to Germany and Great Britain, in effect serving notice that the American flag and American rights must be respected will open long diplomatic negotiations which will establishd the basis for international rules for the use of neutral flags and submarine warfare on merchant vessels, was the belief in administration circles today.

It was pointed out by officials that the government thought it best to speak plainly on these notes at the time rather than wait until the public might be aroused by some loss of American life or property. Washington believes that notes will produce an excellent effect in both the United States and other neutral nations.

Something of a sensation was created among the diplomats in Washington when they read the text of the notes. The drastic character, especially of the German note had not been anticipated and diplomats indicated that it virtually commits the United States to a course of action which may lead to trouble with Germany unless the latter reverses its announced policy of using submarines on merchantmen, carrying supplies to Great Britain.

Compared to the note sent to Great Britain the German document was regarded as much more severe. It is pointed out that it places this nation in entire antagonism to the so-called "paper blockade" of Great Britain by Germany. American shipping must be protected at any cost, says the State department note, and this government will not tolerate even the suggestion that steamships of this country may be blown up accidentally by occasional German submarines.

In adopting this course, it was stated, the American government was acting under recognized principles of international law as neutrals had a right to exepct to receive recognition.

The same was said to be true of the issue involved between the United States and Great Britain.

LONDON SILENT; PAPERS BLAME GERMAN GOV'T.

London, Feb. 12.—The Foreign Office today maintained a silent attitude on the American note to Great Britain concerning the sinking of American ships or the use of the American flag. Sir Edward Gray, Foreign Minister, will call the cabinet into session as soon as the full text of the note is received.

The newspapers commenting on the note assert that Great Britain is acting not only in national interest, but in the interest of civilization. Germany is blamed for the whole situation, says the editorial.

London, Feb. 12.—A Rotterdam dispatch to the Mail says that 35 German soldiers were killed when aviators of the allies dropped bombs on Antwerp.

Opinions

North Country Angry.

Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt did not say that the moss was thick up in St. Lawrence county and she did not imply that the North Country has an undue share of illiteracy. She was reported as having said these things at an alumni banquet of St. Lawrence university, and when the folks up north read what had been said about them they were angry and wrote Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt that they were angry. They enclosed some clippings for Northern New York to show that the editors correctly reflected their opinion. But it all truns out that Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt said no such things and she writes to one of the aforesaid editors to say that she didn't.

But why should the people of the North resent being called illiterates and mossbacks? Havent' we been hearing for months that literacy is no test for honesty and character? Have we not become quite convinced that an illiterate population is just as good as any other kind of population and it is to be accepted as such in the home of this self-governing nation? The North Country had no right, therefore, to get angry, even if Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt had said what she did not say.—The Clarion.

Both Pay the Freight

Who pays the freight? In a report submitted to Congress a few days ago the statement was made that the American farmer and the manufacturer paid it on goods sent abroad. A member of the Chamber of Commerce of New York declares that the purchaser pays the bill. Both are right, but more specially the member of the Chamber of Commerce.

The European must consider the cost of what he buys and the freight enters into that cost. Because of a high freight bill he is unable to pay for an article what he might pay if he didn't have to pay so much freight. It influences his bidding for wheat, cotton, arms and the most necessary goods, as well as what he bids for things which are not so necessary. The freight bill can go to a point where the European must either cease to buy, or must pay less for what he takes. That is the limit of the tendency.

So it is a mistake to believe that it doesn't matter to the American manufacturer what the freight may be so long as the European pays the bill.

If the purchaser pays the entire freight, manufacturers, lumber dealers and other shippers would not be so anxious to keep down freight rates on railroads. Farmers also have had experiences about paying the freight in making shipments of produce. While the freight bill affects more directly the purchaser, it makes a difference also to the shipper.—Utica Herald.

THE PERFECT TRIBUTE

MARY RAYMOND SHIPMAN ANDREWS

ON the morning of November 18, 1863, a special train drew out from Washington, carrying a distinguished company. The presence with them of the Marine Band from the Navy Yard spoke a public occasion to come, and among the travellers there were those who might be gathered only for an occasion of importance. There were judges of the Supreme Court of the United States; there were heads of departments; the general-in-chief of the army and his staff; members of the cabinet. In their midst, as they stood about the car before settling for the journey, towered a man sad, preoccupied, unassuming; a man awkward and ill-dressed; a man, as he leaned slouchingly against the wall, of no grace of look or manner, in whose haggered face seemed to be the suffering of the sins of the world. Abraham Lincoln, President of the United States, journeyed with his party to assist at the consecration, the next day, of the national cemetery at Gettysburg. The quiet November landscape slipped past the rattling train, and the President's deep-set eyes stared out at it gravely, a bit listlessly. From time to time he talked with those who were about him; from time to time there were flashes of that quaint wit which is linked, as his greatness, with his name, but his mind was today dispirited, unhopeful. The weight of his shoulders seemed pressing more heavily than he had courage to press back against it, the responsibility of one almost a dictator in a wide, war-torn country came near to crushing, at times, the mere human soul and body. There was, moreover, a speech to be made tomorrow to thousands who would expect their President to say something to them worth the listening of a people who were making history; something brilliant, eloquent, strong. The melancholy gaze glittered with a grim smile. He—Abraham Lincoln—the lad bred in a cabin, tutored in rough schools here and there, fighting for, snatching at crumbs of learning that fell from rich tables, struggling to a hard knowledge which well knew its own limitations—it was he whom this was expected. He glanced across the car. Edward Everett sat there, the orator of the following day, the finished gentleman, the careful student, the heir of traditions of learning and breeding, of scholarly instincts and resources. The self-made President gazed at him wistfully. From him the people might expect and would get a balanced and polished oration. For that end he had been born, and inheritance and opportunity and inclination had worked together for that end's perfection. While Lincoln had wrested from a scanty schooling a command of English clear and forcible always, but, he feared, in finish and in breadth—of what use was it for such a one to try to fashion a speech fit to take a place by side of Everett's silver sentences? He sighed. Yet the people had a right to the best he could give, and he would give them his best; at least he could see to it that the words were real and were short; at least he would not, so, exhaust their patience. And the work might as well be done now in the leisure of the journey. He put a hand, big, powerful, labor-knotted, into first one sagging pocket and then another, in search of a pencil, and drew out one broken across the end. He glanced about inquiringly—there was nothing to write upon. Across the car the Secretary of State had just opened a package of books and their wrapping of brown paper lay on the floor, torn carelessly in a zigzag. The President stretched a long arm.

"Mr. Seward, may I have this to do a little writing?" he asked, and the Secretary protested, insisting on finding better material.

But Lincoln, with few words, had his way, and soon the untidy stump of a pencil was at work and the great head, the deep-lined face, bent over Seward's bit of brown paper, the whole man absorbed in his task.

Earnestly, with that "capacity for taking infinite pains" which has been defined as genius, he labored as the hours flew, building together close-fitted word on word, sentence on sentence. As the sculptor must dream the statue prisoned in the marble, as the artist must dream the picture to come from the brilliant unmeaning of his palette, as the musician dreams a song, so he who writes must have a vision of his finished work before he touches, to begin it, a medium more elastic, more vivid, more powerful than any other—words—prismatic bits of humanity, old as the Pharaohs, new as the Arabs of the street, broken, sparkling, alive, from the age-long life of the race. Abraham Lincoln, with clear thought in his mind of what he would say, found the sentences that came to him colorless, wooden. A wonder flashed over him once or twice of Everett's skill with these symbols which, it seemed to him, were to the Bostonian a keyboard facile to make music, to Lincoln tools to do his labor. He put the idea aside, for it hindered him. As he found the sword fitted to his hand he must fight with it; it might be that he, as well as Everett, could say that which should go straight from him to his people, to the nation who struggled at his back towards a goal. At least each syllable he said should be chiselled from the rock of his sincerity. So he cut here and there an adjective, here and there a phrase, baring the heart of his thought, leaving no ribbon or flower of rhetoric to flutter in the eyes of those with whom he would be utterly honest. And when he had done he read the speech and dropped it from his hand to the floor and stared again from the window. It was the best he could do, and it was a failure. So, with the pang of the workman who believes his work done wrong he lifted and folded the torn bit of paper and put it in his pocket, and put aside the thought of it, as of a bad thing which he might not better, and turned and talked cheerfully with his friends.

LL

At eleven o'clock on the morning of the day following, on November 19, 1863, a vast, silent multitude billowed, like waves of the sea, over what had been not long before the battle-field of Gettysburg. There were wounded soldiers there who had beaten their way four months before through a singing fire across these quiet fields, who had seen the men die who were buried there; there were troops, grave and responsible; who must soon go again into battle; there were the rank and file of an everyday American gathering in surging thousands; and above them all, on the open-air platform, there were the leaders of the land, the pilots who today lifted a hand from the wheel of the ship of state to salute the memory of those gone down in the storm. Most of the men in that group of honor are now passed over to the majority, but their names are not dead in American history—great ghosts who walk still in the annals of their country, their flesh-and-blood faces were turned attentively that bright, still November afternoon towards the orator of the day, whose voice held the audience.

LL

For two hours Everett spoke and the throng listened untired, fascinated by the dignity of his high-bred look and manner almost as much, perhaps, as by the speech which has taken a place in literature. As he had been expected to speak he spoke, of the great battle, of the causes of the war, of the results to come after. It was an oration which missed no shade of expression, no reach of grasp. Yet there were those in the multitude, sympathetic to a unit as it was with the Northern cause, who grew restless when this man who had been crowned with so thick a laurel wreath by Americans spoke of Americans as rebels, of a cause for which honest Americans were giving their lives as a crime. The days were war days, and men's passions were inflamed, yet there were men who listened to Edward Everett who believed that his great speech would have been greater unenforced with bitterness.

As the clear, cultivated voice fell into silence, the mass of people burst into a storm of applause, for they knew that they had heard an oration which was an event. They clapped and cheered him again and again and again, as good citizens acclaim a man worthy of honor whom they have delighted to honor. At last, as the ex-Governor of Massachusetts, the ex-ambassador to England, the ex-Secretary of State, the ex-Senator of the United States—handsome, distinguished, graceful, sure of voice and of movement—took his seat, a tall, gaunt figure detached itself from the group on the platform and slouched slowly across the open space and stood facing the audience. A stir and a whisper brushed over the field of humanity, as if a breeze had rippled a monstrous bed of poppies. This was the President. A quivering silence settled down and every eye was wide to watch this strange, disappointing appearance, every ear alert to catch the first sound of his voice. Suddenly the voice came, in a queer, squeaking falsetto. The effect on the audience was irrepressible, ghastly. After Everett's deep tones, after the strain of expectancy, this extraordinary, gaunt apparition, this high thin sound from the huge body, were too much for the American crowd's sense of humor, always stronger than its sense of reverence. A suppressed yet unmistakable titter caught the throng, ran through it, and was gone. Yet no one who knew the President's face could doubt that he had heard it and had understood. Calmly enough, after a pause almost too slight to be recognized, he went on, and in a dozen words his tones had gathered volume, he had come to his power and dignity. There was no smile now on any face of those who listened. People stopped breathing rather, as if they feared to miss an inflection. A loose-hung figure, six feet four inches high, he towered above them, conscious of and quietly ignoring the bad first impression, unconscious of a charm of personality which reversed that impression within a sentence. That these were his people was his only thought. He had something to say to them; what did it matter about him or his voice?

"Fourscore and seven years ago," spoke the President, "our fathers brought forth on this continent a new nation, conceived in liberty and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal. Now we are engaged in a great civil war, testing whether that nation, or any nation, so conceived and so dedicated, can long endure. We are met on a great battlefield of that war. We have come to dedicate a portion of it as a final resting-place for those who here gave their lives that that nation might live. It is altogether fitting and proper that we should do this.

"But in a larger sense we cannot dedicate, we cannot consecrate, we cannot hallow this ground. The brave men, living and dead, who struggled here, have consecrated it far above our poor power to add or to detract. The world will little note nor long remember what we say here, but it can never forget what they did here. It is for us, the living, rather, to be dedicated here to the unfinished work which they who fought here have thus so nobly advanced. It is rather for us to be here dedicated to the great task remaining before us—that from these honored dead we take increased devotion to that cause for which they here gave the last full measure of devotion—that we here highly resolve that these dead shall not have died in vain, that this nation, under God, shall have a new birth of freedom, and that government of the people, by the people, for the people shall not perish from the earth."

TT

There was no sound from the silent, vast assembly. The President's large figure stood before them, at first inspired, glorified with the thrill and swing of his words, lapsing slowly in the stillness into lax, ungraceful lines. He stared at them a moment with sad eyes full of gentleness, of resignation, and in the deep quiet they stared at him. Not a hand was lifted in applause. Slowly the big, awkward man slouched back across the platform and sank into his seat, and yet there was no sound of approval, of recognition from the audience; only a long sigh ran like a ripple on an ocean through rank after rank. In Lincoln's heart a throb of pain answered it. His speech had been, as he feared it would be, a failure. As he gazed steadily at these his countrymen who would not give him even a little perfunctory applause for his best effort, he knew that the disappointment of it cut into his soul. And then he was aware that there was music, the choir was singing a dirge; his part was done, and his part had failed.

When the ceremonies were over Everett at once found the President. "Mr. President," he began, "your speech—" but Lincoln had interrupted, flashing a kindly smile down at him, laying a hand on his shoulder.

"We'll manage not to talk about my speech, Mr. Everett," he said. "This isn't the first time I've felt that my dignity ought not to permit me to be a public speaker."

He went on in a few cordial sentences to pay tribute to the orator of the occasion. Everett listened thoughtfully and when the chief had done," Mr. President," he said simply, "I should be glad if I could flatter myself that I came as near the central idea of the occasion in two hours as you did in two minutes."

MARCHING TROOPS

Caring For the Feet of an Army Is a Vital Matter.

AS IMPORTANT AS FIT FOOD.

The Manner In Which the Sock and Shoe Problem Was Solved by Our Military Men Has Given Uncle Sam the Best Shod Soldiers In the World.

The care of soldiers' feet is one of the important things in war. A soldier is no better than his feet. Many things enter into the sum total of military efficiency, but two of the great factors making for efficiency in troops are marksmanship and marching power. Infantry that cannot march would be as unfit as infantry that could not shoot. It may be because of the importance of the feet in infantry that the men of that branch of the service are called "foot troops." Infantry without good feet would be more useless than cavalry without mounts, artillery without cannon or a flying corps without an aeroplane.

Napoleon has been credited with saying that an army marches upon its stomach, which, of course, is true as far as it goes. Soldiers to bring or maintain their efficiency at the highest point must be adequately fed, and a world of endeavor has been put forth by brainy men to insure the proper supply of food, to put into the ration the constituents needed by the human system and to have the food well cooked. But it is just as true, figuratively as well as literally, that an army marches on its feet.

When a recruit or a prospective recruit comes up for his physical examination the examining surgeon gives just about as much attention to the applicant's feet as to his lungs, heart, kidneys, teeth, vision and hearing. He will not pass a man with flat feet, because that man could not march. He will insist on a certain amount of arch to the foot. Too high an arch, which, however, is rare in men, would result in his rejection. Any defect in the feet which would militate against his endurance on the march would be a cause for rejection of the man.

With the recognition of the importance of the soldier's foot came long and earnest study and experimentation with the soldier's sock and his shoe. The sock question was soon satisfactorily adjusted. The necessity of frequent bathing of the feet, especially on the march, was early determined on, and woolen socks, light or heavy, according to the season, were decided on for marching men. Fresh and clean socks are insisted on, and a sock with a hole in it or a sock that has been darned is not to be worn. At least that is the idea as developed in the American military service. In the matter of the fit of a soldier's socks it is prescribed in regulations that "the socks will be large enough to permit free movement of the toes, but not so loose as to permit of wrinkling."

When it came down to the study of the shoe the military men had a serious problem which it is believed in this country to have been correctly solved and with the result that the men of the American army are the best shod troops in the world. The cost of the United States army shoe, garrison or marching, is in round figures $3, and so popular is it with the men of the army that they rarely buy a pair of private shoes for use when absent from post on pass or on furlough. The quartermaster shoe of the present day is considered an excellent specimen of the shoemaker's art and is vastly different in fit and finish from the army shoe of a generation ago.

In those states where these shoes are issued by the national government to the organized militia it is one of the perplexities of the national guard officers to keep their men from wearing the shoes in civil life.

Before the foot and shoe fit question came under the study of men concerned with the efficiency of troops there was always a great deal of foot soreness among the soldiers on the march. This trouble was always severe and annoying among new troops and among old troops with new shoes. The old idea was to equip a soldier with a pair of shoes that would wear long. The strutiness and durability of the shoe was the main consideration. There was very little consideration for the foot that went inside the shoe. If the shoe was large enough and not very much too large for the man the matter was thought to be settled. Foot trouble among regular troops on the march has been greatly reduced, but of course has not been eliminated. Probably that ideal never will be attained.

A soldier's marching efficiency depends not alone on the size or what is commonly called the "fit" of the shoe, but on the shape. It has been said that Dr. Herman Meyer was the first to formulate the theory that the great toe must lie in such a position that its axis when carried backward shall pass through the center of the heel. The foot is a lever of the second class; the fulcrum is at the ball and great toe and power at the heel, which is transmitted through the tendo-Achilles from the calf muscles and the weight of the body between. This lever is the prime factor in walking or marching. The leg and body muscles balance the load or shift the levers, which are the feet. —Washington Star.

The great thing in the world is not so much to seek happiness as to seek a power that will support.

Science and Economy in using Left Overs.

Recipes to one with or without initiative and real inventive ability, are of value. There are many who so combine the knowledge of fundamental principles with inventive talent and independent thought that they, by judicious adaptations and changes, can use whatever of food they possess to best advantage, regardless of varying amounts or missing ingredients called for in some special rule.

We seldom have the kinds or quantities of good left overs from an abundant dinner or feast so that we can exactly follow any recipe. The average housewife, who will persist in using her own judgment and utilize every reasonably good scrap of remaining meat, vegetbles or dressings, stocks, pot liquors (where not too salt) and other clean food values, can compound delicacies which will, at little cost of money, and often with small labor, produce better food than her less careful neighbor who throws away, or unintelligently uses even better materials.

Cabbage Salad.

Perhaps we had some cabbage left from Sunday's salad. Here is a different recipe for dressing.

Four four cups of chopped cabbage, mix two tablespoons melted butter, one-holf cup thin cream, two beaten eggs, one-half teaspoon salt, a teaspoon sugar, a little pepper, two tablespoons vinegar. Heat over hot water until thickened. Pour over the cabbage and let get cold before serving.

These egg dressings are rather expensive if made with fresh eggs at their present price; we would use storage eggs.

A Never Failing Mince Meat.

This recipe is convenient for those who wish to make only a small quantity and to have an exact measure for everything. One cup of cold boiled beef, chopped fine, three cups of chopped apples, one cup of seeded raisins, one cup of currants, one-fourth cup citron, shaved, one cup granulated sugar, one cup of brown sugar, one cup of meat liquor, one-half teaspoon of cloves, one spoon of mace, one spoon of salt, juice and grated rind of one lemon and one orange and one cup of currant or raspberry shrub.

Mix all the materials thoroughly and cook until the apple looks clear. Put it into glass jars and seal as usual.

Broiled Oysters on Toast

Rinse the oysters, dipping each one separately in a bowl of cold water, then dry on a cloth. Strain the oyster liquor through a fine sieve, scald and skim it, then add to it an equal quantity of hot milk and salt and pepper to taste, and thicken slightly. Toast thin slices of bread a delicate brown and stand where they will keep hot and crisp. Cream two tablespoonfuls of butter, add one-half of a teaspoonful of salt, 1-4 of a teaspoonful of white pepper and one tablespoonful of parsley, then rub in slowly one tablespoonful of lemon juice. Rub the broiler—which should be a special one with the wire net close together—with a bit of suet. Dip each oyster into melted butter or olive oil, arrange in the broler and broil them quickly over a bright fire, turning several times until the gills curl. Put a spoonful of the prepared oyster juice on each piece of toast, place on it three or four of the oysters, drop on them a small bit of the prepared butter and send at once to the table.

Jellied Salmon, Cucumber Sauce

One can salmon, onehalf tablespoonful salt, one-half tablespoonful sugar, onehalf tablespoonful flour, one teaspoonful mustard, few grains cayenne, yolks of two eggs, one and a half tablespoonfuls melted butter, three-fourths tablespoonfuls granulated gelatine. Two tablespoonfuls cold water. Remove salmon from tin, rince thoroughly with hot water and separate in flakes. Mix dry ingredients, add egg yolks, butter, milk and vinegar. Cook over boiling water, stirring constantly until mixture thickens. Add gelatin soaked in cold water, strain and add to salmon. Stand until set. Serve in individual moulds with following sauce: Beat one-half cupful heavy cream until stiff, and pinch salt, pinch pepper and two tablespoonfuls vinegar, then add one cucumber, peeled and chopped.

Mock Cream Pie

1 pint milk
½ cup sugar
4 level tablespoons cornstarch
2 level teaspoons butter
2 eggs
pinch salt
2 tablespoons powdered sugar
Flavor as desired.

Mix together the cornstarch and sugar, beat with the egg yolks. When milk comes to a boil add the butter, the egg mixture and salt. Bake in paste lined plate. Beat whites of eggs stiff with the powdered sugar and frost the pie. Brown a little in oven.

Rye Gems

Sift together a cup of rye meal, a cup of flour, two rounding teaspoons baking powder and a little salt, Stir in a tablespoon molasses or sugar and a little shortening or not. Mix with a cup of milk or milk and water. Bake in hot oven.

Old Fashioned Doughnuts

One egg, well beaten, add twothirds cupful of sugar, onehalf cupful sour milk, one-half teaspoonful of soda dissolved in the milk, one-half teaspoonful of salt, one-fourth teaspoonful dry ginger and nutmeg, onehalf teaspoonful cream of tartar sifted with the flour; try cupful and half of flour, more if needed; roll out. These are delicious.

Marguerites

Whites of three eggs, one quart of peanuts (in shell), one teaspoonful vanilla, one and one-half or two cupfuls powdered sugar; heat whites of eggs very stiff, chop peanuts rather fine; mix all together and drop on saltine crackers, brown lightly in oven.

WRONG DIAGNOSIS UPSETS MIND

North Tonawanda, Feb. 10.—Rev. George B. Evans, former pastor of the Christian Tabernacle church on Oliver street, and until recently pastor of the Christian church in Cortland, O., was yesterday committed to the Buffalo State hospital, following an examination for his sanity by Dr. A. J. Martin and Dr. Pemberton Lundy. Rev. Evans is said to be afflicted with spasmodic fits of insanity during which he becomes very violent.

Rev. Evans, according to the physicians who examined him, was rendered mentally unbalanced in a strange manner. It seems that while residing in Cortland he came in contact with a visiting nurse who was canvassing various Ohio cities, searching out incipient tuberculosis cases, and was informed that he had symptoms of the disease. Constant worry over his supposed plight, it is said, caused Rev. Evans to go into spells of insanity during which he was extremely dangerous.

The pastor finally suffered a nervous breakdown less than a month ago and decided to go to a sanitarium on the Hudson to regain his health. It was while there that Rev. Evans learned that he was not suffering from tuberculosis but his condition was a form of insanity.

He then returned to North Tonawanda, and it was at his own request it is said, that he was committed to the State asylum. The belief is expressed that Mr. Evans will recover his balance quickly under the treatment which he is to receive. Rev. Evans conducted a successful pastorate in North Tonawanda for several years and is very well known throughout the Twin Cities.

AUBURN WOMEN DISCUSS CITY TOPICS

"Know Your City" Discussed by Auburn Women in a Series of Talks.

Auburn, Feb. 12.—Seven speakers were heard in the fourth of the series of "Know Your City" talks held in the parlors of the Women's Union this afternoon. The particular subject was, "Auburn Institutions."

Mrs. C. P. Burr, discussing "The City Hospital," told how it was managed by a board which regulated the affairs of expenditures.

"The Home," was the topic assigned Mrs. Henry D. Hervey. Mrs. C. M. Knapp considered "The Children's Home," giving a history of the institution from the time it was started.

W. E. Axton, secretary of the Prisoners Aid Society, talked about "The Prison," and told what the Prisoners Aid League was trying to do for members of the Mutual Welfare League, composed of the convicts who were actuated by a desire to lead better lives on their release from prison.

Mrs. Gertrude Talbot lectured on the work being done at the Sunnycrest Sanatorium. Arthur L. Smith, county superintendent of the poor, described how the County Home was run and the employment on the farm of many of the county's indigent poor.

"The Day Nursery" was the subject assigned Miss Rosamond Underwood, but she was unable to be present and the topic was presented by Miss Evelyn Smith.

POLITICIANS IN DANGER

New Suffrage Body to Win Them or Harry Them

The Congressional Union, which lately opened headquarters at 13 East 41st street, New York, will hold its first New York mass meeting February 22 at 8 o'clock p. m., at Cooper Union. And take it from Miss Doris Stevens, who is running the headquarters, this will also be the first real politicial meeting held by suffragists in this city.

It is really political, because its purpose is to boom the federal amendment and harry the politicians who do not support that measure.

There are hopes that Senators Root and O'Gorman will attend the meeting and speak. Mrs. O. H. P. Belmont wrote to ask them, but they haven't answered yet.

Speakers who have agreed to talk are Senator Joseph L. Bristow, of Kansas; Herman A. Metz, Charles Edward Russell, Mrs. Belmont, Mrs. Inez Milholland Boissevain, Miss Alice Paul and Mrs. Rheta Childe Dorr, Mrs. John Rogers, jr., will preside.

TAMPA'S FETE IN FULL SWING

It Celebrates the Life of a Bold, Bad Pirate of the Gulf Coast

Tampa, Fla., Feb. 12.—Reproducing scenes enacted during the days of piracy on the Spanish Main and Gulf of Mexico, all Tampa's citizens will stage today and the three succeeding days, the tenth annual Gasparilla Carnival, which derives its name from one of the most daring and cruel high-sea thieves that ever "scuttled a ship or slit a throat."

Many noted Americans and foreign diplomats have attended Tampa's celebrations in the past, and a larger number will accept the "Cigar Citys" hospitality this year as the tourist season is at its height.

"Overboard with the men, but save the women," was the command of Gasparilla to his crew, and many a maid and matron were held captive by the band on Gasparilla Isle, upon which the prosperous port of Boca Brande is now located, while their fathers, husbands and brothers are forced to "walk the plank" and find rest in the coral beds beneath the waters.

Ten times has the ghost of Gasparilla and his phantom crew invaded Tampa, but the fierce-visaged brigands of today come in the cause of peace and pleasure, and not for blood or gold.

Gasparilla was originally a member of the crew of LaFitte, the French terror, whose followers looted scores of ships and the nsought refuge in the Barataria, Atchalafalya and Plaquemine bayons and other sequestered spots in the Louisiana coast. A determined soul, Gasparilla would not brock authority, and after a desperate fight with LaFitte, he, with a "chosen few," sailed from the pirate nest on the Louisiana shore to the coast of Florida. He located and erected on Gasparill Isle an immense but crude mansion, from which his men sallied forth after defenceless merchantmen and brought in a harvest of Spanish gold, jewels and fair women, who reluctantly played the tragic rules of beauties of the "Court of Gasparilla." Gasparilla isle, located at the mouth of Charlottee harbor, still bears the pirate's name.

Gasparilla's penchant for capturing pretty women finally proved the cause of his undoing; for the United States, after many futile efforts to capture him, sent a gunboat into the Gulf waters with instructions to the officers and men that they not return till they had captured or killed the pirate and his men. This order followed some particularly revolting deed of the crew and the gunboat, after a search covering many weeks, cornered the pirates in Lemon bay, while they were making foh their castle through Gasparilla sound. A desperate battle ensued, in which most of the pirates were killed, and Gasparilla, while bleeding from many wounds, but fighting savagely, was hanged to the yart arm of the government ship. This battle ended the reign of piracy on the Florida coast.

For three years a party has been searching, at great expense, for $10,001.00, which Gasparilla is said to have buried in a cement-sheated ship's long boat, near the mouth of Coral Creek. The men are in possession of a map, owned by a descendant of one of Gasparilla's crew, which points out the spot where the treasure was buried. They have found nothing, in spite of which they continue the searih year after year. One local contractor has spent more than $4000 in his quest for the hidden treasure.

"SANITO" COOKING UTENSILS
are a necessity for housekeepers who wish to excel in domestic science. They are the only American-made cooking ware which absolutely reproduces the high priced, imported German utensils, so universally used abroad. SANITO utensils have an acid proof lining which cannot crack or scale off and retains nothing to taint or discolor the food. When cooked in SANITO the food cooks evenly, retains all its juices and flavors and never scorches or burns. SANITO is a nonconductor of heat and after being heated to the cooking point—212 degrees—it requires but a very small gas flame to complete the cooking process. With proper care SANITO will last a life time.

SCOUT NEWS; HIKE PLANNED

Scouts Will All Join in a 3 Mile Hike on Saturday

The United Boy Scouts of Fulton, accompanied by Scoutmasters Holmes, Buck, Rice, Gilbert, Robinson and Morin, will hike for three miles in the open to the north as a crow flies.

The meeting point has been designated as East Park and the hour at 1:30. Each scout is requested to bring his tin cup and spoon and the foundation for an appetite.

The rank of 1st scout has been conferred upon Hadwin Fitch, West Side Troop 1.

* * *

M. LeRoy Wise, Scribe for Troop 1, sends the following report:

On Tuesday, February ninth, troop 1 assembled to hear a talk on Alaska by Mr. W. D. Carr. Mr. Carr was unfortunately prevented by a bad cold from being present.

Scoutmaster Robinson called the meeting to order and outlined the plans for a contest. Points are to be given for general good scout work. Scoutmaster Robinson will act as judge and award points. A supper will be given to the highest ranking patrol. A first prize of a dollar and a second prize of a regulation watch fob will be given to the two highest individual scouts.

The eagle patrol was awarded the first ten points to be given in a snappy first aid game.

Twenty-five points were offered to the first boy to make and successfully use a bow drill.

A test semaphore spelldown were planned for the next meeting and lights were out at eight forty-five.

PHILIPS STREET BOYS BEAT THE TIGERS

Cleary and Taylor Played Telling Points for the Winners

The Phillips street school basketball team scored a decisive victory over the West Side Tigers on the Phillips street court Thursday afternoon. The score was 11 to 6.

The Tigers, composed of former Phillips street basketball stars, showed some excellent pass work, and at times bewildered the grammar school outfit, but seemed unable to locate the basket when they had the opportunity.

On the contrary the Phillips street boys excelled in shooting but were unable to pass effectively. Pooler made two successful long shots, and, by getting the jump on the opposing center in nearly every case, was a factor in winning the game for the grammar school boys. The work of Fisk and Dewey for the Tigers and Cleary and Taylor for Phillips street deserves mention.

The line up:

P. S. S.		Tigers
Cleary	Forward	H. Dingle
F. Taylor	Forward	Dewey
Pooler	Center	Fish
Mahar	Guard	H. Taylor
W. Dingle	Guard	Church

EARLY MORNING FIRE

The fire department was called this morning at 7:15 to answer an alarm sent in from box 37. The fire was in the rear part of a building owned and occupied by Mrs. Sanford, 7 So. 4th st.

The fire had worked itself back of a concrete fireplace and gave the firemen a deal of trouble before it was entirely put out. A part of the kitchen ceiling was cut away in order to locate the blaze, and when this was done the department's work began. For more than an hour the boys worked with axe, pick and bar cleaving off the concrete that they might get at the seat of trouble. The loss is covered fully by insurance.

PENNY SOCIAL

Nehasne Lodge No. 269 will hold a penny supper and social Tuesday, Feb. 16, at 6:30 p.m. at I.O.O.F. hall. After supper an entertainment will be given and a social time will follow. All I.O.O.F. members, Rebekahs and their families are urged to be present. One cent is the maximum price to be exacted for the supper and entertainment.

COLLEGE WOMEN HEARD SPEAKER

Twenty-Seven Women Gathered at Table, Enjoyed the Comradie, and Heard Able Talk On "Justice"

Twenty-seven college women were present at the banquet held at the Lewis House last evening. Syracuse University had twenty representatives, Smith college three, Oberlin two and Northwestern University two.

An elaborate menu was served and the rooms and tables were prettily trimmed with smilax and narcissus. Violet tapers were used and the favors were knots of English violets and hand painted place cards.

Mrs. Cora Dodson Graham of Syracuse was the chief speaker of the evening, and her subject was "Justice." Drawing from fable, verse and history Mrs. Graham showed that the deep underlying motive of the charity of the past and the social service of the present is that of justice.

The tendency of the age in all ways today is that of justice, or helpfulness. Even the present great unrest in religion, which some regard as though we are on the brink of a precipice, is proof that we are living in a greater age of helpfulness. In the past the church prepared for the after life purely, and now the care is for the present. The church is now seeking to carry helpfulness and justice to the masses for their present.

In ancient times Mrs. Graham showed with well chosen illustrated phrases, the savages had their ceremonies to convey the meaning that all barriers between them as a people were burned or moved away. Today there are ceremonies, or works which illustrate the same desire for justice, and this is when a community establishes playgrounds, interests itself in the working girl or otherwise is helpful to its people. Community interest is the root of justice, and charity and "social service," an abused term, was, and is, actuated by this desire for justice.

The entering of women into new fields is but the outgrowth of the desire to shoulder responsibility for the growth of justice, the speaker stated, and in all lines of philanthrophy, temperance or charity work the same desire is to be found back of each plan.

Mrs. Graham is a gifted, talented speaker and left a deep impression with those who heard her.

After the dinner Syracuse challenged in song the other representatives to make themselves heard but they failed to respond.

A DAY LETTER

DAN DARLEIGH,
Manager Quirk Theatre,
Fulton, N. Y.

The De Koven Opera Co. sang Robin Hood last night at Richardson Theatre, Oswego, as it has never been sung before. Soloists and choruses could not be surpassed in the rendering, collectively and individually. The cast gave on of the best operatic performances ever seen here. F. R. Bosworth, Manager.

The De Koven Opera Company will present the celebrated light opera "Robin Hood," at The Quirk tonight.

This organization is the same which presented the famous classic at the New Amsterdam Theatre, New York, last season in a splendid production which was one of the successful features of the musical season in that city. Ivy Scott, of the Century Grand Opera, New York, will again sing the role of Maid Marian. Cora Tracy will sing Alan-a-Dale, and F. J. McCarthy will be seen in the role of Friar Tuck. The supporting company is the same which gave such efficient support during the new York engagement. The fine singing chorus and original production remain intact.

ARCHIMEDES AND HIS LEVER.

The Feat of Raising the Earth From a Scientific Viewpoint.

"Give me a fulcrum and a place on which to stand and I will raise the earth from its place!" That is a saying popularly attributed to Archimedes. If the required conditions were possible the feat might be performed, but in addition to providing a fulcrum and a place on which to stand Archimedes would also have to be furnished an indefinite lease of life.

To raise the earth a height of one inch by the force which Archimedes would have been capable of exerting would take not only an extremely long lever, but an extremely long time, as can be readily shown.

We shall assume the following data in our calculation: That the earth is a sphere 7,926 miles in diameter and that 5.5 is its mean density; also that the lever has no weight. Should we design a real lever it would be of such enormous size and weight that Archimedes' weight would be a negligible quantity.

If the earth is 7,926 miles in diameter the volume is about 261,000,000,000 cubic miles, or 38,400,000,000,000,000,000,000 cubic feet, and if the density is 5.5 the weight per cubic foot would be about 344 pounds, which multiplied by the volume would give as the weight of the earth 13,209,000,000,000,000,000,000,000 pounds. We shall assume, further, that Archimedes weighed 150 pounds and that "the place on which to stand" was some distant star; then, if the fulcrum is one mile from the point of application of the lever to the earth the length of the power arm of the lever, or the distance of Archimedes' "standing place," would have to be 88,064,000,000,000,000,000,000 miles.

To move the earth a distance of one inch Archimedes' end of the lever would have to move through a distance of 1,388,000,000,000,000,000,000 miles. Now, if Archimedes should take hold of the end of the lever and apply his weight of 150 pounds to it and should move off into space with the velocity of light, or 186,000 miles a second, it would take him 237,000 years to finish the job he proposed, so that now, nearly 2,200 years after making the famous dictum, he would barely have started the undertaking.—C. O. Sandstrom in Scientific American.

Unnecessary Alarm.

When Frederick the Great, at the beginning of the Seven Years' war, was in possession of Dresden he went to view the works of art in the royal picture gallery. The gallery director, Reidel, took the king through all the rooms and explained each picture as they went along. Frederick expressed his unreserved admiration for all the pictures, but when he came before a certain painting by Correggio he stopped, viewing it with particular interest.

"If you are willing," he said suddenly, "I should like to have that picture"—

Reidel gasped, for he expected the king to say that he wished the picture for himself. But the king noticed his anxiety and, striking him on the shoulder, said, laughing:

"If you are willing I should like to have that picture copied!"—Youth's Companion.

Bore and Caliber.

The bore of a shotgun is determined by the circumference of any one of a given number of lead balls of equal weight, the total weight of which is one pound. For instance, the circumference of the barrel of a ten bore shotgun is equal to the circumference of any one of ten lead balls of equal weight the total weight of which is one pound.

The caliber of a rifle is the diameter of the bore of its barrel measured in hundredths of an inch. The diameter of the bore of a 32 caliber rifle is thirty-two hundredths of an inch.—Philadelphia Press.

A Musical Tyrant.

Gluck as a conductor is said to have been an unmerciful tyrant. Frequently the musicians would have to repeat a passage twenty times before he was satisfied. The members of the Vienna court orchestra complained of this hard usage to the emperor, Joseph II., who appeased them by agreeing to give them 2 ducats instead of 1 ducat for every performance at which Gluck should conduct.

A Prophetic Writer.

In practical science the most marvelously prophetic writer was the Marquis of Worcester, who in his "Century of Inventions," published in 1663, described the steam engine, the telegraph, the torpedo, the range finder, the hydraulic press, portable military pontoons, majoches and many other things which have come into use within the last hundred years.—St. James Gazette.

The Wretch!

The general joker was watching a suffragette and anti playing anagrams.

"Here is one women should know how to use," said the genial joker, giving them the letters stove.

"It's votes!" cried the suffragette.

"Guess again," said the anti. "It's stove."—Judge.

Politeness.

"How is it that a man can carry an umbrella over another man's wife more satisfactorily than he can ove his own wife?" "He cannot. He just thinks he can because the other man's wife is too polite to tell him what she thinks of his clumsiness."—Houston Post.

There is a vast deal of vital air in loving words.—Landor.

CHAUTAUQUA TO COME AGAIN

Time Set Is About July 15th; Judge Lindsey, Ott, Knox and Other Speakers Scheduled

Charles Dalgetty, the advance agent for the Ridpah Lyceum Bureau met today a committee from Chamber of Commerce and plans for a Chautauqua week were completed. The second or third week in July is the time set for the big joy week.

Mr. Dalgetty gave a brief outline of the attractions scheduled. Ben Lindsey, Judge of the Juvenile Court of Denver, the friend of children, has a part on the program which of itself should prove one of the strongest of drawing points. Everyone in Fulton and for miles around will want to hear Judge Lindsey.

Hon. Frank J. Cannon, the first U. S. Senator from Utah, organizer of the Republican party of Utah, Editor of the Rocky Mountain News, world traveler, author and orator will speak on the one subject so vital an issue, Mormonism, and his long fight on Polygamy.

Edward Amherst Ott, one of the best known orators in the country, and author of "Sour Grapes," a lecture he has delivered over eleven hundred times, will prove a host in himself.

The Ben Greet Players, the Aida Quarette, the Weatherwax Brother Quartette will bring gems of fun and pleasure from the music and play world.

Ralph Bingham will have charge of joy night. Dr. T. DeWitt Talmage says of him, "Bless Bingham and all the apostolic college of humorists. The man that makes me laugh is my benefactor. God bless the punsters for they slap follies and absurdities which all the sermons of the pulpits cannot reach. Bingham is a master."

Other good parts of program are in the planning, and were not ready for announcement. The best is promised.

John Knox, business efficiency man, who left such an impression with those who heard him last year, will appear and give a follow-up talk on his lecture last summer.

A highly interesting number will be a suffrage debate. The best speakers to b found on both sides will be heard. Everyone will want to hear this debate on this very live issue.

A banjo quartette of girls is slated, and C. Pol Plancon, a noted baritone, will be heard with the Aida Quartette.

Enthusiasm over knowing the Chautauqua will be with us again is decidedly marked whereever the subject is broached. President Penfield of the Chamber of Commerce and a corps of workers will endeavor to aid in making the Chautauqua this year a success that will far outreach that of last year.

No one attraction could come to the community which would give greater value for the amount of money expended.

Clean, hearty, wholesome and with real intellectual merit Fulton will again welcome the Chautauqua.

ENJOYED SLEIGH RIDE

The Salvation Army last night gave a straw ride to about 60 children and the joyful shoutings all along the line between the army and Minneto rewarded Ensign Fitzgerald for his pains-taking efforts in behalf of the children. With horns blowing and the singing of songs, the children were driven over most of the streets of the city shouting their battle cry of:

Rah! Rah! Rah!
Who are we? We are the children of the great S. A.
Are we in it?
Well, I guess!
Fulton, Fulton; Yes! Yes! Yes!

Elmer Taylor and R. S. McCully very kindly donated the teams which was appreciated by Ensign Fitzgerald and the children.

Next Sunday afternoon the children will be given a talk by John Smith who will speak to them upon a series of topics.

SCHOOL BILL STIRS CREEDS

Bill Provides for Reading of Bible Verse in State's Public Schools

BY FREDERIC T. CARDOZE

Albany, Feb. 12.—More than mildly stirred up are Hebrews and certain Roman Catholic members of the legislature over the Greiner-Tallett bill which aims to have verses from the Bible read each day in all of the public schools of the State.

Because of the ardent opposition which has been marshalled, it has already been found necessary to amend the bill in question and to recommit it to committee for the purpose of holding a hearing. The date of the hearing is February 16. At that time a large delegation will petition the members of the Assembly committee on education to prevent the Greiner-Tallett measure from going to a vote on the floor.

It may be interesting to know that Senator Greiner of Buffalo introduced the Bible reading measure in the interests of powerful organizations in his home city. Assemblyman Tallett says that the bill be introduced was handed him and that he has no interest in it other than that he thinks that it is a good thing to have the Bible read each morning as it starts the day right.

"I have been president of the board of education in my home town for many years and I am convinced that my constituents desire my bill enacted," says Assemblyman Tallett.

"In Greater New York the Bible is read in the public schools, and although we feared much opposition from that city no letters asking for a hearing were sent to me. The education law of New York city and that regulating the schools of the State are entirely different, hence my bill which amends the state education law. Senator Greiner's bill is identical."

After the Greiner-Tallett bill had made its appearance, Assemblyman Simon Adler of Rochester and Assemblyman Mark Goldberg of New York began to receive communications from Jewish organizations and private citizens asking for a hearing and protesting against the provisions of the measure in question. This resulted in an important amendment which has been made to the bill which removes the clause making it mandatory for the Bible to be read and gives to trustees of schools the right to determine whether or not it shall be.

Three State departments are to move on May first and the work of transferring the records of such departments has begun. The offices of the comptroller, State engineer and surveyor and State superintendent of banks are to be moved to the newly erected New York State Telephone building, which is located on State street half a block below the Capitol.

The present quarters of the three departments mentioned are to be given over to the use of the Court of Appeals. Numerous changes are to be made to the old state house which when completed will be known as the Temple of Justice. Preparations were made during the administration of former Governor John A. Dix to devote all of the space in the historic old structure to the members of the highest court in the State.

It is not expected that the present legislature will provide any funds for the acquisition of land immediately west of the Capitol upon which the proposed State office building will stand at some future time. At the present time over $150,000 is being spent yearly for the renting of quarters situated outside of the Capitol for State officials.

Not for a year or more will the Court of Appeals be moved to the Temple of Justice. It is calculated that it will take many months to remodel the old State house.

ALTON HICKS IS SENT TO ELMIRA REFORMATORY

Thomas Maers was sentenced to ten years in Auburn State prison by County Judge Coville in County Court Friday afternoon. This is the heaviest sentence imposed in some time outside of homicides and was earned by Maers because of four previous convictions. It was the minimum sentence for an habitual criminal. Good behavior an Maers' part may earn him a commutation to about seven years. He will be sent to Clinton prison at Dannemora where all third term offenders are confined.

Daniel O'Sullivan, attorney for Maers, made a plea for clemency, acknowledged that Maers had a fair trial and that he knew that the Court must give him ten years' sentence. Maers wept copiously during the proceeding but braced up when sentence was passed.

Attorney Joseph P. O'Connor made a pathetic and stirring plea for the release of his client, Alton Hicks of Virginia, charged with placing an obstruction on the O. & W. track near Fulton, and he was sentenced to the Elmira Reformatory. Good behavior will get him out in thirteen months. Mr. O'Connor wanted him sent home to his father. He said the boy never had a chance, his mother having died when he was four years old. He had been boarded out in the vicinity of his home and left to come north where he had heard there was a lot of money.

Assistant District Attorney Colony opposed clemency and said the probable consequences were too grave to be overlooked. Judge Coville said it would do the boy good to go to Elmira.

JARVIS COOPER

Jasvis Cooper, 83, died at his home, 861 Oneida st., at an earl yhour this morning.

Mr. Cooper was home in theb? (

Mr. Cooper was born in the village of Philadelphia, and later in life lived at Tonawanda before coming to Fulton last April.

Surviving is one son, Jesse A. Cooper, of this city, and six grandchildren. Mrs. Cooper died in 1907.

The funeral will be held from the home, Sunday at 4 p.m. The Rev. M. G. Buck will officiate. Interment will be made at Mt. Adnah.

LEWIS WELLS

Louis, infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Wells, died yesterday morning at the home of the parents, 62 Eleventh st. Funeral arrangements have not yet been made.

HARRIET A. OWEN

The death of Harriet A. Owen, 78, occurred this morning at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Stanley Bateman, Volney Center, after a long illness.

Mrs. Owen was one of the oldest residents of Volney. She and her husband, the late Charles Owen, having occupied the Owen and Nelson farm for a great many years.

The funeral will be held from the home Sunday at 2 p.m.

The Rev. George M. Ward will officiate. Burial will be made in Mt. Adnah.

CASSIDY'S CASE ARJOURNED

Jail Breaker Will Not Be Tried at Providence Until February 18.

Providence, R. I., Feb. 12.—Frank P. Cassidy, who escaped from the county jail in Syracuse on January 24 and who was later captured here for alleged highway robbery, did not go on trial in the Sixth District Court yesterday, as planned, his case being continued at his request for one week.

Cassidy is charged with being implicated in the holding up of a street car conductor in North Providence on January 30, John Hazard having already pleaded guilty to the charge.

The jail breaker has retained Thos. J. Dorney, a criminal lawyer, as his counsel, but Mr. Dorney is engaged in another case in the Superior Court at the present time and could not be in court. The case will come up February 18.

WATERTOWN MAN QUIETED A SUNDAY CROWD

Watertown, Feb. 12—Pulling one of Billy Sunday's song books from his pocket, Rev. James H. Larson, pastor of Emmanuel Congregational church in this city, became a powerful factor in quieting a restless spirit that prevailed in Philadelphia last Sunday morning when 5,000 or more men were standing awaiting an opportunity of entering the huge tabernacle where the noted baseball evangelist is holding his meetings. The idea caught with the men in an instant. Hardly had Rev. Mr. Larson reached the third word in the first verse of "Brighten the Little Corner Where You Are," a favorite with Sunday's crowds, that the whole mass of men lifted up their voices and joined in. The unruly feeling passed in a second.

SYRACUSE BUNDLE DAY

All organized "Bundle Day" campaign for Syracuse has been started under the direction of Mrs. Max H. Schwartz, and will be prosecuted until sufficient clothing has been collected. The bundles will then be distributed to those who are in most need of garments.

The object of the campaign is to collect warm clothing, in good condition, for men, women and children. According to Mrs. Schwartz, the need is very pressing, and many cases have been found which have not been reached by other charities.

Shoes for men are needed especially. It is said that many men out of employment have worn their shoes out tramping the streets looking for work, and it is the intention of the workers for "Bundle Day" to remedy these conditions as far as possible.

Folly of Ship Purchase Bill

In an article in the Philadelphia Public Ledger, William D. Winsor, a shipping expert, points out clearly the folly of the Government ship purchase bill. All the indications, he says, point to the intention of the Government to purchase vessels from the fleet of German steamers now interned in various ports of this country. Leaving out entirely the question of international complications which would undoubtedly arise in the event of such purchase and operation by the Government, he proceeds to consider the matter entirely from a practical business point of view.

Mr. Winsor gives the tonnage, speed in knots and first, second and steerage passenger accommodations of eight vessels of the Hamburg-American line and seven of the North German Lloyd line. The figures show that these vessels are designed and constructed primarily for passenger traffic and freight is of secondary importance. Speed is a necessary requisite, in order to obtain which the lines of the steamers are very fine and not those which give the greatest cargo capacity. Their boiler and engine power and consequent consumption of coal are very great. They are constructed in every way with a view to the carrying of passengers, and the space taken up for their accommodation is a very large percentage of the carrying capacity of the hull. To cater to the tastes of the present first-class ocean travel they are fitted in a most luxurious manner; in fact, they are floating hotels. One can hardly imagine that the ignorance and want of knowledge shown by the authorities at Washington in this matter would go so far as to lead them to engage in the passenger business, which includes transportation of immigrants in the steerage, all of which involves the establishment of thousands of agencies all over this country and Europe, to say nothing of the necessarily large stewards' department, provisioning of the ships and equipment of the table. If they did not engage in the passenger traffic everything in the equipment pertaining to this would be worse than no use and an incumbrance. Therefore, if they were confined to the freight trade, the whole equipment of each vessel would have to be torn out and the ship adapted for freight purposes, the expense of which would be enormous; and even if this were done the lines and model of the steamer would not permit of loading her to full capacity, and the expense of running her owing to her engine equipment would be very high. In view of all this, the project seems to be absolutely indefensible from a business point of view and could only result in a very great loss.

It is stated to be the intention of the administration to build up the American merchant marine. But the few steamships that we have left in the foreign trade could not contend against a Government-owned line, which made no charge in its operation of interest on investment or depreciation and which carried its own insurance. Every one of these items has got to be considered in the long run, and should they materialize they would result in a deficit which would be met by the Treasury and become the basis of further taxation. Even supposing (which Mr. Winsor does not admit) that in the abnormal condition of very high ocean rates now prevailing there should be an apparent profit, on the return to former and normal conditions the losses would be enormous for reasons already given. Competition under such conditions would be still more difficult and impossible than it is today against the subsidized lines of foreign nations, and the result would be to drive the few remaining steamships which we have left off the ocean.

Mr. Winsor says that the payment of a few millions in the way of subsidy would at once lead to the building up of the American merchant marine, and in addition to the saving of the vast sums now paid to foreign countries in freight money, our shipyards would hum with industry where thousands of wage earners would be employed, and the effect would be seen in the ore beds, the coal fields, the steel plants and all the numerous industries which contribute to the building up of a steamship. The fleet thus created would be truly American.

WITH THE SUFFRAGISTS

Mme. Emmy Destin, a Metropolitan opera prima donna, has taken out her first papers for citizenship in the United States. She says that she loves America because "it is so beautiful."

Perhaps she has been reading the clause in the Constitution which says that "no state shall pass a law abridging the privileges or immunities of citizenship," and she wants, in these troublesome times, the shelter of the American Flag. Mme. Destin is engaged to an Arabian.

Perhaps when she discovers that her marriage has made her citizenship null and void and converted her into an Arabian she may not think American "so beautiful," at least in its treatment of women citizens.

At the rate at which legislatures all over the country are giving record-breaking majorities in favor of woman suffrage, added to the fact that the great up-lift organizations of the nation are all practically on record as in its favor, and coupled with the incident that a thousand suffragists and but a hundred antisuffragists made the sacrifice of time and money involved in going to Washington and sat through the long hours of the woman suffrage debate in order to show Congress the depth of their interest in the issue—from all this we must conclude that it is no longer true to assert that the majority of the American people are not in favor of votes for women. To longer make that claim would be equivalent to admitting that representative bodies in America no longer reflect the opinions of the people.

* * *

The women of Rhode Island, Vermont, Michigan and Nebraska have taken a leaf out of the note book of the women of Illinois and are working to secure from their respective legislatures the gift of Presidential suffrage.

Heartfelt Wish.

War: Pathos and Humor

AN ARMY IN THE FOREST

By E. Ashmead-Bartlett

Special Correspondent of the International News Service and London Daily Telegraph.

Nancy, Feb. 12.—If anyone wants to see a modern army it is no use visiting the theatre of war. The only place to go is to a cinematograph show. There you will find troops marching and fighting in a manner you never see at the front. I have been motoring about Lorraine for three days. I have seen the German outposts, and in the distance the great fortress of Metz. I have been to the front French lines, or rather these lines have been pointed out to me. But I have never seen more than two or three soldiers at a time. I have seen small columns of smoke rolling upwards from the snow-clad forests, and once I caught a glimpse of what looked like a green Indian wigwam in the very outskirts of a wood, and that is all. Yet these same woods contain thousands and thousands of armed warriors ever on the look-out, who are gazing across the frontier at the other woods, which conceal countless thousands of soldiers of the Kaiser.

I once walked on what looked like a firm ground, strewn with branches of trees, and nearly fell into a pit. On looking down I saw the grim muzzle of a gun. That is all I saw of the French artillery. I am now speaking of the troops actually holding the front lines facing the German positions on the other side of the frontier. In the villages behind these lines there is plenty of life and animation. Here one sees the French Reserves making themslves as comfortable as circumstances will permit, admist the ruin of what were once the homes of a large and prosperous peasant population. Here let me say that never before have I seen such an awful state of desolation as prevails over the whole of this immense track of country over which the armies fought in August and September.

Belgium is bad enough, but French Lorraine looks exactly as if it has been devastated by a gigantic earthquake, which has shaken down all the towns and villages into a mass of shapeless, smoke-blackened ruins. The civilian population has almost entirely disappeared. They are scattered all over France, staying with friends, or in centres provided by the Government. Many of these villages were destroyed by artillery fire, or in the course of desperate hand-to-hand fights for their possession; but the majority are the deliberate work of destruction.

Apart from the absence of the civilian population and the destroyed towns and villages, the whole of this part of Lorraine presents an extraordinary spectacle, because practically every yard of it —at least, of parts we visited —has been absolutely shot to pieces by the concentrated fire of the French and German guns.

There are great shell holes everywhere. The shells remain exactly where they fell in this combat of giants. The deserted land has not since been ploughed and it is easy to follow the various phases of the battle as the tide of invasion advanced or recoiled by the deep holes made by the shrapnel and heavy artillery.

Everywhere the ground is serried with trenches, now half filled with ice and snow. You see some of these in regular formation, where the French and German infantry occupied an entrenched position, and had time to dig themselves in. Others are more shelter trenches, thrown up hastily during some attack when the advancing infantry could make no further progress, and merely tried to hold their own on the ground thus gained. The more gruesome relics of this gigantic battle are the innumerable little mounds of earth, some surmounted by crosses of wood and the kepis of the fallen. Names scrawled in pencil on these crosses are now rapidly disappearing under the stress of wind, rain and snow. Elsewhere are huge nameless graves which are filled with the unknown heroes, where friend and foe lie side by side.

The most terrible and mournful sights are those where you find hundreds of crosses concentrated in a very small area in front of some impregnable hill or wood. This is where you are told sadly by the officer who is accompanying you a great attack failed. In one lowlying valley 700 French graves lie in a space 200 yards wide and about fifty broad. This regiment attacked the Germans during a fog. They were given away by a spy, and were mowed down almost to a man. The wounded had to be left just where they fell, and most of them perished from thirst and starvation. In another small wood we were shown the treen absolutely mowed down by the French shrapnel fire. It looked as if it had been swept by some whirlwind.

A Saxon Brigade, which had taken the trenches in front, attempted a further advance in open formation followed by close columns. They were allowed to advance some distance when suddenly forty-eight of the French 75's were turned on them. They were swept away in hundreds. The men lost their heads, and ran round in circles, and then broke for cover of this woods. Here they were caught in a death-trap and over 3,000 dead bodies were interred here alone.

These are only a few of the incidents and scenes which were repeated everywhere during this awful effort of the Germans to break through the Trouee de Hirecourt, and to drive the French army into the fortress of Toul.

Nothing shows more clearly the devasting effects of modern artillery fire than the way the trees have been swept clear of their branches by the passage of the shells. The roads of Lorraine are lined on both sides by aspens. These are now in a melancholy state.

Some have been broken in half. Others have all their upper branches swept away; some have escaped altogether, and hold themselves proudly in strange contrast to their battered neighbors. Most of the main roads were half destroyed by the holes made by the shells, but those have been filled in to allow of the passage of transport and motor-cars.

When walking over the ground over which some particularly desperate fight has been waged, you have to keep a sharp look out otherwise you will very likely fall into a hole some 5 feet deep made by one of the great howitzers which has become filled up with drifting snow. Clad in its winter mantle, with an icy wind shivering through you, and deserted by all except occasional bands of soldiers quartered amidst the ruined houses, and by the few peasants who still cling to their cellars, the whole country presents to the eye an indescribable spectacle of misery and melancholy.

Standing on the summit of the hill of St. Genevieve, I had a splendid view of the ground for miles and miles around. Unfortunately, the day was not clear, but in the distance, twenty miles away, I could just discern the outline of Metz. To the north, towards the Argonne from the Boie Le Petre, the great guns were thundering away, for from this position the French artillery has already commenced to bombard the outer works of Metz.

But it must not be imagined that anything in the nature of a siege has commenced or is likely to commence. Metz will fall when peace is signed. It would require too great an army, and would lock up too many men to undertake a regular siege at this stage, when the Germans can still put formidable armies in the field.

RUSSIANS HAVE SUNK 50 TURKISH SHIPS

By Francis Lavelle Murray

Petrograd, Feb. Feb. 11.—More than fifty Turkish sailing ships have been sunk by the Russian fleet in the Black sea during its recent operations, its was officially announced at the Admiralty today. At Trebizond, which was bombarded on February 8, heavy damage was caused by the Russian warship, which succeeded in smashing three batteries operated by Ottoman gunners defending the port.

The entire shore of Asia Minor between Platana and Rize, a distance of over sixty miles, has been shelled by the Russians and three important bridges destroyed.

Details of the fleet's operations were given in the following statement issued at the Admiralty:

"On February 8 our torpedo boat destroyers in the Black Sea bombarded three of the Turkish batteries at Trebizond and wrecked them. Other heavy damage was done there. Our warships later desroyed two bridges in the region of Platana and a third to the west of Rize.

"In the course of its operations the Russian fleet sank more than fifty of the enemy's sailing ships."

Sofia, Bulgaria, Feb. 11.—A sensation was caused today by the arrest of seven men on the charge that they conspired to blow up the great government depot near Sofia. The plot was discovered when asentinel was attacked and succeeded in arresting his assailant. While the identity of the prisoners taken today was kept secret, it is rumored that they are Servians.

Nish, Servia, via London, Feb. 11—Official announcement was made here today that in an artillery battle at Orsova on the Danube river, the Austrian guns had been completely silenced and four batteries destroyed by the Servian artillery. Austrian troops tried to cross the Danube Tuesday night, but were discovered by the searchlights of the Servians and every boat was sunk.

Athens, Feb. 11.—It is reported from the Bulgarian naval patrol station at Dedeagatch that an aviator from the Anglo-French fleet in the Aegean sea flew over Constantinople and dropped bombs. It is supposed that he is one of the airmen who recently bombarded Adrianople. A number of aviators are attached to the international fleet bombarding the Turkish forts at the western end of the Dardanelles.

Private advices from Constantinople state that since Field Marshal Von der Getz of the German army has been made military dictator of the Turkish capital he has taken elaborate precautions to guard the city from aerial attacks.

It is about 170 miles from the fleet to Constantinople.

Falmouth, Eng, Feb. 11.—The cargo of the American steamship Wilhelmina was seized by order of the British Government today. Its final disposition will be decided by a prize court. The ship herself will be permitted to depart.

Berlin, Feb. 11.—Eighteen thousand canes have been donated to the German government for distribution among soldiers who have been crippled in the war. The gift came from all parts of the Empire.

FRANK ZAIA'S ASSAILANT FOUND GUILTY YESTERDAY

Oswego, Feb. 12.—Natala Muscato was tried Wednesday before Judge H. D. Coville on a charge of assault in the second degree on Frank Zaia in Fulton several months ago. Muscato has not been in custody and his case was not on the calendar for trial until Monday afternoon when he appeared in court and was arraigned. He pleaded not guilty. He is charged with having slashed Zaia across the face with a knife at Fulton on May 4 last.

Zaia alleges that Muscato came into his saloon at Fulton and after asking for a glass of beer, drew a knife and inflicted the wound. A scar extending from the left eye to the chin is visible evidence of the assault. Muscato denied that he had committed the crime, saying that he had never been in Zaia's place and does not know him. James R. Somers made a strong plea for his client.

Muscato was found guilty and was sentenced today.

It was expected that Tony Cottispotti of Fulton, indicted on a charge of perjury in connection with the Branabi assault case for swearing to an alibi for Branabi, would plead guilty this morning, but when the time came he refused. The accused did not want to be sent either to Elimira Reformatory or Auburn prison for one year. The uncertainty in this case kept the court idle after the retirement of the Muscato jury.

LACONA MILK COMPANY A PURELY LOCAL ISSUE

Oswego, Feb. 12.—The incorporation papers of the Lacona Milk Corporation were filed in the County Clerk's office yesterday. The company has a capital stock of $8,000 divided into shares of $10 each and the stock is held by residents of Lacona and vicinity. It is authorized to deal in milk and cream and milk products. There is a clause giving stockholders the right to purchase the shares of any member retiring from the company. The directors for the first year are Andy T. Blount, W. J. Snyder, Henry Snyder, W. S. Goodrich, Jay L. Upton, Roscoe Sargent, Pitt Barker, M. J. Upton and J. G. Snyder.

MASONS IN WYOMING

The Masonic Building and Redemption Fund Committee, with headquarters at the home of the chairman, E. R. Ramsey, Penn Yan, N.Y., has an up-to-date method of raising money for Masonic benefit. Mr. Ramsey and a friend, J. H. Trumbull, on a hunting trip last fall took some splendid moving pictures of the Wyoming wilderness life just as it is and just as a tenderfoot will find it if the wanderlust takes him there. These chaps spent six weeks in the famous Jackson Hole country, and had an expert camera man with them who caught everything that happened when the light permitted, and there were plenty of happenings, for he made four reels of wonderful pictures. (And that's on the square.—E. R. Ramsey, Milo, 108.) They hope to show these pictures under the auspices of 1,000 lodges, and if their ambition is achieved they will have earned many thousands of dollars for New York State lodges. The Grand Master gave his sanction, or authority, a committee was appointed, and the work is being carried forward in a very aggressive manner. This committee has planned a very careful campaign and ought to succeed for everybody interested gets a share. In addition to the local lodge's share of the box office receipts, there is a cash prize of $500 to be paid by the committee to all lodges showing the best returns per capita membership, thus giving ll lodges an equal chance. Our lodge should win this $500, for we all go to the movies, and it is said that "Two Masons in Wild Yyoming" is worth seeing more than once.

DACIA AT LAST GETS AWAY FROM AMERICA

Norfolk, Va., Feb 12.—Off on a voyage that may prove her last and one that may involve the United States in serious international complications, the American steamship Dacia steamed from this port today. She is laden with cotton. When the Dacia sailed the Stars and Stripes were flying both fore and aft. With the exception of seven me nthe crew is American. The seven are Hollanders and Swedes.

About Sports Generally

By Frank G. Menke.

New York, Feb. 12—Organized Baseball realizes now that it made a fatal error when it decided to fight the Feds instead of voting them big league membership in its organization. But it has realized it too late.

The war has cost the Organized Baseball magnates hundreds of thousands of dollars; it has overloaded their payrolls with high salaried ball players; it has robbed the game of much of its old time sentiment; it has lost to Organized Baseball many of its stars, and, before the war is over it may cost it its life.

The Feds, on the other hand, have lost but little. Some of their clubs lost money last year but that was to be expected. Any new venture must expect to suffer a financial loss in its first year's business.

Had Organized Baseball recognized the Feds a year ago or even six monthhs ago, Organized Baseball would have lost but little by that action. The Feds, of course, have two clubs in Chicago and St. Louis where Organized Baseball has two teams each but that matter could have been adjusted. Without doubt, the Feds would have been willing to shift those Chicago and St. Louis franchises to other western cities, if that had been included in the price of peace.

But Organized Baseball was bull-headed and light-headed. It didn't recognize danger even though the red lights showed. It chose to take a haughty and spoofing attitude toward the Feds. Instead of fighting the Feds it attempted either to ignore them or to frighten them by issuing silly sounding statements. Instead of battling the Feds, bankroll with bankroll, Organized Baseball stood idly by and called the Feds "jokes" while the Feds were busily engaged in capturing Organized Baseball talent.

Organized Baseball leaders were too thick headed to recognize the Federal League menace when it first appeared. Danger confronted and instead of avoiding it, Organized Baseball ran into it, full speed ahead.

The only thing the Federal League asked was major league recognition, and Organized Baseball refused it. The American and National League magnates, rather than permit anyone else in their select company, slammed shut the doors. It has paid a huge price for its action.

The Feds have been gaining in power, in prestige and in the estimation of the public each day. Each day Organized Baseball is losing in power, prestige and public esteem. Every star that leaves organized baseball and goes to the Feds strenghtens the major league claims of the Feds, and it makes Organized Baseball just that much weaker. The Feds have corraled over 100 Organized Players and they haven't ceased their raiding tactics.

The public for a long, long time exhibited only a passive interest in the Feds. It believed what some of the Organized Leaders said—that the Feds were jokes, that the league was a "fly-by-night" proposition and was sure to bust any minute. But a great change has come in public sentiment in the last few months.

The Feds, by completing the 1914 season, convinced the skeptics of their intended permanency in the baseball world. The Feds have convinced the public of the truth of their early assertions—that they have unlimited bankrolls and that they intend to get every organized baseball star that money can induce.

The organized magnates, if you have noticed, no longer spoof the Feds; no longer do they try to assure you that the Feds are just a laughing matter. They are awake to the peril now—very widely awake. But they have aroused from the coma a bit too late.

The Feds are here—and they are going to stay, and the public, won by the game, winning fight the Feds have made, repat for them the toast that Rip Van Winkle once drank—"May you live long—and may you prosper."

HOT LINERS

By Frank G. Menke.

Suppose our pal, Jack Johnson, in his Senegambian way,
Should carry out the threat he made down South the other day,
And make the trip to Mexico high up by aeroplane,
To dodge the Carranzistas who to capture him are fain;
We have hunch (a good strong hunch) that muddles would arise,
When folks looked up and saw this cloud go sailing through the skies,
The weather prophets sure would hoist the flags for gales,
While captains far out in the sea would bellow like bull whales.
But maybe when all's said and done these signals may prove right
For Mr. Willard when he meets J. Johnson in their fight.

Willie Ritchie has visions of knocking out Freddie Welsh and regaining the championship. Wonder how Willie is going to do it in ten rounds when he couldn't do it in twenty before?

The National league magnates are likely to endorse a "votes for women" movement. They are all het up after the way they were addressed by Mrs. Melon Britton, their fellow magnate. The owner of the Cardinals batted a thousand and showed that she knew baseball from A to Z.

The Yankees ought to be a good ball team this year—they have an angel on the team, in the person of Aragon, the Cuban infielder.

FROM BRAVE TO FED.

Springfield, Mass., Feb. 12.—Leslie Mann, outfielder of the Boston Braves, ha signed a two year contract with the Chicago Federals, according to a Chicago Federals according to a statement made yesterday by Channing Mann, a brother of the player. Channing stated that Mann will get about the same salary he was to have received from the Boston club—$3000. In the Federal contract there is no ten days' clause. Mann received a bonus of $1000.

MEETING OF CREDITORS

Notice received Wednesday of a call for the Canadian creditors of the Battle Island Paper Company at Chicoutimi on February 18th at 10 a.m. to consider a judgment rendered in the Superior Court of the District of Chicoutimi on January 23d, 1915, in favor of Agesilas Lepage for $36,950.43, the amount due for the labor of cutting the pulpwood that for a year past has lain the Mars river. The wood has a value exceeding $50,000.

Capturing a Bride

Failure Meant Her Death.

By ESTHER VANDEVEER

On the western coast of Central America is a tribe of Indians who are very proud of their ancestry, tracing it to the Aztecs, who were a semi-civilized people. They trade with other races, but marry only among themselves. Nature in tropical climates supplies food in such superabundance that the natives may exchange what they don't need for what will provide other necessaries than food.

The principal food produced among this tribe of Central America is cocoanuts. The Indians do not need to climb the trees to gather them, for when they are ripe they fall to the ground. All day at the harvest season there is a constant dropping, and at night one who is unaccustomed to the sound will be kept awake by it.

There seems to be a natural law that those who don't have to work for a living consider themselves better than those who do. Whether it was this immunity from labor or the fact of the blue Aztec blood in their veins, these Indians would admit of no union among their people with any other. Their cocoanuts brought ships to their shores, and the sailors necessarily came ashore to load them. This was always done by daylight, but when night came every man on the island must leave.

The Aztecs described by the Spanish conquerors were a delicately made race, and some of their women in their dusky way were beautiful. So it was with these Indians of Central America. They would go to the shore in groups while the sailors were loading their boats with cocoanuts, and doubtless there were glances between them and the Jack tars. But the girls knew that there must be no further courting, for should there be the life of one or both would be forfeited.

One day a ship was loading cocoanuts on the shore of these proud people. Several girls stood on the bank watching the yawls come to the beach, take on a load of cocoanuts and start back for the ship. This getting a boat over the breakers is always an entertaining sight. Several men walking in the shallow water would push the boat out to where the oars might take hold; then the oarsmen, watching an opportunity between waves, would pull lustily in order to pass the next wave before it broke. Unless the boat was skillfully handled it was liable to be capsized.

The morning when the girls were watching the sailors the breakers were quite high. The rudder of a boat coming from the ship was unshipped by striking a bar a short distance from the shore, and the coxswain not being able to keep her straight for the shore, her side was turned to the incoming waves, and she was capsized. Some of the men in her got ashore, and some were drowned. One was washed ashore some distance below where the boat was to have landed. There he lay, rolled hither and thither by each succeeding line of foam that slid high up on the beach.

The men who succeeded in getting ashore alive were helped by the girls, who waded into the water for the purpose. One girl, seeing the body that had been washed ashore some distance from the others, ran to him.

Lying unconscious on the sands, his light curly hair stirred by the ever moving water, he was a picture of manly beauty. He was Ned Phillips, considered by his mates the daredevil of their number. He never went ashore that he did not get into a scrape and on several occasions had been saved by some of them from getting killed.

The girl kneeled by him and lifted his head in her arms. Whether it was their warmth or the change of position or that he had been revived by the air, he opened his eyes and looked into a dusky face with sympathetic eyes, all of which seemed very beautiful to him. He had become exhausted shortly before being thrown up on the beach and was therefore not very far gone. He returned the look of sympathy with one of gratitude, admiration, love. Then, staggering to his feet, he pulled himself together, and the two rejoined the others.

But Ned was not in condition for anything but rest. He lay down on the sand, and the girl who had raised him from the water sat by him and fanned him with a tropical leaf. For a time the other girls stood about them looking down at Ned's pale face and limp figure. But young people soon detest the mating of those about them, and one by one the girls stole away and left them together. Presently one of the other girls came and whispered something in the ear of Ned's mate, and with a frightened look she rejoined the others. Some native men were coming.

In due time, the sea having gone down, the process of loading was resumed. Phillips, with two other men who had suffered by the spill, was left on shore to recuperate. This was bad policy so far as he was concerned, for the girls resumed their position as watchers, and Ned caught a few moments when no native men were present to endeavor by signs and a few Spanish words he knew—some of which the girl who had taken him in her arms understood—that he was grateful.

Forbidden fruit is the sweetest. This girl knew that by encouraging this white man she was bringing upon herself the penalty of death, and Ned, too, was aware of the fact. While native men were present both were circumspect; when no one except sailors saw them they failed to conceal the bonds that were quickly being bound around them.

An old adage is "Love laughs at locksmiths." There were no locks and keys for these lovers, but there were plenty of persons to note what was going on between them. How they managed to secure a few moments now and again without being seen by any of the natives or whether they were seen by some who did not betray them is a matter which does not appear. The sailors would do anything in their power to protect Ned, and it may be that the girl had friends of her own sex who would screen her.

The weather proving at times unpropitious the loading of the ship was delayed, and Ned Phillips' love affair had time to grow strong. Either luck favored him or friends helped the pair to avoid detection until the ship was ready to sail; then the storm broke over the heads of the white sailor and the Indian girl.

Ned had become so infatuated that he resolved to attempt to carry his love away with him. The girl, though loath to leave those who had been all the world to her for a new life of which she knew nothing, was ready to make the plunge, though she realized that if she failed in the attempt her life would be forfeited. The evening before the ship was to sail Ned pulled ashore alone in one of the ship's boats. The Indian girl was concealed in a grove of cocoanut trees some fifty yards from the verge. She had recently been suspected and was watched by one who saw her enter the grove. When this person saw Ned coming he gave the alarm, but too late to prevent the girl from getting into the boat.

There was but little sea rolling, and Ned was pulling from the shore when a short distance up the beach the girl saw a party of Indian men hurrying a canoe to the water. A race was at hand, with two lives at stake. Ned's muscle was equal to a spirited pull, and he gave way at once with all his strength. The girl sat in the stern and covered her face with her hands.

A ship's boat is not usually made for one pair of oars. Although Ned had the smallest one of the lot, it was very heavy. But so much depended upon the effort that he had strength far beyond what was natural to him. His distance from the ship was a trifle less than that of the natives, but they could pull much faster than he. They were gaining on him, and he saw that despite the marvelous effort he was putting forth they would intercept him when the girl, who faced the ship, took her hands from her eyes, and a newly awakened hope shone in her face. Ned burned to have a look at what she saw, but dared not cease rowing long enough to do so. But by signs she contrived to tell him that a boat was being lowered from the ship, and in another moment it was full of men and coming toward them.

There were now two points at issue—first, to save their lives the lovers must meet the ship's boat before the Indians could overtake them; second, if they succeeded in this a fight must occur between the rescue party and the pursuers. On came the sailors, now and again some one of the oarsmen in his haste striking the water and sending up the spray. On came the Indians, paddling carefully, but rapidly. Ned could see only the latter and knew that unless his friends were pretty near it would be all up with him and his love.

He saw a man in the bow of one of the canoes raise a spear and aim it at the girl. While it was coming from the canoe Ned turned the boat just in time to save her. The man took up another spear and was about to hurl it when there was a report, and the spearman dropped. He had been shot from the ship's boat.

The three boats now came together. The canoe contained, among others, the father of the girl, who was bent on killing both his daughter and the man who was carrying her away from her people. The sailors, not wishing to kill the Indians, fought with their oars. The Indians had had time only to collect a few spears, and they were soon sinking to the bottom without having done any serious damage. Ned kept his eye on any one who showed signs of injuring the girl, and no sooner was a blow aimed at her than he parried it with his oar. Finally with a blow he sent one of her enemies into the water and upset the canoe.

This ended the fight. While the Indians were hanging on to their canoe a man in the ship's boat threw Ned a rope. All gave way, and Ned and the girl were pulled to safety.

When the lovers were taken aboard the ship the crew, who had been watching the flight and the fight, greeted them with a lusty cheer. Even the captain, whose duty it was to keep his men from interfering with the natives, with whom he traded, could not refrain from a hearty welcome.

Contrary to what might have been expected, the match turned out a happy one. Ned concluded to leave a seafaring life and settled down on the coast of New England, where he engaged in fishing. He has accumulated some means and owns the house in which he lives. He has several stalwart sons and comely daughters of a darker hue than himself, but lighter than their mother, to whom he has often told the story of how she was captured with a death penalty hanging over her.

FALLING A MILE.

Curious Effect of Dropping Rocks Down a Deep Mine Shaft.

In reference to the deep mine shafts at Calumet some experiments conducted by members of the faculty of the Michigan College of Mines are interesting. It had been noticed that in the vertical shafts at the Tamarack mine if some ore or rock were spilled near the surface men working in the bottom of the shaft a mile below were not much bothered and sometimes only observed "a little dust." It is stated that a car of broken rock could be dumped into the shaft without injury to a man standing directly underneath a mile down.

The reason is that the rock would never reach the bottom, but would lodge in the sides of the shaft on the timbers that protrude a few inches at intervals—that is, the rock would not fall straight, since these shafts are exactly vertical.

In the experiments conducted two round metal balls were dropped into the center of a shaft by burning threads by which they were suspended, so as to give them no lateral motion. It was tried to catch the balls in a box of clay in the bottom of the shaft. None of them was caught. One ball was never found afterward. The other was found in the east wall of the shaft only a few hundred feet below the surface.

The explanation is that the earth is revolving from west to east, which gave the ball an eastward component in its fall because a particle on the surface of the earth is traveling at a higher rate of speed than one nearer the center, although at the same angular velocity. Thus a ball or rock dropped in the shaft will strike the east wall a few hundred feet from the surface, possibly then rebounding several times in its drop until it lodges on a timber or on a level.—Engineering Magazine.

THE FREEZING OF LIGHT.

Radium Rays Congeal at a Temperature of Minus 312 Degrees.

The world stood with gaping mouth and baited breath when science announced the phenomenon of frozen air, but wonderment has probably reached its limit when one learns that such an intangible and weightless thing as light has been frozen.

It is customary to speak of the enormous generative power of heat, but more astounding still is the fact that by means of cold a force may be imprisoned and retained which when liberated traverses space at a velocity of 186,000 miles per second.

Like all great discoveries, the process is exceedingly simple and based upon formulas that one marvels at not having been employed long ago. Radium emits light which is called "emanation," and this "emanation" is nothing more or less than a gas. It is possible to freeze all gases, and when "emanation" is subjected to a temperature of 312 degrees below zero it becomes congealed.

The strangest feature of the phenomenon, however, is to be observed when the "emanation" commences to thaw, when from the surface of the surrounding liquid air brilliant spangles of light streams upward, producing a most beautiful and dazzling effect.—Birmingham Age-Herald.

An Appeal to Vanity.

A Mussulman general gained a victory over the Greeks and captured their leader. Having summoned the prisoner into his tent, he asked him what treatment he expected from his conqueror. "If you make war like a king," replied the Greek, "release me; if you make it like a trader, sell me; if you make it like a butcher, slaughter me." The Mussulman pensioned the

FOR SLENDER WOMEN.

Though Somewhat Passe, the Tunic Has Many Charms.

GOWNS AND SKIRTS MORE.

Fashion is expected to swing away from the tunic, but many tunics and tiered gowns will doubtless be worn for a time. Certain designers still favor them, and certain types of women still find them becoming. There is no doubt that they are a boon to the very slim. The gown pictured here is an evening model in satin with silver embroidered overdress of gauze. A drapery of the embroidered gauze over the shoulders maintains the sleeveless effect. Charming and artistic, this gown is of almost Greek simplicity in line.

It was at one time the practice to allow the inmates of the Abraham ward of Bethlehem hospital, London, to go about begging for the benefit of the hospital. Certain vagrants imposed on the charitably inclined by pretending to be actual inmates and were there-fore known as "Abram-men," hence the term Abram-man, one who obtains money by shamming sickness.—London Express.

The Supreme Test.

"Do you think Grace Brown is perfect, my son?"

"Why, yes, mother."

"Have you given her temper the supreme test?"

"What's that, mother?"

"Calling up a wrong number on the telephone with a cross operator at the other end and somebody trying to break in on the line."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Twixt Scylla and Charybdis.

"What are you so worried about?"

"My rich uncle wants to see me about his will and I'm afraid if I tell him that I am doing well that he will leave his money to his poor relations, while if I say that I am not doing well he'll leave it to a worthier one than myself."—Philadelphia Ledger.

WHY RIVERS OVERFLOW.

Some Streams Make Their Beds Too Small For Flood Tides.

"A river is not made to order. It is nothing more nor less than the accidental path made by water in following the line of least resistance," writes Arthur E. Morgan in an article on "Why Rivers Overflow," published in the Scientific American. Mr. Morgan goes on to show that the average river has found or made a channel that suffices for it in ordinary times, but that in flood tide is not large enough to carry off the water. Some of the figures he gives explain perfectly why certain rivers are in the habit of overflowing.

The Coldwater river, where it enters the flat lands from the hills in northern Mississippi, has a capacity of 900 cubic feet per second when full to the top of its banks. At maximum flood, however, 100,000 cubic feet per second pour down it, and it has to overflow.

The St. Francis river on the boundary between Arkansas and Missouri can take care of from 500 to 5,000 cubic feet per second, but in flood-time it has 160,000, and the surplus must overflow. The Miami river in Ohio has a normal capacity, varying at different points from 6 per cent to 5 per cent of its maximum overflow. The Mississippi, near the mouth of the Red river, has a normal flow of 200,000 cubic feet a second; when full to the top of its banks it can carry about 1,000,000 cubic feet. When all its tributaries are in flood it has to carry 2,500,000 cubic feet a second. As its banks are higher than the surrounding plains, these inevitably receive the overflow.

Homemade Silver Polish.

To make the best silver polisher and cleaner known, take a bottle of ammonia as sold in most grocery stores, and to this add two ounces of whiting, and just a few drops of oxalic acid. In this way you will procure for the expenditure of 15 cents as much of the best silver polish as can be purchased for $1 in most of the prominent drug stores. This same polish is so cheap when homemade that the housewife will not find it too expensive to use it in polishing all of the cutlery and also the brass doorknobs or any other bright metal fixtures about the house.—National Magazine.

A Woman's Strategy.

"I once heard of a sadly henpecked man who made friends with a mouse, and by keeping the little animal always about him he contrived to get the upper hand."

Points for Mothers

Presidential Game.

"Who's who?" is a good game for Feb. 22. One may easily obtain penny pictures of United States presidents. Secure about six sets of, say, Washington, Jefferson, Lincoln, Grant, Cleveland, McKinley, Roosevelt, Taft and Wilson.

Paste these pictures on cardboard. Then cut them in quarters and shuffle them together on a large table. Let the contestants work in couples around the large table. To the couple who first succeed in completing a set goes an appropriate prize, such as a neatly framed print of Washington for the boy and a box of candy tied with patriotic ribbon for the girl.

Naming the presidents is an instructive games. The children choose sides for this just as in the old fashioned spelling match. After the sides have been chosen the hostess names one side Republican, the other Democratic. She tells them she wants to find out which party is most familiar with the full names of the presideuts of the United States from George Washington down to Woodrow Wilson. Paper and pencils are provided each contestant. The winning party, of course, is the one whose papers show the greater number of correctly named presidents.

This game may be followed by an individual contest on the naming of all the states in the Union, the prize going to the one who first completes the task.

Nursery Play Tray.

A truly invaluable nursery possession is a tray of sand which will fit upon a child's small table or even rest solidly upon the floor. The tray should have upright borders not less than four inches in height—and a little higher is better—and should contain a heap of clean sand. This, when slightly moistened, can be "built" into all manner of fascinating objects, from the elementary "castle" of babyhood to a complete railway line, with station, bridges and tunnel, through which toy trains can be run, or the daintiest of miniature gardens planted with twigs and leaves and bordered with massive "rocks" formed of stones, over which more flowers will trail, or a fortified town in which the soldiers, with cannon and the rest—naturally so popular this year—can attack and defend to the endless amusement of the young owner. This tray need take up no appreciable room when not in use, for the little owner can soon be taught to scoop the sand up and put it in a closed receptacle. Then the empty tray may stand quite out of the way until the next time it is used.

Washington's Birthday Party.

At a children's party one hostess supplied the little girls with colonial caps patterned after the kind that Martha Washington affected, with a fichu or kerchief made of white crape paper. A belt, a sword and a cocked hat were given to each small boy.

Thus adorned, the youngsters were seated at a round table, in the center of which was a huge Jack Horner cherry pie made of red crape paper and trimmed in artificial cherries and surmounted with figures of George and Martha. From this centerpiece extending to every child's plate were narrow red ribbons. At the hostess' signal the pie was opened, every child pulled on his ribbon and extracted from the pie a little prize.

Cherry Tree Game.

Cutting down the cherry tree is an amusing game for Washington's birthday. A small tree or shrub from which all the lower branches have been cut is set in a deep box of sand and two strong cleats nailed to it on each side and to the top edge of the box. Each contestant is blindfolded, given a small toy hatchet and told to cut down the tree.

If he succeeds in knocking it down, which he can do if he strikes exactly parallel with the cleats, he receives as a prize one of the imitation bark covered stumps filled with bonbons.

The fun of the game is in watching the ridiculous antics of the contestants in hitting out at empty air.

Nice Hair Ribbons.

A little girl's hair ribbon musses very quickly if tied each time it is used. Instead of tying make the ribbon into a bow and tie the latter to the hair with a short piece of baby ribbon, the same color as the bow, slipped through the knot. By this means the bow is fastened to the hair securely and is always kept fresh.

Keeping Baby In Bed.

To prevent a baby from rolling off a bed spread a large cotton quilt or piece of denim between the springs and the mattress, letting it hang over the sides to a depth of twenty inches or more. Sew strong tapes firmly to each corner of the quilt or cloth, turn upward and then tie securely to the bedposts.

Drying Children's Hair.

Drying the children's hair will not take half as long if the towels are heated. With a radiator it is a simple matter to keep several towels warm, and by using them in rotation it is surprising how fast the hair may be dried. Do not have them too hot, but quite warm.

ALBANY LETTER DAY BY DAY

Cardoze Tells Time' Readers the Doings of Officials and Lawmakers

BY FREDERIC T. CARDOZE

Albany, Feb. 12.—Perhaps the most pertient illustration of the spirit of economy which has been incorporated in the very being of the State officials from the highest to the most humble, is the letter which chairman Walter W. Law of the assembly committee on penal institutions has sent out to the members of that committee.

The letter,which follows, brought the committeemen face to face with the fact that this year legislative junkets will be expensive and not mere time-killing, luxurious excursions which would be paid for by the state.

"The Committee on Penal Institutions," reads the letter, "has arranged to visit Sing Sing prison on Thursday, the 8th of February. It is proposed to leave Albany at 8:10 in the morning. Lunch will be provided in the prison and the return trip can be made so as to reach the Albany at about in the evening. As there is no appropriation from which the traveling expenses of the members can be paid, it will be necessary for each member to pay his own railroad fare."

Never before has such a letter unfolded before the eyes of New York state legislators and the members of the committee on Penal Institutions are wondering whether it is within their rights to decline the invitation with thanks.

Chairman Law expects to take the majority of the members of the committee to Ossining with him, the personal levy notwithstanding. He says that in that it is the duty of the committee of which he is the chairman to pay an annual visit of inspection to Sing Sing prison, such visit will be made.

"I know that it is rather unusual to ask the members of the committee to pay their own car fare," said he, "but there is no other way. I thought it best to notify the members who are on my committee that they would be expected to meet their own expenses so far as transportation is concerned; most of them were surprised."

It is expected that State Superintendent of Prisons John B. Riley will accompany the legislative committee upon its pilgramage. Superintendent Riley will conduct the law-makers all over the grim stone building where nearly twelve hundred prisoners are confined. Warden Thomas Mott Osborne, the millionaire warden will also be on hand to explain the reforms which he advocates.

Just why no money has been set aside to pay the expenses of the committee on penal institutions is not explained. During previous years there has always been a fund available for just such a purpose. The junkets of legislative, committee have been among the pleasurable incidents in connection with legislation. Charged with the duty of making everybody comfortable, the sergeant-at-arms has in the past made elaborate arrangements for the well being of the members of this or that committee and it has never been noised about that there was any lack of good cheer in spite of the pilgramages of the past.

In order to take his committee to the soldiers home at Bath. Chairman Montgomery found it necessary to pass a resolution passed by the assembly appropriating $500 for that purpose. There are eleven members of the committee.

Chairman Law of the committee on penal institutions for some reason or other did not offer a similar resolution. Instead he informed each member of his committee to the effect that the situation required them to pay their own car fares. Assemblyman Law makes no other explanation than the contents of his letter.

White Plains, N. Y., Feb. 12.—Fearing that Frederick Mors, confessed killer of eight aged inmates of the Odd Fellows' home, that he would take his life the authorities of West Chester count today placed a guard in the cell with him. A move will be made immediately to have Mors indicted by the Grand Jury, and in the meantime every effort is being made to substantiate the tale told by the prosecution.

EARTHQUAKE SHOCK IN CANAL ZONE

Panama, Feb. 12.—A slight earthquake shock was felt in the canal zone today. The canal was not damaged.

LATE WAR BULLETINS

Paris, Feb. 12.—The Germans are again bombarding Tracy-le-Mont, says an official statement issued by the War Office this afternoon.

The statement follows:

"Between the sea and the river Somme there were artillery conflicts yesterday. To the south of Las Boisselle the enemy exploded a mine at the ned of our trenches, but we nevertheless maintained our position. From the Somme to the Argonne there is nothing to report, except the bombardment at Tracy-Le-Mont by the enemy and the activity of our own artillery near Rheims and Soissons. In the Wolver there was a vigorous cannonade on the part of the Germans before Rambucourt and the woods of Las Hazelle."

Amsterdam, Feb. 12.—A Sluis dispatch says that heavy gun firiing is again being heard along the Belgian coast. tI is believed that guns from the English warships are agin bombarding towns held by the Germans.

Amsterdam, Feb. 12.—Large bodies of German troops are being taken from the West Flanders war zone for service in the Eastern theatre of war. Railway traffic has been suspended for several days. From February 1 to February 6 large forces were transferred from the western theatre of war to East Prussia.

Berlin, Feb. 12, via Amsterdam.—Emperor William left again today for the eastern theatre of war.

GERMAN BRIGADE SHOT TO PIECES AT BAGATELLE

By Franklin P. Merrick.

Paris, Feb. 12.—Whipped to a standstill in the most violent artillery duel in Alsace since the war started, the Germans at the other end of the line today violently bombarded Nieuport and the banks of the Yser, where the allies are entrenched. No material damage was done to the Germans' big guns. The allies' fire, it is stated, was most effective.

Tremendous slaughter marks the terrific battel around Bagatelle.

After four days of desperate fighting, the Argenne battle reached its climax when the Germans charged down on the French fortifications at Marie Therese in solid column, four abreast, across a front more than 500 yards wide. The guns of the fort poured a deadly shell fire into the solid ranks as they were well within range. The line of columns wavered under the withering fire, but they still came on. When within easy rifle range the quickfierers and musketry of the French sent in a shower of bullets that was a veritable hurricane of death.

The carnage was more than human courage could withstand and column after column broke, crumbled and turned leaving large number of dead on the field.

The Germans engaged numbered a full brigade.

Renewing the battle, the Germans attacked with artillery and bombs hurled by mortars. The Germans were rolled back.

MORE BIG GERMAN GUNS ARE TRAINED ON WARSAW

Berlin, Feb. 12.—Fighting in Poland between the Russians and German troops continues with unabated violence, according to official advices received here today. The advices state that the Germans have made some progress toward Warsaw and have brought up some big guns to attack the forts about that town. The Germans recognize that it will be necessary for them to capture the widely extending field of forts around Warsaw before it will be possible to capture the inner forts.

BRITISH PASS WAR MEASURE

London, Feb. 12.—The transfer of any British ship, registered in the United Kingdom, or any share therein, to persons who are not qualified to own such vessels, is made prohibitive in a bill effective today. The only exception is that the board of trade may approve such transfer.

Any person making such transfer, without this approval will be guilty of a misdemeanor. The bill is effective during the continuation of the war.

GERMAN BLOCKADE THREAT MAKES FEW EXCEPTIONS

Copenhagen, Feb. 12.—That Germany did not mean that the blockade of the English coast should make neutral trade impossible was the statement published today in the Neue Hamburger Zeitung. The paper says that the German declaration was meant as a warning to neutrals against the dangers in the Englishh waters and that Germany would not accept the responsibility for the safety of neutral ships sailing in these waters.

There was no talk about hostile measures being taken against neutral shipping, the papers states, the German admiralty's intention bein gto refrain from such measures, provided neutral ships by mutual understanding do not carry contraband.

IMPEACHMENT PROCEEDINGS

Parkersburg, W.V., Feb. 12.—Taking of testimony in the impeachment charges against Judge A. G. Bacon of the United States District Court was begun here today by a subcommittees of the Judiciary committee of the House of Representatives composed of Congressman McGillicudy of Maine, Danforth of New York and Card of Ohio. The proceedings had their origin in the labor unions of Wheeling and grew out of a coal strike of coal miners and colliers.

The men of Zion Episcopal church will hold an informal social Tuesday evening at the rector's residence, 3d and Cayuga sts.

STATE CONVENTION BILL MAKES ITS APPEARANCE

Albnay, Feb. 12.—The return of the State Convention is provided for in a bill to be introduced in the Senate by Senator Argetsimger.

The measure is now in the hands of the bill drafting commitee make other amendments to the election law. Drastic amendments to the election law are provided for in the Republican platform for the present administration and the Argetsimger bill is said to be a measure favored by that party.

NEW SPANISH SHIP YARDS AT BILBOA

London, Feb. 12.—The Times says that a Spanish naval construction company is erectein, at Bilboa, Spain, ship building yards for the construction of merchant vessels. Among the first to be built will be 20 liners for a trans-Atlantic company. Sixty per cent. of the capital for the new yards is held by Spaniards and the remainder by several of the leading ship building firms of England.

WILHELMIINA OWNERS ASK FOR MORE TIME

London, Feb. 12.—American Ambassador Page today as instructed by the State Department to ask the Foreign Office to delay for a short period the placing of the case of the the cargo of the steamer Wilhelmina in prize court for adjudication; in order that the owners of the cargo may have further time in which to make out a strong case.

CHLOROFORM IN FICTION.

It Acts in a Manner That Surprises the Medical Experts.

Every now and then stories appear about individuals and even whole households being chloroformed by enterprising burglars. A report of that kind in New York city induced the New York Herald to interview a number of experts on the subject with the result of obtaining a verdict that should effectively dispose of that sort of fiction for all time, but probably will not, as previous exposures have failed.

These medical witnesses pointed out it generally requires the undivided attention of two surgeons and several nurses to induce a willing patient to yield to the fumes. If, it is suggested, the burglars have found a more expeditious mode of administration the medical world would be glad to hear of it. Dr. James J. Walsh, an authority on anaesthesia, said that the application of a chloroform soaked cloth to a victim's nostrils would produce a burning sensation that would at once arouse the sleeper.

Dr. J. T. Gwathmey, author of a text book on anaesthesia, said bluntly that it is not possible to chloroform a grown person while asleep. Another expert said he could not see how a person could be anaesthetized without realising the fact and instances a slight woman patient who required four attendants to hold her while being put under the influence of chloroform on the operating table.

Tales of wholesale chloroforming, either by saturated cloths or atomizers, may therefore, in view of this testimony, be relegated to the realm of the imaginary.

Sheridan's Spelling.

The author of "The School For Scandal" had highly original views on the rules of spelling. In his "Critic" days, for instance, a "thing" to Sheridan was always a "think," and never by any chance did he remember that a "which" or a "where" to be really respectable must needs possess an "aitch" apiece. This rule of omission he also followed, sheeplike, in "wether" for "whether." Moreover, he scorned the use of a double "m" or a double "s." For example, "blessedness" was always "blesedness."

VON BERNSDORFF WARNS THE U. S.

He Anticipates England's Probable Action and Threatens Suffering to American Shipping

Washington, Feb. 13.—The German Government today warned the United States that if the British Government does not permit the steamer Wilhelmina with her cargo of foodstufts to go through to German the Berlin authorities in retaliation against England my indirectly have a serious effect upon American shipping. Count Von Bernsdorff, German Ambassador acting on instructions from the German Foreign Office urged Secretary Bryan to call Great Britain's attention to the German Government's guarantee that the Wilhelmina 's cargo be used only for the civilian population of Germany. He impressed upon Secretary Bryan the advisability of accepting this guarantee. The German Ambassador suggested that serious consequences would follow an unfavorable decision in the prize court in the Wilhelmina case.

German's position as outlined by Secretary Bryan is that the United States which is vitally concerned in the continuance of neutral trade, "Should not acquisece in any action by Great Britain designed to starve out the civil population of Germany.

Vn Bernsdorff declared that if the British Prize Court should uphold the seizure of the Wilhelmina's cargo such measures will be taken at once as Germany finds most expedient to retailiate. He emphasized the Statement that such steps would operate against the interest of the United States Government.

He said further to satisfy England that the German guarantees were bona-fide, the German Government is willing that consular agents of the United States would supervise the distribution of the cargo when it reaches its destination.

NEUTRAL NATIONS LOOKING TO U. S.

Washington, Feb. 13.—Satisfied with the general approval given in this country to the notes sent to Germany and England serving notice that thiis government proposes to uphold its rights on the high seas, the administration today awaited official word from its ambassadors at Berlin and London.

Opinions of diplomats varied as to the nature of the replies from Germany and Great Britain, but the reports of the neutral nations appeared to be a unit in approving the strong tone of the American notes.

There were suggestions in governmen circles that the lead of the United States would be followed by other nations not at war. It was intimated that the three Scandanavian countries particularly might be expected to join in representations to both Germany and Great Britain. Separate suggestions from other neutral countries followed the arguments in the American note also were regarded as strong possibilities.

Emphasis today was placed by administration officials on the point that in the note to Germany that this government took a firm stand on international right, long established nd backed up by precedented almost without number. This is that a merchant vessel having no means of protectin gherself frim an attack by a warship, must be given the right to surrender and thus protect her passengers and crew before bein fired on.

It also was suggested that the sending of a strong warning to Germany was recognized by the administration as necessary to guard aginst the development of a critical situation, should an American ship be sunk, such as arose following the blowing up of the Maine in Havana Harbor.

CHASSEURS OPEN PATH THAT LEADS TO RHINE

By FRANKLIN P. MERRICK.

Paris, Feb. 13.—By a brilliant charge in snowclad Alsace the French chasseurs captured a high spur north of Hartmannsweiler Kopf, driving out the Germans and inflicting severe losses on them. The position, which is 2889 feet above sea level was held by the Germans in force and the attack was mde under difficulties beacuse of the rugged and wooded nature of the slopes, which are covered with snow.

The hardy chasseurs, however, who have distinguished themselves more than once during the war, again demonstrated their worth. Their victory will be great help in the French in their drive through upper Alsace toward the Rhine.

The German infantry attacks along the battle front has not diminished in activity. The Kaiser's forces are resorting to the throwing of bombs and hand grenades.

The German offensive in the Argonne is becoming active, according to unofficial reports, nd General Joffre is making efforts to combat the movement.

Constantinople, via Berlin and Amsterdam, Feb. 13.—The Porte has forwarded a protest to neutral countries against the Russins on account of their sinking of the American steamer Washington, which was reported to have been sunk in the Black sea by Russian warships.

GERMAN AIRCRAFT, TAKEN UNAWARES, FAIL TO FOIL BOLD BRITISH AVIATORS

England's Time For Boasting Has Come; Fears Dissipated of a Complete German Blockade

By HERBERT TEMPLE.

London, Feb. 13.—All England is rejoicing today. The successful raid by British airships on the Germans' position in Belgium has given the public confidence that the country will be able to check the threatened blockade of the British isles by the Germans.

The raid was the greatest in the history of the war. Over thirty aeroplanes and seplanes, under command of Wing Commander Sampson, took part in the raid and not a single machine or pilot was lost. Two machines were damaged. Claude Graham-White had the misfortune to fall into the sea, but he and his plane were rescued by a French gunboat off Nieuport and taken into Dunkirk.

The public is awaiting more details of the successful raid. From the official report issued of the raid it is known that the English raiders covered a wide area in their operation and inflicted great damage on these positions in Belgium held by the Germans.

German gun positions in various towns were assailed and British observers report that they left behind them a train of ruins and burning buildings from which German soldiers were driven in dismay by the hail of deadly missiles.

Middlekerke, Bruges, Ostend and Blankenburgh, were the principal points of attack. Other small places where German troops were assembled, were also targets for the British explosives.

The German air pilots were taken unawares and no hostile craft was encountered by the British. The German artillery—men and those in charge of the air craft guns mounted in every occupied Belgian town were surprised, too, and did not open until the British had swept by and the damage had been done.

The raid is an evidence that England intends to wage unrelenting war upon the German submarines. It is reported that a strong force of destroyers has been ordered to patrol duty with a view of keeping their submarines out of French and British waters.

London papers are filled with praise for the daring aviators, nd say that the success attending the raid will bring dismay to the heart of the Germans.

"The Germans may boast, but they are not to have their own way in the operations intended for next week," says the Chronicle.

PETROGRAD SCENTS OFFICIAL DECEPTION

Public Has Lost Patience With Those Responsible for False Reports of Invasion

Petrograd, Feb. 13.—Gloom pervaded the Russian capital today. Despite the Russians retirement from East Prussia which was for the purpose of choosing their own battleground, the public is showing uneasiness over the situation. They cannot understand why after receiving optimistic reports of the steady advance of the Czar's forces in to German territory the statement he issued showing that the offensive of the Russians was kept back, and that they were driven 80 miles into their own territory.

The determined nature of the German operations in the Mazurian lakes has been effective. It is believed here that this latest move is but the beginning of a series of active operations which may definitely settle the struggle on the Eastern Prussian frontier.

GREECE DEMANDS OF TURKS REPENTANCE

Athens, Feb. 13.—Greece has lodged a vigorous protest with Turkey against the action of the secret police in Constantinople in insulting M. Panas, the Greek minister. The Grand Vizier has expressed his regret over the incident and replied to the Greek protest that he would bring the matter to the notice of his government immediately.

The following reparation is demanded by Greece:

That the prefect of police pay personal visit to M. Panas and in the presence of the entire staff of the Greek legation ak pardon for the incident;

That the person guilty of the insult be dismissed immediately, be brought before a court and punished;

That the Turkish government publish a statement making known what satisfaction has been given.

The Turkish government, it is said, will agree to Greece's demands.

Washington, Feb. 13.—American Ambassador Morgenthau at Constantinople today notified the State Department that the Archipelago American steamship Washington was fired upon in the harbor of Cibotrezon and the Russian fleet returned the fire which the Turkish commander at that place opened on the ship. No action will be taken until a full report is made as to whether the American ship has any status.

GENERAL MILES PRAISES WILSON

Old Warrior Tells Albany S. of V. That World Peace Is Coming

Albany, Feb. 13.—Praising the attitude of President Wilson in sending his message of warning to Germany and England, General Nelson A. Miles retired, in addressing Albany Sons of Veterans last night, declared that American manhood should be proud of the position taken by the chief executive.

General Miles said that it was just and proper that President Wilson should inform Englan dthat the Stars and Stripes could not be used to protect her ships. He urged that American rights and independence be ever preserved and that the message of the President be loyally backed by all citizens of the United States.

The distinguished soldier said that thed uration of the European war was enigmatical and that it might continue until one or more countries had exhausted their resources.

Concluding, he expressed the hope that honorable peace might be preserved on the part of the United States andp redicted that when the war clouds finally rolled away that the curtain would be rung down upon warfare forever, a court of arbitration would doubtless be formed for the purpose of settling all future controversies, he declared.

The occasion of the remarks of General Miles was a banquet in honor of the birthday of Abraham Lincoln by Philip H. Sheridan Camp, Sons of Veterans.

SOUTHERN PACIFIC LOSSES CASE BEFORE COMMISSION

Washington, Feb. 13.—The Interstate Commerce Commission today notified the Southern Pacific railroad that it will order the line to dispose of the Pacific Mail steamship company unless the railroad agrees not to operate vessels beyond Balbo on the Panama canal zone. The Southern Pacific will be allowed sixty days to amend its petition for permission to operate the water line under the Panama canal act, so as to incorporate this pledge.

WOULD IMPRISON BOXERS

Madison, Wis., Feb. 13.—A bill has been introduced in the Assembly, which if passed, will make those present at boxing or sparring exhibitions, together with the boxers, liable for punishment by imprisonment in the state prison for from three to five years or a fine of from $100 to $1,000.

STEAMERS SAILING

New Yor, Feb. 13.—Steamers sailing today: Philadelphia for Liverpool; Oruna for Liverpool America for Nayles and Genoa.

Due to arrive today: Negantic from Liverpool; Nieuw from Amsterdam; Campaia from Madeira.

WEATHER FORECASST

Rain or snow tonight. Sunday warmer. From lower lake fresh east wind.

BERLIN ADMITS RAID, DENYING SERIOUS RESULTS

Berlin, by Wireless, Feb. 13.—Activity of the Allies' aviators along the Belgian coast was admitted in a statement issued from German headquarters this afternoon. The statement says that the bombs dropped by the aviators only damaged property belonging to civlilians and inflicted but slight losses from a military standpoint.

French attacks in the Vosges district were repulsed. Russian opposition in East Prussi has been broken down.

LATE WAR BULLETINS

Paris, Feb. 13.—The Germans are taking a vigorous offensive in the region of Verdun, but their attacks on the French trenches in that vicinity has been repulsed, says an official statement issued by the War Office this afternoon.

A squadron of German aeroplanes flew over Verdun but no damage is reported. The statement says that the Germans violently bombarded Nieuport and Ypres, but that the French artillery effectively replied to the cannonade. Great activity is manifested on both sides in the Champagne region.

Amsterdam, Feb. 13.—The German campaign in East Prussia is being conducted by General Eichhorn, according to a dispatch from Berlin today. General Eichhorn was to have taken command of the troops in the western theatre of war, but the fact that he was suffering from typhoid when the war broke out prevented him from taking an active part. Field Marshal VonHindenburg is conducting operations from Insterburg, where he has maintained his headquarters for a week. The Kaiser arrived there yesterday.

London, Feb. 13.—German submarines are believed to be active again in destroying British commercial ships. The new cargo steamer Torquay was towed into Scarborough harbor last night in a sinking conldition. She was either torpedoed or struck a mine eight miles east of that port. One man was killed and two injured.

Nothing has been heard of the British steamers Oriole and London Trader since January 30. Reports of a disaster to the latter have been circulated, and it now certain that both of these vessels were sunk by a German submarine.

Athens, Feb. 13.—Three hundred Albanians crossed the Montenegrin frontier today and attacked the outposts. They were driven off after losing forty killed and fifty persons.

Give Business a Chance

About the time any business begins to move along smoothly and is earning profits, it gets a jolt from Washington. There is nothing fundamentally wrong with business. It is suffering from shock, sympathetic hysteria, neurasthenia, superinduced by politics. The logical, sensible, way out is a defined area of free operation for business, but no sooner is the area defined than Congress undertakes a new definition. There are intelligent men who are convinced that Congress not in session would be worth $1,000,000 a day to the country. It is a pity that men who live in Washington so soon get out of touch with conditions in the Nation itself.—Philadelphia Evening Ledger.

A Wretch

The French captain who murdered his wife because her desires to be near him jeopardized his chances for decoration with the Cross of the Legion of Honor, will go down as the most contemptible wretch in the history of the war.

No doubt he will sink into oblivion just as he fell into the lowest depth of degradation, and the world will never hear of him again. But surely there must be some tribunal before which he will meet justice. His fellow-officers told him that the presence of his wife was objectionable; that his chances for being cashiered were multiplied, daily, by her remaining near him. His ambition was unbounded and with one blow he crushed her.

He tried to mount the pedestal of honor on the dead body of his wife and a court-martial was his reward. No other term describes this sort of man quite so well as wretch.—Times, St. Louis.

When Is a Duck a Deer?

In the latest issue of Mr. McAdoo's relaxing journal (Treasury Decisions) we find that the Board of General Appraisers has been solemnly considering whether a game bird, with its head, feet and feathers on, and undrawn, can be classified as dressed game. It has decided that when a game bird has its clothes on, it is not dressed, and when it has been plucked and drawn, it is dressed, and that it is entitled to a lower rate of duty when dressed, that is, undressed, than when undressed, that is, dressed. The situation becomes even more interesting when we are told, in the formal language of a julicial decision, that the feathered bird is venison within the meaning of the distinction drawn by Congress. So a duck is not a duck when it passes through the custom house, but a deer.—Philadelphia Evening Ledger.

Railroads Beginning to Get Justice

The Interstate Commerce Commission's new and saner attitude toward the railroads was emphasized yesterday in the so-called "inter-mountain rates" decision. The transcontinental roads have to face the problem of all-water route competition through the Panama Canal, and they have been anxious to get official support for the practice of making lower through rates to the Pacific Coast from points east of the Mississippi River without having to lower correspondingly rates to interior mountain points.

The concessions they asked for some years ago were refused by the Interstate Commerce Commission on the ground that they were in conflict with the "long and short haul" provisions of the interstate commerce act. The commission created a zone system through which rates were to be stabilized. The Commerce Court suspended that action, but on appeal to the Supreme Court the commission's power to create zones was confirmed. The Supreme Court held, however, that the commission, in interpreting the "long and short haul" clause, could exercise discretion in making allowance for the effects on through transportation rates of competition by way of the Panama route.

In yesterday's order the commission took the Supreme Court's hint and made fairly liberal concessions in the way of permitting discriminations in through rates. These discriminations cannot but benefit the country as a whole. The East and the Middle West will get cheaper rail transportation to the Pacific, the manufacturers and producers of the Mississippi Valley will be relieved of a handicap against them and in favor of the Atlantic Coast created by the opening of the Panama Canal, and the railroads will be enabled to retain a good deal of through trans-continental business which otherwise they would lose. The inter-mountain states will be only negatively injured. They could not get any benefit out of a retention of the higher through rates to the coast, although everybody else might suffer from them.

The rational consideration now given to the railroads is one of the brightest promises of industrial readjustment. If the carriers can re-establish their credit and earning power the problem of winning back prosperity will be amazingly simplified.—Tribune, New York.

Catarrh Cannot be Cured

with Local Applications, as they cannot reach the seat of the disease. Catarrh is a blood or constitutional disease, and in order to cure it you must take internal remedies. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, and acts directly upon the blood and mucous surface. Hall's Catarrh Cure is not a quack medicine. It was prescribed by one of the best physicians in this country for years and is a regular prescription. It is composed of the best tonics known, combined with the best blood purifiers, acting directly on the mucous surfaces. COMMONSENCE NOT COMMON

As someone has somewhere said, the most uncommon thing is common sence.

We've tried planting citizens 290,000 to the square mile; we've tried growing them in rooms without light and air; tried raising them in cellars; tried growing them with a minimum of food; tried training the young plants on the streets, and in the unsupervised dance halls, cheap theatres and low grade amusement parks, feeding them, too often, on whiskey and vulgar suggestions and then—when we raise a sickly stunted growth, and find in addition, that we have lost a lot of good seed—we exclim, "Oh, isn't this dreadful! What shall we do?" And we answer our own question by doing the same thing all over again.

This is the way the American City talks right from the bottom of the matter in one of its recent issues. Then it goes on still more to say.—

To produce a healthy happy efficient citizenship is the highest municipal aspiration. How intellegently are we striving towards such a goal? To attain it, our chief need is that each citizen shall be interested, not only in his own welfare and contentment, but in that of every other citizen.

Every thought in the above expression is packed wifh common sence, that most uncommon thing, and is just as applicable to Fulton as any other place, and there's no time like the present—to begin thinking.

ONE ON WORK

To some men, work is a bread-and-butter problem. To others, it is an opportunity to advance. Work is the university where the best men of the world attend.

Some men can never quite understand why the Creator did not hang ham and eggs on trees. Pick up a sample of a man's work, and you have a sample of the man.

There are two ways to get out of work. One is to work out, and the other is to rust out. If you rust out, they will carry you, without cost to you, over the hills to the county farm. The way you work determines your destiny, and all of the whining, grumbling and feeling sorry for yourself this side of Old Mexico (which means some other place) will never change this inviolate condition one little bit.

When I hear some poor boob say that the world owes him a living, I have the self-satisfaction of knowing that he will have to hustle if he collects the bill.—Silent Partner.

Wanted---A Public Service Commission to Serve the Public

It is becoming from the work of the legislative committee investigating the Public Service Commission that there is nothing in particular the matter with that body save its members. The law is good. The machine built up under that law has operated well enough; complaints on the average have received adequate investigation, and where justified remedial orders have been issued. That much was largely routine procedure. But where the commissioners should have taken hold in the public interest the policy of state regulation of public utilities has broken down. A careful study of the testimony of Messrs. McCall and Wood indicates the reason. They did not know what the commission was doing. They did not keep track of the orders issued against the Interborough, to take a specific case, and they did not have any idea of the persistent flouting of the commission's orders and authority by that company. Moreover, they have indicated a predisposition to accept any excuses the Interborough offered, or even to make excuses for it. Mr. McCall has said he thought the company, "was doing all that could be expected." Mr. Wood "trusted Hedley," with whom he had been more or less friendly for fifteen years.

When Governor Dix abandoned Governor Hughes's standards for appointment to the Public Service commissions and took these $15,000 a year places as political spoils, he started the deterioration which has ended in McCall and Wood. Tht was a lamentable thing for the public. Fortunately it can be changed easily. There is slight restriction on the power of the Governor to remove a public service commissioner. A state of affairs like that disclosed by the legislative committee's investigation surely warrants removal of some commissioners. Since Governor Roosevelt signed the special franchise tax law, the Public Service commissions law of Governor Hughes is the biggest advance in the relations of public toward corporations in this State. The policy of corporation regulation is too good to be discredited or broken down by maladministration. The public has too much at stake to rest content while the law is permitted to fail of its purpose because of administrators who neglect or refuse to take advantage of its provisions.

The present Public Service Commission has not served the public as the public should and could be served. It is time to have in office a commission which can and will enforce the law, even to the point of setting in motion criminal actions against violators of its orders.—Tribune, N.Y.

JUDGE COVILLE AWARDS JOE $90

It Was Compensation For Four Months Spent in County Jail

Oswego, Feb. 13.—Joe Morello, the young West side Italian, who was pursued and attacked by the Fulton blackhand gang, was awarded $90 by Judge Coville in County Court yesterday. District Attorney Culkin recommended the award.

The first thing Joe did was to purchase a new outfit of clothing to replace the clothes he has worn since last October, when he was committed to the County Jail as a material witness against the conspirators.

The award was made under a new law which became effective September 1 last, giving the courts discretion to authorize the payment of a certain sum, if, in their discretion, the witness is in need of such help. Morello has been confined in the jail, partly for his own protection and because of the necessity of having him testify for the people against Jim Branabi, who was charged with having shot him in the arm in carrying out the black hand plot.

Morello aided the authorities greatly in their fight against the gang, with the result that all have pleaded guilty and their cases disposed of. Branabi has been sentenced to the Elmira Reformatory.

Frank Fostoglia, one of the conspirators, pleaded guilty yesterday and was given a suspended sentence of four months in the County Jail.

Natale Muscato of Fulton was given a sentence of not more than two years and four months nor less than one year and six months in Auburn prison, for assault in the first degree. He used a knife in an argument in Fulton last summer. His attorney, James R. Somers, seeks a new trial on the ground of mistaken identity.

Josephh O'Connor is attempting to get a suspended sentence for Guiseppo Froio, who pleaded guilty to assault in the first degree earlier in the week. Mr. O'Connor says the prisoner's brother will take him to West Virginia, where he has a job for him. Action was deferred.

WITH THE SUFFRAGISTS

On February 6 three women were indicted at Pikeville, Kentucky, for selling their votes at a dollar each at the last school election.

"There! didn't we tell you that women would sell their votes and that in politics they would be just as bad as men," do I hear you say?

Well, not "just as bad," for with these erring women is to be tried a number of men who committed fraud at the August primaries and the number is 1100. Comparison makes those three women look as insignificant as the militant suffrage movement in England in the light of the present European war.

MUSINGS OF AN OLD TIMER

(These papers are an exclusive feature of the Fulton Evening Times)

GEORGE FREDERICK WILLIAM AUGUSTUS

"Your young men shall dream dreams."

To claim acquaintance with a character who departed this life almost eighty years ago would be absurd. In writing of the pathetically romantic career of the departed pioneer of Oswego county, who entered life burdened with such a superabundance of Christian names, you must grant me the novelist's license of conceiving the man from the records others left of him rather than any pretense of direct knowledge.

This capitalist of the days gone by whose activities and ambitions came to a close almost eighty years ago when he passed away at the age of eighty-four (August 14, 1836) well deserves a place in the memory of the present residents of this county.

Like his equally prominent partner's, the Roosevelts (John and Nicholas) and G. C. Schroeppel, George Frederick William Augustus Scriba foresaw things much as the dreamers and achievers of today see them. That is not as they do become but as they would like to achieve them.

Who among you can say that the failures of dreams and fondly cherished projects indicate anything more than the truth of "man proposes, God disposes." Shall we venture to criticise the foresight of such a courageous pioneer because his plans met with disaster one after one?

Should we not rather admire the dare-to-do spirit that tried to plant this region with man-conceived city sites, where nothing but "the forest primeval" existed. "the forest primeval" existed?

Before entering on the details of this century old romance of the county's commercial history let us stop a moment to wonder if there was anything isgnificant in the fact that anything insignificpt in the fact that every one of these men were Holland Dutch? It is not my purpose to tarry on the point, simply to say that George Scriba was but one of this group of illustrious Hollanders in America.

The Roosevelts have applied to the land commissioners of the then new State of New York (1791) for the purchase of the lands between Oneida lake and river, Onondaga (now the Oswego) and Lake Ontario, bounding a recently granted section on the west—referring to Macomb's patent.

Only waiting for a superficial survey the enterprising Roosevelts sold their contract to Scriba, April 7, 1792. Mr. Scriba took steps to occupy the land almost immediately although his title, or patent, was not issued until December, 1794. Talk about enterprise being a modern commodity!

This little slice of land figured up to 499,135 acres after sundry and several deductions were made to individuals and the State as well as "all Gold and Silver mines and five acres of every hundred for highways." "To have and to hold * * as a good and indefeasible estate of inheritance forever, on condition nevertheless that within the term of seven years there shall be one family actually settled on said tract of land hereby granted for every six hundred and forty acres thereof, otherwise these letter patents and the estate hereby granted shall cease, determine and become void."

George Scriba's fortune was generally admitted to have been at least $1,500,000 and the land was secured with the obvious intention of founding a commercial empire.

At "Rotterdam" which occupied the site of the present village of Constantia, this early promotor conceived an entry port to his "land." His notion was that goods could be transported on Oneida lake and up what is now Scriba creek to the watershed rise. Here a portage or carriage of six or seven miles brought one to the Salmon Creek.

Again launching the shallow boats or bateau the journey of ten or twelve miles to the lake brought one to Vera Cruz where a lake port harbor would outrival Oswego. One can see the same spirit of saving time and distance that has led railroad builders to eliminate distances.

In other words Scriba and his friends considered that he was "putting one over" on Nature who had insisted on wandering crookedly westward then northward to the lake (Ontario). Of course it was not till after his fortune had been exhausted that the harbor scheme was found unfeasible.

Today, no one contests Nature's route, for this very summer will see the first use of the latest state-built waterway along her pathway.

Yet this man's attempt at empire building left us names bewilderingly out of place like Mexico, Texas and Vera Cruz, the source of which can easily be traced.

It is related of Scriba's long vanished city to be, Rotterdam, that the store he built and stocked carried a stock worth $10.00—considered truly wonderful in those times.

His dams and wharfs, built by agents, were so flimsy and inefficient that money must be constantly used to construct them.

Likewise at Texas and Vera Cruz even more elaborate plans and expenditures were disrupted.

Representatives of a French company who visited Rotterdam in 1793 on their inspection of the Black river country said of the place in their report to the "Castorland Company": "We took a view of the site of the future city. It is a moderately elevated, sandy plateau, with a view of the lake (Oneida) and the islands (Frenchman's and Dunham's). At present the settlement comprises a saw mill and three log houses. Mr. Scriba intends to open a road from this place to Little Salmon creek, which is twenty-four miles by land (total distance) saving more than sixty miles over the water route. * * * It is probable that this will become the route of trade from the lakes(!)

U. S. CHURCHES GROWING FAST

Statistics Show Religious Bodies Have No Cause to Feel Discouraged Over Results

New York, Feb. 13—Statistics made public today by the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America show the religious bodies of the United States have no cause to be discouraged over the results of the year 1914. The new communicants or members added made good all the losses by death, expulsion or withdrawal, and left a surplus of nearly three-quarters of a million.

That is, the total membership is 763,078 greater than it was in 1913. This is an average increase of two per cent, for all bodies great and small, Christian and non-Christian. Tables prepared by Dr. H. K. Carroll, and issued by the council show in detail the pains and losses of the year.

The grand total of members is now 38,708,149. All the larger denominations share in the increase. Baptists gained 122,125; Eastern Orthodox Churches, 36,500; the Roman Catholic church, 136,850; the Lutherans, 56,248; the German Evangelical Synod, representing the State Church of Prussia, 29,315; the Methodists, 231,460; the Presbyterians, 56,019; the Protestant Episcopal church, 28,641.

The Protestant Episcopal church has crossed the million line, having gained 86,468 since 1910, and over 300,000 since 1900.

The Roman Catholic Church has gained nearly a million and a quarter since 1910 and more than five and a half millions since 1900.

The Methodist Episcopal church, the second largest denomination, gained 187,487 in 1914 and nearly 700,000 since 1900.

The thirty churches, constituting the federal council of the Churches of Christ in America, report nearly 17,500,000 members, somewhat less than half of the aggregate for all denominations, with 103,000 ministers and nearly 139,000 churches. These bodies have a net increase of over 500,000 members, or more than two thirds of the entire increase of all bodies.

There are nine denominations which have a million and upward—the Roman Catholic, 13,794,637; the Methodist Episcopal, 3,603,265; the Southern Baptist, 1,529,217; the National Baptist (colored) 2,018,868; the Methodist Episcopal, South, 2,005,707; the Presbyterian, Northern, 1,442,498; the Disciples of Christ, 1,363,163; the Northern Baptist Convention, 1,238,323, and the Protestant Episcopal, 1,015,238. These seven denominations aggregate over 29,000,000 members, or more than three-fourths of the entire aggregate of the 170 religious bodies.

The effects on church membership of the European war in narrowing the stream of immigration were probably quite small, as only the last five months of the year were involved. The emigration of men to take part in the great conflict would not be a very large factor for the same reason. The German bodies—Lutheran, Reformed and the representative of the Prussian State Church, all show unusual gains for 1914.

The total increase of ministers was 3212, which is unusually large, while the total increase of churches was 1441, which is unusually small.

YOUTHFUL SPRING GOWN.

Smart Model In Black and White For Afternoon Wear.

WHITE VOILE GOWN.

Among the white fabrics which will be popular for the spring afternoon frock one may mention voile with a good deal of confidence, since the majority of fashion designers look upon this fabric with favor. One has a charming example of its use in the gown illustrated, which is an afternoon creation suitable for the smart tea, luncheon, bridge or the informal dance. The gown is of white voile, cleverly embroidered with black and with the wide girdle and sash of black velvet ribbon. One notices with interest the narrow plaiting which trims the little jacket and appears in three undulating lines on the skirt. The hat is a wide brimmed spring model, well adapted for Easter wear.

Shoes For Spring.

Shoe styles show a distinct trend toward the military type of button and lace boots in women's high footwear, with the button boot characterized by military braids and eagle brass buttons, says the Dry Good Economist. In low shoes for women the short tongue colonial and the small tongue pump will predominate, closely followed by novelty strap effects in the medium grades. The gaiter effect will be carried into low shoes, and black and white combinations will be received with much favor. In men's shoes the tendency is toward the larger use of the cloth top button boots.

EXPORTS ROLL UP IN VOLUME

Dun's Review Reports Enormous Excess of Exports In Favor of U. S.

New York, Feb. 13—Most of the developments of the week are along lines of further strengthening of confidence and a moderate, though perceptible, expansion in trade activity. Nothing illustrates more vividly the enormous gains made in the last six months than the decline in foreign exchange to quotations far below the usual gold import point, but while some gold has been drawn from Canada, money is in so ample supply that large shipments are not now needed; indeed credit supplies are so great that, following the example of the Pennsylvania Railroad, the New York Central has announced a new $100,000,000 bond issue. Financially, the United States is becoming sounder and stronger every day. The European war still hangs as a cloud over the situation and questions of the rights of neutrals are acute and render still more difficult the shipping problem. Exports however continue in great volume, creating a big balance of international trade in favor of this country, and more than offsetting the return of American securities from abroad. During the latest week the excess of exports amounted to the great sum of $37,134,000. The outward movement of cotton, aggregating in nine weeks over 2,600,000 bales, has changed conditions in the South from depression and alarm to a feeling of comparative security, which must increase steadily. The services of the Cotton Pool have not been required. Railroad earnings in January showed a decline from the previous year of 10.3 per cent., but traffic conditions are improving, and equipment orders are being placed, though in conservative volume. In iron and steel, these demands in connection with large export sales, are encouraging features, and an optimistic review of trade conditions by the chief executive of the Steel Corporation was one of the events of the week. Retail trade is for the moment rather inactive, but reports indicate generally low stocks. A feeling of confidence prevails, particularly in sections favored by the high prices for farm products. Cotton goods continue firm. The silk trade is irregular, but conditions are described as generally satisfactory. Higher prices for woolen goods, due to the strength of raw wool, tend to restrict demand, but the volume of business is believed to be well in advance of last year.

Early Deliveries

There is further enlargement of output in certain departments of iron and steel and the leading interest, which gained 411,928 tons in unfilled orders during January, now has about 55 per cent. of capacity active. Numerous inquiries are appearing for track supplies, and spike factories in the Pittsburgh district are increasing working time. New building work, however, continues quite, although prices are firmer on forward business and $1.20 is the minimum for plates, shapes and for the last half. A better ton prevails in crude steel and, as a rule, $20, Pittsburgh, is maintained for Bessemer and open hearth billets, while moderate sales of pig iron and reported at practically unchanged quotations. On the other hand, averages for January show slight losses as compared with December. For the first time in weeks, production of coke shows an increase, additional capacity having been provided for by the leading steel makers. Demand is broadening but thus far prices reflect little or no improvement.

Large numbers of retailers have appeared in the dry goods markets and are buying in small lots for early deliveries. Very fair orders are received from traveling salesmen for domestic, flannels and fall lines of wash fabrics, while bleached cottons continue in steady demand. Prints are quiet, but ginghams are in better request, although some lots of the latter are being offered for quick sales at low figures. There is a continued inquiry for duck for export and the mills are more actively engaged than in recent previous monthsh. Indications point to a broad spring distribution of white and printed goods, but the dyestuffs difficulty remains a hindrance in the colored goods division. In woolens and worsteds, large sales of broadcloths have been made for fall delivery, but staple serges and similar merchandise are not being freely taken. While spring trade from domestic sources in men's wear is barely half of normal, some of the larger mills are comfortably supplied with business as a result of the large foreign contracts.

The question of styles still causes uncertainty and hesitation in footwear, but buyers appear more confident and are now contracting fairly liberally. Most manufacturers of men's shoes are moderately busy and it is expected that before long sufficient business will have been booked to bring the output of the plants up to normal capacity. Many novelties are displayed in women's lines, but patent leathers continue the best sellers and numerous additional orders of good size have been placed.

WHAT THE COOK BOOK SAYS.

If you would have your fried eggs look pink and beautiful fry them one at a time in a good deal of fat and give them your undivided attention. As they are cooking take a spoon and continually pour the hot fat over them until they are done. An egg that is a little stale is almost sure to break its yolk when it is put into the pan.

You can warm over meat much more quickly if you wrap it in greased paper. The steam will prevent the meat from becoming hard and dry.

A very quick way to cool a hot liquid is to pass it through a clean cloth saturated with cold water. And if the liquid is soup no trace of grease will remain.

Pickles will never become moldy if you put a tiny bag of mustard in the top of the receptacle in which they are kept.

Don't forget to close the refrigerator door each time you use the box. The ice will last much longer.

OSWEGO CHAMBER OF COMMERCE OFFICERS

F. B. Shepherd Elected President at Annual Meeting.

Oswego, Feb. 3.—One hundred members of the Chamber of Commerce, Inc., gathered in Fitzhugh hall Thursday night to elect officers, adopt new by-laws, listen to reports and prepare for an active capaign for the betterment of Oswego. The report of the nominating committees was accepted and the officers suggested were elected without a dissenting vote. The officers are:

President, Frederick B. Shepherd, vice-president, T. P. Kingsford, R. A. Wowned, Thomas Burden and George E. Farrell; treasurer, John S. Parsons; secretary, Webb G. Cooper; Board of Managers, F. A. Emerick, John H. Hourigan, John D. Higgins, George J. Hessler, H. D. Fisher, H. H. Alexander, L. W. Mott, George H. Campbell, Clark Morrison, A. R. Hunt W. V. Burr, Niel Gray, Jr., A. F. McCarthy, N. L. Bates, W. J. Dowdle, J. C. Churchill, H. J Cooper, Dr. R. K. Piez, Elisha, B. Powell, Kirk White, H. I. Pratt, C. H. Bond, Frank Schilling, Frederick O. Clarke, James P. Doyle, F. W. Barnes, John K. O'Connor, Charles N. Bulger and A. C. Hall.

During the course of retiring President Kingsford's remarks the subject of the work now being done by Canada in enlarging the Welland canal so that the largest freighters on the upper lakes will be able to reach Lake Ontario. This will mean that Oswego will have to have a deeper harbor and Mr. Kingsford reported that Congressman Mott had been very active in obtaining a harbor survey and would keep Oswego's needs before Congress and the War Department. He urged the necessity of a ship canal around Niagara Falls on the American side and said that if any of the enemies of England should destroy locks in the present Welland canal it would tie up American shipping as well as the Canadian boats.

Mr. Kingsford spoke at some length on the work of the trade extension committtee and said it had carried thrugh a number of successful projects. He mentioned Dollar Day, Christmas Trade Week, Apple Week and the trips made to nearby towns and villages both east and west of Oswego. He said these had all been very successful last year and would probably be repeated.

RICHARD CROKER AND HIS BRIDE AT PALM BEACH.

MR. AND MRS. RICHARD CROKER AT THEIR PALM BEACH BUNGALOW.

The presence in the Palm Beach colony this winter of Mr. Richard Croker, well known politician of New York city, and his Indian bride has aroused great interest. Mr. Croker's bungalow has been the scene of many impromptu gatherings and friends have been very enthusiastic over the delightful manner in which Mrs. Croker entertains. Mr. and Mrs. Croker were married in New York November 26 last. The bride, who is young and attractive, was Miss Dula Benton Edmonson, and is rather proud of her Indian parentage. About the spacious gardens of the Croker cottage Mrs. Croker often wears a picturesque Indian costume. She and Mr. Croker genially posed for the camera recently, and herewith is the interesting result.

"SANITO" COOKING UTENSILS

are a necessity for housekeepers who wish to excel in domestic science. They are the only American-made cooking ware which absolutely reproduces the high priced, imported German utensils, so universally used abroad. SANITO utensils have an acid proof lining which cannot crack or scale off and retains nothing to taint or discolor the food. When cooked in SANITO the food cooks evenly, retains all its juices and flavors and never scorches or burns. SANITO is a nonconductor of heat and after being heated to the cooking point—212 degrees—it requires but a very small gas flame to complete the cooking process. With proper care SANITO will last a life time.

THE UPLIFTERS

The Up-Lifters, the Sunday school class of Mrs. C. E. Wilson of the State street M. E. church, held their regular monthly meeting at the home of Miss Leah R. Klein, at 308 Leitch st., last evening.

A strawride was enjoyed by the young women, accompanied by their teacher, after which refreshments were served and the monthly business meeting held. The balance of the evening was spent in music and the singing of several selections by the entire company.

ROYAL NEIGHBORS MET

The Royal Neighbors held a regularly slated meeting last night and three candidates for membership were elected. Visiting Neighbor Ballinger, formerly of Colorado, was present. He presented to the membership some new and original ideas.

Neighbor Patrick will be entertainer at the next social, to be held Tuesday evening, Feb. 23. Those who may be interested in the lodge are urged to attend the coming meeting.

SHIPPING BILL CAN NOT PASS

This Is Belief of Republicans; But Filibustering Has Not Ended

Washington, Feb. 13.—In new trenches in the House and reorganized, foolowing their rout in the Senate, the administration forces today put the final work on their defenses for their ship purchase battle in the lower body next week.

The leaders, however, were far from hopeful of success. They were assured of their inability to put through a compromise measure under the "gag" rule in the House, but they were convince that the solid front of the "allies" in the Senate could not be battered down by March 4. This was conceded by Rrepresentative Claude Kitchin, Democratic leader-elect.

The plan as finally agreed to, and approved by President Wilson, is to tack the Gore bill to the enacting clause of the Weeks' naval mail measure, and add an amendment providing that ships operated under the new act shall be turned over to the navy two years after the ending of the war.

In the Senate the Republicans smiled today at the suggestion that their filibuster was nearing its end. They said that no shipping bill could be passed there this session.

The loss off Senator Kenyon's vote yesterday when Senator Reed sought to secure a vote on the bill on February 18 was a surprise and Democrats attempted to bring back Kenyon to their lines. Senator LaFollette, who has steadily upheld the administration measure, joined in the effort. Republican leaders did not count too much on Kenyon for the vote tied, the Democrats still could carry a roll call with the aid of the Vice-President. So the "allies" saw no prospect other than filibuster to prevent a roll call on the pending measure for general restrictions of debate.

THE CUNNING OF CROWS.

In India These Birds Have Been Labeled "Shreds of Satan."

Travelers in the orient have much to say about the Indian crow, a bird that for uncanny knowingness and prankish audacity, has perhaps no equal. Corvus splendens—thus have ornithologists flatteringly labeled him. But a naturalist who knows the Indian crows at first hand has called them "shreds of Satan, cinders from Tartarus." To give these impish creatures their due, however, it should be said that life in India is not a little enlivened by their presence. A correspondent witnessed the following incident:

A small hawk had seized a little bird and perched on a leafless branch to devour his prey. The spectacle drew two crows to the spot. They hopped and flapped from branch to branch, noisily discussing the strategy of their intended raid.

Then one of them quietly slipped away through the surrounding foliage. At the same time his mate flew in front of the perching hawk and, hovering within a foot of his beak, maintained a bustling menace of snatching the titbit. That effectively compelled the attention of the hawk. His prey firmly grasped beneath his feet, he angrily hissed and lunged at the hovering nuisance. So lively was the skirmish that the human onlooker forgot the existence of the second crow. But now that wily bird reappeared some distance in the rear of his destined victim. With stealthy sidlings and short, noiseless flights, he drew near. Then he made a swift dash, seized the hawk's long, barred tail by the tip, hung on it with his full weight and toppled the luckless hawk in a complete back somersault from the branch! The released titbit was instantly seized by the first crow, and the clever pair bore off their booty with much triumphant cawing.—Youth's Companion.

MURDERED MAN FOUND UNDER BUGGY SEAT

Baltimore, Feb. 13.—The entire police force of Baltimore county is today busily engaged in an attempt to unravel the mysterious murder of a well-dressed young man of about 25, whose body was discovered late last night on a lonely road, wedged tightly under the seat of a buggy. There was a shot through the forehead which must have caused instant death.

A five barreled revolver, with one chamber discharged was under the victim's derby hat. Nothing to definitely established the man's identity has yet been found.

The police believe that the mtn was slain for other purposes than robbery and that the crim was committed in the city proper and that efforts were made to dispose of the body in the country.

Convenience in Scales.

The new spring scales for household and nursery use have an adjustable tube which makes it possible to weigh the contents of a box or basket hung on the book without having to deduct the weight of the empty receptacle. The empty basket is hung on the book first by itself and the inner tube scale adjusted to the "O" mark. Then whatever is to be weighed is placed in the basket and the weight is registered.

Apple Batter Pudding.

Take six cooking apples and peel and core them without slicing. Now fill up the cavities with sugar and cloves. Have ready a good light batter, and when you have placed the apples in a buttered dish pour this over them. One and a half hours' baking in a moderate oven is necessary.

Finest Choir in the World.

Russia possesses the world's finest choir. This is in the Cathedral of Alexander Nevski in Petrograd and is attached to a convent erected in honor of the patron saint of Russia. It consists of about thirty members, all monks, chosen from the best singers in all the Russian monasteries. Their voices are amazingly sweet and strong, and every member of the choir can, it is said, shatter an ordinary glass into fragments merely by singing into it, so powerful are the vibrations of each voice. These monks are trained as rigorously as any opera singer, and their whole duty at the monastery is to assist at the music at mass in the morning and vespers in the afternoon.

CITY'S MAYOR GIVES APPROVAL

Women Get Mayor, Sec'y of Chamber of Commerce and Others to Publicly Approve of Suffrage

Watertown, Feb. 13.—The Watertown Suffrage League held its jubilee meeting last evening at the home of Mrs. W. S. Quemer in Academy street. About 50 guests were present with a fair sprinkling of men.

The program consisted of music, speeches and open discussion followed by refreshments. The chief event of the evening was a series of congratulatory addresses by Mayor I. R. Breen, Secretary F. H. Lamon of the chamber of commerce and Louis de L. Berg, secretary of the Rotary club.

Mayor Breen Talks

Mayor Breen was received with much applause. He dwelt on the long, hard fight the women had made, wished victory for the suffrage amendment and promised aid wherever they needed a boost. The mayor was in a witty vein. He said, alluding to the present water power agitation that he hoped if women became holders of public office they would be able to keep out of such trouble.

Mr. Berg an Aged Suffragist.

Mr. Berg, who was next introduced, announced that he believed himself to have been a suffragist longer than most others present. He remembered suffrage meetings being held in his mother's house under the leadership of the late Mrs. Lillie Devereux Blake when he was a boy. He was especially proud that fate had permitted him to be associted so early with a movement which engendered so much of breadth and progress. His tales of suffrage experiences were highly appreciated.

Lamon Buttoned Up

Mr. Lamon convulsed his audience by proclaiming his trouble. He was in hot water all the time. It had been one "dam" question Tuesday and another one last evening. He offered the heartiest congratulations and wishes for success, stating pointedly that he had been a suffragist long before it had been "wished upon him." He did not wear a suffrage button, however, he said, because he had great difficulty keeping on the buttons he already wore.

Mr. Lamon then told of his own experiences in securing a constitutional amendmen on the water question, saying he thought the women's task was easier.

Mrs. Lamon, president of the league said there was no question now that these gentlemen had shown the courage of their convictions that others would be willing to be associated with the suffrage cause.

At the business meeting of the league held early in the evening six new members were received. A report from Mrs. Lamon's recital of February 5 was given, showing the proceeds to be $37. Attention was called to the fact that the hitherto supposedly invulnerable South had been invaded by the suffragists to the extent that four states, Texas, Arkansas, Tennessee and West Virginia had passed in their legislatures in both houses or one, by large majorities, bills to submit suffrage amendments to the people, while South Carolina, most conservative of all, was about to act on the question.

HALBERT PARKE

Halbert Parke, 79, died at his home in Lysander last night after a long illness. He was a resident of Lysander for 50 years and was well known.

Besides his wife he is survived by four sons, Fred D., Andrew and George of this city, and William of Syracuse, also two daughters, Mrs. Lyman Bargey and Miss Pearl Parke of Fulton.

The funeral will be held Sunday at 10 o'clock from the home and burial will be made at Jacksonville.

He gave assurances that the cordial relations now existing would be strengthened. The Viceroy also called on many French and American residents and inspected the militia.

MISS JOHNSON DEFIES STYLES

This Well Known Lecturer Believes the Women Should Demand Sane Styles

Brooklyn, Feb. 13.—Concluding her Brooklyn Institute series of lectures in the lecture hall, Academy of Music, Monday afternoon, Miss Helen Louise Johnson admonished feminine listeners not only to give thought to the food they put on the table for their families, but to the clothing they wear. "One of the awful things in this world," said Miss Johnson, "is that we only wear our clothes three months nowadays, and then they are out of style." She emphasized the fact that this demand for changes in style not only has a bad influence on the working girl and the standards set, but it throws many girls out of work because of changing seasons.

"For the last three or four years," said Miss Johnson, "women have had artistic and hygienic clothes. They have been artistic in outline and drapery, hygienic because throat and waist have been unconfined, sanitary because they did not drag in the street, and economical because they have taken comparatively little material and were easy to wash and iron. Now we all have to face a new problem of style, and I, for one, defy my dressmaker when she says I must have a full skirt. I refuse to look like a lady penwiper!

"Let us show our bravery and stop right here. The time has come for us all to get together and stick to the present styles that are artistic and hygenic. On this question of courage, judgment, thought, willingness to be laughed at, we can grow so sensible that men will want to give us the vote. And remember, if we want good textiles, and demand them from our manufacturers, we will be willing to wear them as long as our grandmothers did, and not discard them in three months."

Miss Johnson's lecture was devoted to a discussion of "Safe Food and Its Purchase." She considered the buying of foods in bulk instead of in packages, and believed that for the benefit of the woman with a very limited income, all women ought to demand such foods as cereals in bulk. But she counseled against buying anything just because it is cheap, as this is not always economy. The Farmers' Bulletins on cereal foods, sent out by the department of agriculture, she advised every woman to read and study, and also the bulletins of the Main experiment station. Miss Johnson considered cereals in detail, answering several questions regarding them that had been sent to her. They provide a balanced food, she said, for though possessing every nutriment but fat, we get the fat by adding cream and sugar. Macaroni is another food that Miss Johnson believes excellent, though if it is to be made in the United States, must demand that it be as good as the foreign product.

MRS. BELL'S COKE LETTER

Mrs. S. was standing looking out of the window, and wondering if the ladies of the club who were to meet with her that afternoon would venture out. She was ready, a good supper was ready, and the atmosphere of the house as balmy as June. But outside the thermometer registered zero, and a gale was blowing to add misery to the frozen world.

The doorbell ringing a dozen times in succession, and there they were.

Mrs. S.—"I was just wondering if you would venture out."

Mrs. P. "Well, if it were at any other house we wouldn't have, but we all knew we could count on delightful warmth as soon as we got inside your door. I don't see how it is that you are always so cosy here—it must be the house. Why our place is never comfortable until about time to retire, and goodness knows John uses enough coal—the best coal, too, but it takes so long for the heat to come up, and every wind seems to effect its heating capacity."

Mrs. S.: "Well, while you ladies embroider I will tell you the secret of our comfort, and its not due to the house, but to the genuine Gas Coke that we get from the Fulton Fuel and Light Co. You know when James had to be away the winter of 1911, and I had to attend the furnace, not being able to get a reliable man, the first question that arose, was, how could I handle the heavy coal, not being strong? And then we remembered about the advertisement on coke, and determined to buy a ton. That was the beginning of joy for us, and never will anything else find its way into our coal bin. Only five dollars a ton, and the ton looks like a little mountain in the bin."

Mrs. P.: "Oh, yes; but it forever needs attention or it goes out."

Mrs. S.: "Well I guess not, mind, there are no clinkers in coke, and no waste. I only attend our furnace three times a day and shake it once, and it never goes out from October until April. And during that time we have no dust, gas or dirt. A ton lasts as long as a ton of hard coal, and it's light to handle, and above all, ladies, it doesn't tarnish my silver as the hard coal always did, and its always warm. Never any cold hours with the Genuine Gas Coke—the heat is always in it—I advise you all to try it and be convinced, and then I won't freeze when I spend the afternoon with you. The Fulton Fuel and Light Co. always have it on hand, and deliver promptly. Now remember, the good points to tell your husbands: cheaper than coal, lasts as long, light to handle, no dust, gas, or dirt, no waste, or clinkers, doesn't tarnish the silver, and always insures a warm, cosy house. These are my reasons for using coke. Come to supper!"

War: Pathos and Humor

Paris, Feb. 13.—The following letter from a French private describes the desperate battle of Soissons. The simplicity of it, and its sincerity, reveals the character of this fighting more vividly than could be written in official dispatches.

MY VERY DEAR YVONNE:

Thanks to God, I am still here and my health is good. As everyone expected, the days of sacrifice have come. I know my Yvonne is strong in spirit, nd that she has no false illusions. So that you may understand I am going to tell you frankly about the terrible days of the 8th and 9th.

As I told you we were at N——— from the evening of the 1st of January. Happy and calm we enjoyed a well-earned rest. On the evening of the 7th an unexpected order comes along: "Everybody to be ready, without haversack, and with 200 cartridges."

At about 5 o'clock in the evening off we go, cross S———and get on the plateau, the rest of the night being spent in the grottoes. Here we are then fixed up; we have got to attack and take the German trenches.

That night I did not sleep. By the light of my little lamp I arranged my small affairs, and was not alone in the work. Nearly the whole company felt the need of writing and of self-expression. Between the comrades there was a gripping of hands, and we comforted each other. Eight o'clock in the morning comes. Our artillery opens fire and for an hour sprinkles the enemy's trenches with more than 2,000 shells. During this time our own battalion gets into the trenches. The German trenches are only 50 metres away. The artillery comes to a dead stop; it is now 9 o'clock.

But our commandant, a man with a soul, wants to profit by the moral effect which our artillery has produced on the Germans. He orders the charge to be sounded, and darts forward first, followed by the two companies. In 20 minutes the first line of trenches was captured. The fine example given by our commandant is great, but it cost him his life, and his adjutant was killed by his side.

Our losses in the attack were not very large. But the counter-attack of the Germans was inevitable. It was then that the 9th and 10th companies came into action. It is 10 o'clock at night. The order comes to occupy the captured trenches. Until 3 o'clock in the morning the positions are strengthened. The crumbling trenches are dug out, and we get rid of the corpses, German and French.

All of a sudden a great cry is raised by a thousand voices:

"The Boches are coming on at the charge!"

Everbody leaps up. The Germans are already on the edge of the trench. * * * Oh, dear Yvonne! Oh, the horrible vision, the horrible carnage! * * * Everyone has understood, and knows that he has to defend his life. At every turn the Germans are killed, the bayonet works. They are impaled. For my part, I saw red. Death soared over my head, and I did not think about it.

The edge of the trench is liberated. But how can I describe this scene to you, and how is it that I am not mad? It is terrifying; the crying of the wounded, the shouting of defenders and assailants. * * * At last the Germans fall back. The lieutenant proves himself worthy of his task; in a clear voice he orders volley firing. But the "Boches" reply, and they come back crawling on all fours. How many of us fell under the bullets!

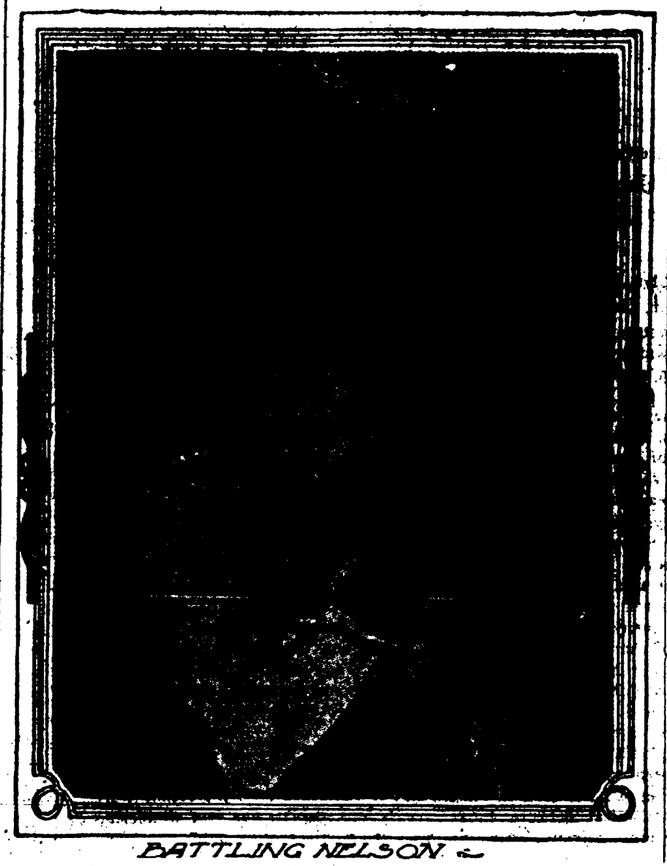
In our corner there is nothing but a heap of corpses. There is the smell of blood. The screaming of the wounded tears your heart out. But all that puts us in a rage. In volleys we keep on firing. Dawn comes to deliver us. The enemy was thrust back. Oh! How our dead were revenged! Over the parapet of the trench in the field one can only see corpses, corpses which are going to stay where they lie. This savage war does not allow the burial of the dead.

About midday the Germans renew their attack. This time we can see them advancing in close order. With a grip on our rifles we wait for them, for they were too far away to be fired at. They are going to swarm upon us, but we shall defend ourselves. Suddenly our 75 begins to vomit, the German column having been signalled. Ah! Fine work! The shells are well directed and fall into the middle of things—arms, legs, bodies, bits of men were scattered about. Thanks to our artillery we were saved this time.

But they are obstinate devils, those "Boches," At about 4 o'clock in the evening they began another attack, but it was feeble, and our shells stopped them. At 7 o'clock we were relieved.

We returned to N——— the same vening. For two days of battle I had eaten nothing. Like most of us I had terrible stomach pains and fever.

Today all one's nerves are relaxed. I am dazed to find myself here, alive. It is true that my confidence had not abandoned me. The hand-to-hand fighting, which I had feared so much, had come and I had survived.



Most of my comrades had stuck the enemy on their bayonets. I, for some reason not to be defined, had not brought myself to do this; but every time my lucky aim floored the man who leaped at me. More than 20 times in ten minutes this incident was repeated. Every time my eye was quicker than my enemy's. I had not budged from my place. I don't wish to boast, but I did not thin kof death, because on the eve of battle I had prepared myself well for it.

Oh! this war! how horrible it is. But God will pardon me the things I have done because the Right is on our side. I wish to say no more about it.

I have received all your letters. They give me joy. Embrace all your family for me.

Your Ferdinand, who kisses you a thousand times.

BATTLING NELSON TO BOX IN HAVANA RING

BATTLING NELSON

HOT LINERS

By Frank G. Menke.

Among the recruits on the golf links
(A previous stranger to them)
Accoutered with mallets and pellets,
Is numbered the umpire, Bill Klem.
Now, Klem is a masterful person,
Of poise and of powerful will,
But he lost all his calmness of temper,
When he started to wallop the pill.
When players waved ball bats like war clubs
Mister Klem never flinched from the jam,
And his strongest expression was "Kercy,"
Where now he ejaculates—
Mister Klem never flinched from fanatics,
When they charged on the field with a yell
And he muttered, "Tut, tut!" to the bleachers,
Where he ejaculates———

At this writing it seems as if the International leaguers have as much chance of breaking into the New York field as Packey McFarland has of getting back to 133 pounds.

Or as the Reds have of winning a pennant.

Or as the Kaiser has of taking dinner with King George and Czar Nick a fortnight hence.

One might go further in making comparasions of the smallness International's chances, but what's the use? The big leaguers control the Greater New York territory—and they insist upon keeping it.

Jess Willard continues to train for that fiht. The Naps. Reds and Browns have been trained each year for a decade or two and what's come of it?

How Dr. Holmes Felt.

Dr. Oliver W. Holmes was small in stature. Upon one occasion he was present at a meeting which happened to be attended by a number of very large men, thus making his diminutive size rather conspicuous in contrast. One of these men—doubtless wishing to make him feel at ease—came up to him and said:

"Well, Dr. Holmes, I should think you would feel rather small among all these fellows."

"I do," replied the doctor; "I feel like a 3 cent piece among a lot of pennies."

Suicides in China.

The Chinese look upon all suicides with honor except when the suicide is from trouble caused by gambling. Frequently if a Chinaman insults another the quarrel is followed by the suicide of the insulted man, who thinks he has cast ignominy on his aggressor by taking his own life.

CONTRACT PROVIDES FOR SALE OF LIGHTS TO CITY

Oswego, Feb. 13.—Commissioner of Works C. W. Linsley yesterday opened bids for lighting the city for a five year period, or less, according to whether the city secures the right to develop power at the new high dam for its own uses. The People's Gas and Electric Company was the only bid and the tender submitted by Attorney Harry C. Mizen in behalf of the company was based on the expectation that the city will go into the power business and the rates submitted were on a sliding scale. For five years the company is willing to furnish light at a flat rate per annum of $66 for each light, for four years and less than five years, $67.52; for three years and less than four years, $69.04; for less than three years, $70.56; for less than two years, $7208, for less than one years, $77. The city will commence using lights at the lowest rate of $66, the contract providing that at any time the city can serve six months' notice to the company to discontinue service, and it further provides that the city shall within that period make payments based on the length of service for which it has permitted the contract to stand.

"How comes it," demands the "Woman's Protest," "that the suffragists all come from the non-suffrage states?

"For the same reason," Comments Alice Dues Miller in the New York Tribune, "that there are no Votes for Men Leagues in all this broad democracy."

GEORGE HERMAN

Minetto, Feb. 13.—George Herman, one of the veteran employes of the Minetto Shade Cloth factory, died yesterday morning at his home. He had been in poor health about a month but only took to his bed Monday last. Mr. Herman was born in Germany but came here when a child and had lived in Minetto ever since. He was a painter and had been employed at the factory for 35 years. He was sincerely respected in the community.

Surviving him are three daughters, Mrs. Mary McCulloch, Mrs. Anna Modry and Miss Harriet Herman, and one son, Burton Herman, all of Minetto. He was a member of Oswego lodge No. 127, F. and A. M.

The funeral will be held Sunday afternoon at 2 o'clock at the house and 2.30 o'clock at Page Memorial chapel, Riverside, where Masonic services will be conducted.

THE ESTATE OF MRS. MALONE

Letters have also been asked on the estate of Theophilus Dyette, who left $1,000 personal and $1,400 real.

About Sports Generally

By Frank G. Menke.

New York, Feb. 13.—Jimmy Gilmore, proxy for the Federal League seems to have unconsciously forced the leaders of the American and National Leagues to go to the assistance of the floundering International League.

The International was dealt an awful wallop in 1914 by the Feds who invaded Buffalo and Baltimore territory. Those two towns formerly were Internationl strongholds. The Feds grabbed off practically all the Baltimore patronage and the bulk of it in Buffalo.

The terrific losses sustained by the several of the International League clubs in 1914 and the gloomy outlook for 1915 caused the International League magnates to shriek for help from the big fellows who had agreed to help themwherever help was needed.

But the Internationals shrieked for a long time in vain. The American and National League folks were having troubles of their own. They didn't care about anybody else's troubles much less getting mixed up in them.

They were too busy fighting their own battles to give the little fellows a bit of help.

Very soon rumors began floating around that the International League might not open in 1915. T'was whispered that some of the International magnates, deserted by their big league brethern, were reduced to the point of despair. They had lost in the 1914 battle with the Feds at a time when the Feds were comparatively weak. With the Feds stronger thn ever in 1915 it looked like a certain losing proposition for the International.

Some of the International League magnates as a last resort put their clubs on the market, offering them for sale at bargain prices. But no one came forth who wanted to buy, and that made the International magnates more panicky than ever.

The big league magnates paid but scant attention to the International League plight at first. That was the International League's own business. If the International league couldn't swim it could sink. The American and National League magnates had no oars to lend. They needed all they had. Oh, yes, now that you mention it the big league magnates under the provisions of the Ntional agreement, were bound to help the little fellows in times of trouble, but that agreement was made in times of peace. Its easy to make such an agreement at such a time. But keeping that agreement in time of war—oh, that's something else.

Just when the International leaguers were enshrouded in deepest gloom, Jimmy Gilmore busted into the public prints with a few words that acted like magic for the Internationals. Jimmy said he was figuring on forming a minor league in the East, Presto! The aid that the International had begged for so long and so vainly from the American and National leaguers was forthcoming.

Gilmore's announcement, and his trip East in keeping with the announced plans awakened the National and American leagues to the new peril. If they didn't give immediate help to the International League it might go out of business and leave a rich unfortified field in which Gilmore could plant a high class minor league.

The big leagues in organized baseball realized that if the International League quit business it would leave six big cities without baseball representation: Newark, N. J.; Jersey City, N. J.; Providence, R. I.; Montreal, Quebec, Tornoto, Ontario, and Rochester, New York. And it would give the Feds a chance to jump into those cities with a club nd establish a big minor league.

So the big league folks are said to hve gotten together found out what sort of assistnce the International wanted and agreed to give it, thus saving the International League from possible dissolution nd incidentally closing to the Feds six big cities when they might have operated a minor league without opposition.

AN INVESTMENT IN LOVE

It Was a Complicated Business.

By EUGENE A. VOGT

Copyright by Frank A. Munsey Co.

Glenwish Johnson sat in the private office of the Acme-Johnson Grocery company, of which commanding establishment he was president and practically sole owner.

Curtis, the confidential young man of Johnson's own business rearing, was with him, as usual, at this hour—4 o'clock—to receive his superior's final instructions for the day.

"Well," concluded Mr. Johnson in that icy tone the meaning of which none knew better than Curtis, "that's settled. If that Marden note is not paid tomorrow you go ahead and foreclose the mortgage. This presuming on old friendship and that sort of rot will not go. I've renewed it once, and I'm tired of it."

Curtis smiled and nodded as he shut down the top of his chief's desk. The latter had turned to go, but stopped suddenly.

"By Jove!" he exclaimed. "I almost forgot. My little girl is twenty-one today." The diplomatic Curtis merely smiled his congratulations. "Hand me my private check book, Curt," ordered Johnson. "I'll take it home with me."

Emil, the porter of Charles Thran's leaf tobacco establishment on Water street, New York, was the first member of that firm's force to gasp as Edna, Glenwish Johnson's daughter, alighted from her electric car and briskly entered his part of the house.

"I should like to see Miss Grace Marden, Mr. Thran's stenographer," she said sweetly.

"Right in there, lidy," he said, pointing toward the inner office.

"Hello, Edna," came Thran's voice, cheery and cordial. "What on earth brings you way down to Water street?"

"I came down to see Grace on business, Mr. Thran. You don't mind letting me speak to her in private for a few minutes?"

Thran patted the girl's cheek with the familiarity of a very old friend and ceremoniously bowed himself out of his own office, softly closing the door behind him. Presently, however, the door of the private office opened and Edna stood at the threshold, her face rather pale and her pose unsteady.

"Please come in, Mr. Thran," she pleaded tremulously.

Mr. Thran re-entered his sanctum only to find that his troubles had just begun. His young stenographer was huddled in her chair disturbingly near the verge of tears.

"I can't do a thing with her, Mr. Thran," began Edna fiercely. "I do wish you would make her do it: I can't."

"What is it, Edna?" he inquired, with real concern.

"The whole thing in a nutshell is this: Mr. Marden, this foolish girl's father, owes papa $5,000, and if it isn't paid before 3 o'clock today papa says he will foreclose the mortgage or something, and Grace and Uncle Bully John Marden will be homeless. Now, I was twenty-one yesterday, and papa gave me a check for $5,000 as a birthday gift. I was so happy about it, knowing that it would just cover the amount Uncle John owes papa, and now Grace—Grace—she won't take it. Please make her take it, Mr. Thran."

"Please, Mr. Thran," now came appealingly from the other girl, "please do not try to make me do this thing. God knows I appreciate Edna's motives, and I love her all the more for her kindly intentions. But I cannot take this money from her."

"Edna," he said very tenderly, "you are a very kind, dear girl, and I am proud to know you. But you do not understand, my dear. I am truly very sorry for both of you."

* * * * * * *

Johnson would gladly have paid the five thousand himself, but was afraid of that man Curtis. After twelve years of patient work to make a real business man out of his young confidential man Johnson did not dare to make so sentimental a proposition.

So he had carefully planned it all, had presented Edna with the check and an admonition to invest it as she saw fit, and then dexterously apprised her of Marden's indebtedness to him and the inevitable consequences of a failure to meet the note the next day.

Johnson only heard of the miscarriage of his plan at about 2 o'clock that afternoon. Returning to his private office from luncheon at that hour, he found his daughter on the verge of tears with the check in her hand.

"Oh, papa, Grace won't take the check, won't let me help her—me, her best friend."

He turned to his daughter, smiling grimly. The girl placed the piece of paper she had been holding in his hands.

"Come along with me, dearie. You do not have to ask Grace Marden or any one else to pay that note. All you need do is to go over to the bank and pay it. But as my check is not certified and, besides, you have never been inside of a real commercial bank I'll go with you if you will let me."

Edna rewarded her father with a grateful hug and kiss, and they traversed the outer offices. Glen Johnson, accompanied by his daughter, walked authoritatively up to the note teller's window of one of New York's largest banking institutions.

"How do you do, Mr. Johnson?" greeted the man behind the bars respectfully.

"All right," responded the other cordially. "You have a note here for collection, $5,000, John Marden, maker, to my order. This lady wishes to pay it. Want me to certify it?"

The note teller scrutinized the check.

"Oh," remarked Smith, still smiling amusedly, "the check is all right, of course, but I can't take it. The note has been paid, Mr. Johnson."

"Paid?"

"Most unusual thing about this collection," resumed the teller. "It seems everybody wants to pay it. You are the third party to attempt to do so. It wasn't more than ten minutes ago that Miss Grace Marden came in to pay it. She presented a certified check signed by Charles Thran"—

"Oh, Mr. Thran!" interposed Edna gleefully. "So he paid it himself. Isn't that noble of him?"

"Mr. Thran's intentions were good," proceeded the teller, "but he was too late by at least half an hour; but, of course," and here the teller risked a sly wink at Edna's father, "you know who really paid it, Mr. Johnson."

"I! I!" exploded the latter. "Do you think I came over here with my daughter to make a fool of myself?"

"I—I—really, I beg your pardon," stammered Smith. "But naturally I thought you knew when your own Mr. Curtis paid the note."

"It's all right, Mr. Smith," muttered Johnson, stroking his brow. "Come, Edna, let us go."

Johnson was still nervously clutching his daughter's hand as they passed through the outer offices of the Acme-Johnson Grocery company.

Just before he ushered the girl into the private office he ordered the office boy to send in Mr. Curtis at once. The culprit entered with his usual placid air.

"Hear anything about the Marden note?" asked Johnson leadingly.

"Yes, sir," replied Curtis dryly. "The note has been paid."

"Oh, it has, has it?" asked the chief sarcastically. "How do you know that since you haven't been to the bank today?"

The smile on the confidential young man's face was serene.

"I've been at the bank, Mr. Johnson," he said calmly. "I went there for the purpose of paying the Marden note."

"And you paid it?"

"I paid it."

"You paid it," repeated Johnson, riled by the other's nonchalance. "We know you paid it, but why? You—in heaven's name! Why did you pay it? There is something behind all this, and I want to know it."

"There is a great deal behind it, Mr. Johnson," admitted Curtis cheerfully. "My life's happiness is behind it. Grace Marden has promised to become my wife."

"And you thought you would do a very wise thing by paying her father's note?" demanded Johnson.

"I thought so," replied the young man with just the slightest note of doubt in his voice. The elder man turned abruptly to his desk.

"I am sure," soothed his daughter, "that you are to be congratulated, Mr. Curtis. And your paying the note was a very noble act."

"Thank you," replied Curtis sheepishly as he took the dainty hand she had extended.

Ungallantly and ungratefully, he wished the radiant young woman showering him with appreciation would suffer him to get away or—better yet—would depart herself and leave him to have it out with her imperious, heartless father alone.

But suddenly Johnson rose to his feet. The young assistant's worried expression gave way to a triumphant grin at sight of the changed countenance of his chief, for the good, old fighting gleam shone in those eyes once more. Johnson handed the young man a check he had written.

"Now, listen here, Curt," he said sharply. Curtis knew the tone and hearkened attentively. "This is an order, and if it isn't carried out to the letter I'll fire you." Johnson's gray eyes softened as he continued: "Curt, you have put your good self in a fix. Bully John's daughter is too proud to stand for what you have just done. Don't I know the girl? Now, boy, you go over to the bank and stop that fool deal you just made. Now, you listen to me!" as Curtis made a gesture of protest. "Listen to sense, will you, even if you are in love! You go over to the bank and do as I say. Then you come back here with that abominable note. And then it's my move. I'll write Marden a letter, agreeing to extend that infernal note of his another four months. I'll tell him—er—anything—changed my mind or something. Well, never mind—what I tell him that's none of your business nor," turning to his daughter, who had laughed audibly, "any of yours either, madam. That saves the girl's pride and relieves the old man's anxiety. Now, listen to me, you two—two—well, never mind!" for Edna had laughed irreverently again. "I want you to know this much. I pay the $5,000—do you get that? I—Glenwish Johnson—and no other living man, or woman either! Now, Curt, scoot!"

Curtis having "scooted," father and daughter faced each other with a new and better understanding.

"I am so proud of you," she murmured. Glen Johnson caught the tears in her voice even before he saw them on her cheeks.

"You mustn't cry about it, girlie," he said tenderly.

But she did cry about it, while her happy father held her very close to his breast, for he knew that every tear she shed was a token of her new love and reverence for himself.

For the Children

Among a score or so of girl swimmers who took part in the racing and diving contests at the recent Sportsman's Show in New York city none attracted so much attention as Miss Catherine Brown. She was the youngest of the lot and surely the handsomest. Miss Catherine is only five years old, but she has been an expert swimmer ever since she was able to walk. Her father, Commodore Alfred Brown of the American Life Saving society, is a professional swimmer, and he used to take Catherine out in Flushing bay when she was a baby. In fact, she is not much more than that yet. But under his tutelage she has become an expert diver and is able to swim long distances. Her home is in Flushing, a part of New York city.

Washington's Birthday, Old Style.

Of course we of the present day wouldn't even dream of allowing the 22d of February to pass without observing it as the birthday of George Washington. But there was a time when it was not celebrated on that day. This was due to the fact that some of the states kept the old style calendar long after sister states and other countries had changed to the new.

So we find as late as 1815 the 11th of February being observed as his birthday. In that year a stone to mark his birthplace was set up in Westmoreland county, Va., bearing the inscription, "Here the 11th of February, 1732, George Washington was born."

George Washington's Way.

Boys and girls, you can learn this among the many lessons derived from Washington's life and actions. Washington believed in the equality of things. Once he was traveling with his servant and stopped at an inn. When the landlord handed him the bill he found the charge to be 3s. 9d. for himself and only 3 shillings for his servant.

"How is this?" asked Washington. "My servant eats as much as I." And he paid the extra ninepence to the astonished host.

Washington's Great Feat.

Two boys were standing on the water's edge of the Potomac. The bigger boy was bragging of his uncle as a great pitcher. "Why, do you know," he said, "he could stand here and throw a stone clear across the river. Did you ever hear of such a feat before?"

"Sure!" exclaimed the other. "George Washington chucked a ling clear across the Atlantic ocean."

Sayings of Washington.

Associate with men of good quality if you esteem your own reputation.

It is better to be alone than in bad company.

Be courteous to all, but intimate with few.

Let those be well tried before you give them your confidence.

Washington's First Command.

The first military command held by the future commander of the continental army was that of a cornstalk brigade. Toy guns and swords were luxuries unheard of in the colonies, and when the boys wished to become soldiers they armed themselves with cornstalks.

Geographical Names.

What is known as the "hollow land?" Holland.

What is known as the "prospect mountain?" Montevideo.

What is known as the "swift river?" Tallapoosa, Ala.

What is known as the "cat's throat?" Tattegat.

Cookery Points

Oyster Stews.

There are many receipes for oyster stews. One must be careful about the length of time the stew is cooked. The special point is to achieve a broth that is piping hot and filled with plenty of oysters. The oysters must be cooked enough to be shriveled. If thickened with eggs or flour the broth must be smooth and creamy, not a pasty, lumpy, curdled fluid.

To avoid imperfections strain the oyster liquid to free it from sand and shell; rub together the butter and flour used for thickening until thoroughly kneaded and stir until smooth and even. Care must be taken in measuring the flour for a cream soup. One tablespoonful to the same quantity of butter or one ounce of each by weight will usually make a quart of cream soup of the right thickness.

An excellent cream soup with oysters is made by heating one quart of oysters in their liquor, with enough cold water added to make a quart of broth. When the boiling point is reached rub the oysters through a sieve until fine, pour the liquor over the pulp and set aside where it will keep warm. Blend two ounces of butter with two of flour and stir until it bubbles briskly. Add one quart of hot milk gradually and when smooth add the oysters and liquor. Season with salt and red pepper to taste.

Dishes For Lenten Eggs.

Most of the novelty kitchen devices sold over American counters originated in Germany. German cooks delight in making many novel and special dishes in which to serve special foods. This is very likely owing to the fact that the German housewife likes to use odd shaped and gayly colored dishes on her table.

In the breakfast eggs are the quaintest little dishes of majolica. Some of them are covered and some uncovered. Many of them rest over a dish designed to hold warm water and thus keep the eggs from cooling off. A design which is especially pleasing was an arrangement of twelve little nests in the shape of half eggshells grouped around a brown hare which was standing up quaintly on its hind legs and which served a point of usefulness as a convenient handle to the dish.

Another egg set arranged in much the same fashion had a little yellow chicken, life size, as the handle and center decoration. One covered dish was topped by a comfortable looking hen with her wings spread out as if she were sitting on a nest. In all there were perhaps a dozen different designs in this attractively colored majolica ware which has the advantage of being reasonably priced.

Baked Potatoes and Eggplant.

It is better always to help the steam to escape from baked potatoes by pricking them either before they are put into the oven about three times with a steel fork or when they are nearly done and the water in them has a good deal expanded in steam. Once in awhile a potato will burst if this is not done, and this makes work as well as loss.

And speaking of bursting, there is no explosion on a small scale that is much louder or has a more complete scattering of substance as its accompaniment than from an eggplant which is not pricked in time, some time before it is soft. This sort of thing is perhaps more likely to happen if the vegetable is put in the oven straight from the refrigerator.

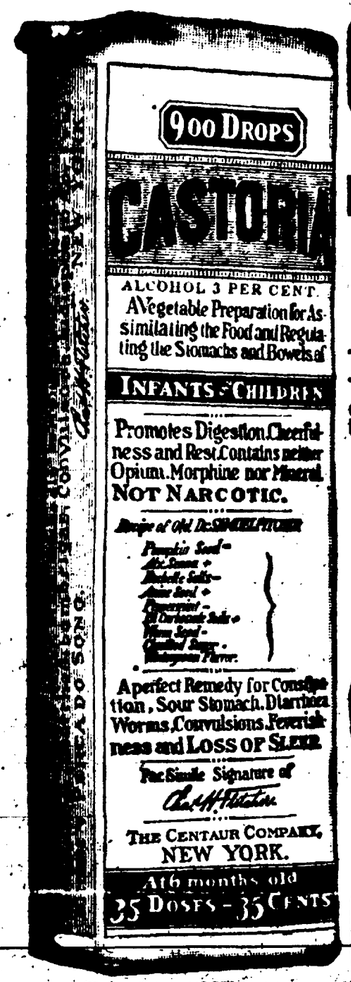
In the course of baking the skin of this vegetable becomes drier and drier until it is stiff and hard as the hardest leather and as shiny as that called patent. The vegetable being so largely water, when this is thoroughly hot and begins to turn to steam, the cook should provide a vent; otherwise she will lose her eggplant, get a good fright and have a very messy oven to clean.

Cream Puff Shells.

Cream puff shells, which are not at all difficult to make, are a great help in arranging dainty meals. Not only for desserts and entrees, but for the main course at luncheon, they may be used to advantage.

The shells, filled with a salad or aspic jelly, are something of a novelty, and as they lend themselves to attractive garnishing they have much in their favor.

For desserts they may be used in many ways. Filled with ice cream, fresh or cooked fruit topped with whipped cream or meringue or with any one of the numerous cold custards or a blancmange, they will not fail to find a welcome.



Keeping Lemons.

Lemons can be kept a long time without becoming dry if put into a jar of water with a lid. The water should be changed once a week if they are to be kept long. When used they will be quite as firm as when fresh and, if anything, more juicy.

The juice of a lemon added to a pan of water will freshen wilted vegetables. Let them stand in it for an hour.

Boiling Rice.

When boiling rice add a little lemon juice to the water. This will give it a nice white appearance and make it dry and fluffy.

Executive Ability Akin to Her Father's, Miss Morgan's Gift.

MISS ANNE MORGAN.

Miss Anne Morgan, youngest daughter of the late financier of that name, seems to have inherited some of his remarkable executive ability. Since her father's death she has been the leader in several philanthropic schemes unusual in scope and striking in their success.

One of her most successful projects has been the vacation savings fund, out of which grew many projects for the benefit of working women. One of these is a lunch room and club for girls on Thirty-ninth street, New York. A second lunch service combined with a dance hall has been opened in the Strand theater building. The Lafayette fund, whose object is to supply emergency kits for the soldiers of France, is a hobby which has enlisted her interest as well as that of many other society women. The vacation war relief committee, in which Miss Morgan is interested, supplies work to girls who are out of employment. The work consists in the sewing of garments for the war sufferers in Europe.

Altogether Miss Morgan seems to be a busy and resourceful woman and rather notable for the practical and original turn of her philanthropies.

Glove bracelets are an innovation of the season and exceptionally popular. They are made in the old gate pattern or pointed and fastened with a clasp. Worn over the glove and at its upper edge, they hold the top of the long glove in place on the arm.

HOLIDAY FARE.

Here is an attractive, economical and easily prepared refreshment menu for an evening function on Washington's birthday:

THE HOME: SUNDAY'S SERMON

Mr. Sunday's sermon Friday night was on "The Home." He said:

I am indebted to a friend for a part of my sermon tonight. I have read everything I can get hold of, and my friends are constantly sending me clippings that I don't know whom to credit for them. If I can find anything to give the devil a run for his money, I use it. You can't name a book of science, history or philosophy that I haven't read to get something to preach.

My text is Genesis xviii, 19: "For I know him that he will command his children and his household after him."

I would like to throw myself tonight on your prayerful sympathy that I may arrest the attention of this audience and grip the hearts that you may forget the speaker and go with me to the most sacred spot to rich and poor alike on this globe.

The spot around which clusters more sweet associations and precious memories than any other place in all the world—the home. The longer I live and the more I visit up and down this land and see the joys and sorrows, the success and failures of men and women, the more thoroughly I become convinced with the fact that the greatest institution of the American people today is the home. Every home should be the center of all that is elevating, inspiring and uplifting, and every home should be dead to anything that disgraces and pollutes it; to anything biting and infectious that tries to straggle across the threshold of the home to pollute that sacred spot.

'Home' Has Many Meanings

I think the proper or improper settlement of the home question, whether it is a house of joy or sorrow, weal or woe, is more with the man or woman than any other problem. You can build your palaces, you can amass your fortunes; you can spread Persian rugs on your floors; you can sit beneath the flash of the candelabra; you can push a button and have a retinue of servants waiting on you, you can loll upon silken cushions, you can roll down the street in the most magnificent and faultless equipages, but I say to you, nothing can make happy the father and mother of a Godless, drunken loafer of a boy, or a frivolous, coquettish, flirty, good-for-nothing, manicured-fingered lady of any empty-headed girl that makes you hang your head in shame and disgrace that you ever gave her birth.

You can ask ten men for a definition of home, and they will give you ten different definitions. The one will say it is the love of hearth; the next, plenty to eat on the table, plenty to wear, warmth and comfort, intelligence and devotion; a greeting with a kiss when you come in; a regrettable goodby when you leave.

To another home is a place where want looks out from squalor, vice, hunger and a damp air, shivering with oaths and blasphemy, where the meal is an empty table, where obscene songs are the lullabys of the children and they are thieves and robbers, where there is no Bible or Sabbath, every face is a picture of want. A home with nothing more than four walls and a roof, the vestibule to the pit, the doormat of hell, a chain forging links to bind them down to perdition.

Defects in Homes Dangerous

Not only peace and happiness center about the home, but all that is moral and religious as well. I believe the downfall of most men and women can be traced to some defect in the home. Every blackleg, gambler, every drunkard rolling and staggering and spluttering, every woman of the redlight district who is selling her virtue, was once pure as the morning dew.

No drunkard ever intended to be a drunkard. The man who says I can drink or let it alone—I notice they never let it alone—the man who tells me he can drink or let it alone lies.

The drunkard begins with the moderate drinker. One of the curses of the world today is the moderate drinker, and not the immoderate drinkers.

Nearly one-half of the inmates of the reformatory, committed there for crimes, commit the crimes for which they are sent there while in a state of involuntary or involuntary vagrancy. The genesis of vagrancy; it is a big question to answer in one sermon, but I am going to say something about that later. One-tenth of them have lost their parents; one-half have lost either father or mother, and 65 per cent are from homes where the parents have been divorced.

So, broken homes and broken lives seem to go hand in hand; they are inseparably connected. Many times sons and daughters are brought up in idleness, unrestrained in the expenditure of their money, rapidly acquiring prodigate habits, they figure in escapades that scandalize society, indulge in fast horses, gambling, men and women, and the diversions of the indolent rich, racing, lust and passions, and at last they go to a premature grave and are remembered only for the dissolute lives they led.

Society Knows Little Religion

About women of the smart set, little can be said in justification. They are silly, frivolous, extravagant, they have thrown to the winds all modesty prudence, religion, and the virtues that are so attractive in women, and have allowed themselves to be flattered, cajoled and bamboozled by a lot of jilted jays with cracked characters, and they turn their homes into third rate gambling dens and booze joints.

They have vaudeville in their homes they indulge in gambling, and the average society women today is more familiar with poker chips and the names of fancy wines and champagne than she is with the relics of classic literature and she couldn't quote a verse of scripture from God's holy word to save her good-for-nothing hide.

One of the prettiest pictures that God has ever painted or the world ever looked at is a father and mother that love Jesus Christ and they take hold of the hand of their oldest child and the next oldest child, and the next child, down the line to the youngest, and the whole family go shouting and singing into glory.

The Blackest Picture in World

The blackest picture in the world is to see a father who sneers and mocks at God and a mother without Christ. The worst monstrosity is the mother without Christ with her children playing around her knees and never receiving from her lips a word about Christ, or hear her mention the name of God. If you see them locking arms, taking hold of the hands of the oldest child and the next, and the next, and on down to the youngest, and that whole family going on to hell.

I want to tell you that this is a picture of many a home in Philadelphia. There is many a man in Philadelphia who hasn't anything but his money. He is the poorest man in the world, if he has nothing but money.

You train a child in the way it should go, and when it is old it will not depart from its training. I believe that if a child is properly trained, it will not often go astray.

Legislature Is 'Pickled'

The normal way to get rid of drunkards is to stop raising drunkards. I don't know what you'll do in Pennsylvania, for your legislature looks as if it was soaked and pickled in alcohol. The normal way to get rid of thieves is to stop producing thieves. There are multitudes of families that are just living. When a child comes into the home, if it is a boy, that boy is a thief, and if it is a girl, that is another prostitute.

Our national life will never rise higher than the home life. The home life will never rise higher than you as individuals. Gladstone said one day talking with Mr. Talmage: "A man can talk about the questions of the day, but there is but one question; settle that and you will settle all others, and that is the question of religion in the home." That is where to settle that question; that is where to settle every financial, political, psychological question that comes up. That's the place.

You women can make a hell of a home or a heaven of a home. Don't turn your old gatling gun tongue loose and rip everybody up and rip your husband up and send them out of their homes. If I were going to investigate your piety, I would ask the girl who works for you. If I were going to find out what kind of a business man you are I would ask the clerks who stand behind your counter. I wouldn't go to the preacher. No.

This talk about the land of the free is discounted when the children look like a rummage sale in a second-hand store; with uncombed hair, ripped pants, buttons off, stockings hanging down. It doesn't take the wisdom of truth to see that mother is too busy with her social duties, clubs to pay much attention to the kids.

Story About Grady

Whenever you go to Atlanta, her citizens will take you to Piedmont Square, and say, "Look at that statue," and you say, "Who is it?" And they will answer, "That is our Henry" "Henry, who?" "Henry W. Grady." Did you ever hear how our Henry disappeared from home for three days?

Henry W. Grady, whose life was too short—when he was a young man, left the south and went to New York. In walking down the street one day he noticed a crepe on a door, four doors away. He asked his landlady if some one had died. She said, "Oh, yes, I heard there was a woman over there sick and I guess she's dead." Haven't you been over to see her?" "No, I am too busy." "Had she any children?" "Yes, four or five." "When is the funeral?" "This afternoon." "Are you going?" "No."

Henry walked away and said, "This is no place for Henry W. Grady. I am going down south where, when the neighbor takes sick we are not so busy to go and see them and comfort them, and when they die we are not so busy that we can't carry a few flowers. The least we can do is to see if we can't help them bear their burdens and stand by them."

And he left the north and went south and became the brilliant editor of the Atlanta Constitution. Men swear by his editorials in the south. One of the most beautiful things in the English language is his, "The Cavalier Among the Roundheads." His editorials in the Atlanta Constitution were gems.

He found himself drifting away from God that his old mother had taught him, and he packed his grip and bought a ticket and went out into the country—miles and miles into the country in the wilderness of Georgia, where his mother lived and he was born. She had refused to leave her old homestead and live in his big house with her brilliant son in Atlanta. He went to the farm and on past the pump, and into the kitchen, and when he said, "Mother, I am drifting away from God," she came back and she took his grip up the stairway into his old room, and she baked him some corn pones and fried him some hog jowl, made him hominy and mothered and kissed him like he was a boy, and she took him on her lap and she hugged and kissed him like he was a boy, and when it was time to go to bed she went upstairs with him and she tucked him in and kissed him goodnight. She did that for three days, and when he returned to old Atlanta he came back with Jesus Christ, and he has never lost him since, from that day to this day.

The Real Capital of the Nation

Henry Grady went to Washington and he stood on Pennsylvania avenue and looked up at the hill where the capitol stands, and he said that is the capitol of my nation, the capitol where the laws are made, and the tears rolled down his cheeks and later when he went back to Atlanta, to his home in the southland, he wrote an editorial in the Atlanta Constitution, in which he said, "I was wrong when I said that was the capitol of our nation; the capitol of our nation is where the children are taught to love God, whether it be a palace or a log hut. And what this nation needs is more Christian homes."

High-minded men, they make the nation great.

I believe in blood; I believe in good blood, bad blood, honest blood and thieving blood; in heroic blood and cowardly blood, in virtuous blood, licentious blood, in drinking blood and sober blood. The lips of the Hapsburg tell of licentiousness. Those of the Stuarts tell of cruelty, bigotry and sensuality, from Mary, Queen of Scots, down to Charles I and Charles II, James I, who showed the world what a fool a Scotchman can be when he is a fool—down to King James II.

Scotch blood stands for stubbornness. They are full of persistency, bulldog tenacity and stick-to-itiveness. I know a lot about the Scotch. Mrs. Sunday is full-blooded Scotch. English blood speaks of reverence for the kingly power and love of the past. That is shown by the $50,000,000 England spent to put a crown on George's block. Danish blood stands for religious fervor and zeal for God.

Jewish blood tells of capacity to make money as truly in these days as in the days of Abraham. According to our standards, Abraham was a pretty wealthy man, with one and a half millions. And Solomon was worth more than five billions. He could have had J. P. Morgan for his chauffeur, John D. Rockfeller to mow his lawn and Andrew Carnegie to black his boots.

Good Home Better Than Laws

The mother of Nero was an old murderess and it is no wonder that her son, soaked with booze, fiddled while he watched Rome burn. He made fire brands of Christians and laughed at their sufferings, becaue they would not forsake their Christ. The mother of Patrick Henry was eloquent and that is the reason every boy and girl knows "Give me liberty or give me death."

Phillip Dodridge's mother taught him Bibical stories from the old Dutch tile of the kitchen fireplace. Authority and example are needed in the home today more than ever in the history of the nation. I have met upon the arena of conflict every form of man and beast you can imagine that I'd meet in the fight for decency; and I am convinced tonight that neither law or gospel can make a nation without home authority and home example. The boy who has a wholesome home and surroundings and judicious control and moral living included does not often find his way to your state reformatory.

Parental neglect is the cause of most of juvenile delinquency. That parent who is afraid to correct the child may be compelled to see the state of Pennsylvania correct him in the reformatory.

"Tied to mother's apron strings." This is an acient term of reproach designed to separate pimply youths with peak heads from their last vestige of self-restraint and self-respect. The sneering of this phrase will convert a fairly decent boy into a loud-mouthed, swaggering tough, with a vocabulary that would make a bowery bum sound like a piker and give the boy all the refined tastes of a wharf rat. The symptoms are his ability to absorb more fine cut than would fill a two-story cuspidor, a lying tongue that would make old Ananias look like a chromo of truth crushed to earth.

'Independence' of Youth

When a boy begins to call his father "Old man," and puts in a good share of the night trying to win the jackpot, lays up against a quart of red-eye in a suds parlor, crawls into the hay at 4 a. m. from the last dance with a three-step headache, the chances are some cheap sports called up him to assert his independence of the strings dangling from about his mother's waist.

The boy who allows himself to be laughed into a cheap imitation of a three-carat sport is a weak sissy. The indifference of some fool parents helps the game along. The father who crawls under the blankets at 8 and allows his son to give the cops a merry chase until the cocks crow will need a four-section fire ladder to get a look into heaven. Some parents are so afraid their sons will be called a milk sop that they let down the bars. I notice the boy who is tied to his mother's apron strings usually cannot tell four aces from alfalfa, but when there are forty applicants for a job, his tag is No. 1, blue.

The sporty guy with a green vest puffed eyelids, looks about as good to a hard-headed merchant as counterfeit money. I would rather be tied to mothers' apron strings than looked up to as having an appetite for 60-cent booze and a consuming desire to steal the next jackpot with a pair of fours.

Anarchy Born in the Home

Anarchy is not born in the dens of the Nihilists or the slums of the Haymarket, but in the home. What the child is in the home, he will be in the streets and in public. How me! Many millions of farmers in this country are being taught how to take care of the hog, what slop to feed him, how to feed him, to add a few extra pounds to his flesh and an extra curl to his tail.

And we have got in this country twenty-three universities that have a department for the study of the American boy. In other words, we think more of slopping and feeding the hog than of feeding and training the boy and keeping him out of hell. We are going raffy over money; we are commercially crazy.

If a boy will not obey his father and mother, he will not obey the social and moral law. One of the danger signs of our times is the curse of idle mothers. Many a woman never darns a stocking or patches a pair of pants.

They manage to drag their old carasses to meals, and if they ever go out, it is to some entertainmen, some bridge whist party, some Dutch lunch or out to some opera, and out to some fashionable milliner; that eternal routine of bride whist, dressmakers, milliners; they beat that little path. They never go out to help the poor, they never try to do anything in the homes of squalor or want; they never try to bridge the chasm and meet the fellow with the dinner bucket. If he goes to church, he thinks they are too stuck up, great big stiffs, and he tells them to go plump to hell.

And if you die and they keep it out of the newspapers, no one will ever miss you. Not even your husband, only when he gets your millinery bill showed under his nose.

Monuments for Mothers, Too.

The training of a Martin Luther or a John Bunyan is greater than the training of a Caesar or an Alexander the Great. To launch a boy for Christ is better than launching a battleship or a cruiser.

That glittering pillar down there on the banks of the Potomac is not George Washington's monument, but it is his mother's monument, too.

Back in 1850 an American went across the seas, died and was buried in a foreign land. Who was it sleeping in that coffin which was brought back on the deck of an ocean liner ploughing the seas? What battle had he fought? None. What statue had he carved? None. What great oration had he delivered? None. He had simply written a little song. John Howard Paine had written, "Be It Ever So Humble, There's No Place Like Home."

Indorses Woman Suffrage

It is certain that if children are entertained properly in their homes they will not go outside and learn the vice of the grog shop and dens of vice. The morals of the American youth are being crushed and mangled by their suppers, booze parties, card games and silly empty social functions. I believe women should have more power in government. Let them vote, because it is apparent that the men in Pennsylvania have failed in their duty.

The home has been discarded, trampled under the dust and punched into oblivion by the politicians who are afraid to give women the ballot. Don't thing for a moment that they are not afraid. They tremble when they realize what women will do when they obtain the ballot. I don't know what you'll do in Pennsylvania, for your legislature looks as if it was soaked and pickled in alcohol.

If you men haven't decency enough, to enact laws to protect the homes, then give the women a chance to vote, and they'll do it.

If I remember rightly, we had a war in thic country once because of taxation without representation. Nine-tenths of the opposition to woman suffrage crawled and wriggled out of the breweries and the distilleries. They know that when the women go to the polls and drop a ballot it will be the doom of the grog shop.

It makes me sick to see some weasel-eyed, drunken, whisy-soaked degenerate depositing a ballot and keeping clean women away. The nation that refuses to grant the requests and calls of women to protect the homes from the forces that are eating out their vitals is doomed to oblivion, whether it is this or any other nation.

Mother the Bulwark of Nation.

The mother is the bulwark of this nation, and it is for her to assume the responsibility of the home; but she must have the support of a husband who realizes his duty and privilege, too. Many mothers think that to keep their names on the social register they must have wine and booze to treat some frizzle-headed old fool who will call. If the old fool doesn't like you because you don't treat her—let her go to the devil... .... The world owes a debt of gratitude to the mother. Bob Ingersoll said at one time that it took one mother to make a home and 100 men to make a company.

The history of the world has shown that its greatest characters owe their successes to their mothers. Susanna Wesley was not only the mother of John Wesley, but the mother of the Methodist Church.

SHEDDING THE COCOON

THE butterfly never touches its wings to the breeze, never spreads its beautiful colors out against the rays of the sun, until it sheds its cocoon—and starts away to fulfill that mission in life so mysterious yet so perfectly planned.

Every man who is going anywhere, is running a race against his own ignorance, prejudice, indifference, incompetency, and inexperience. These are the competitors lined up against you in every fight you make all down the trail. You cannot go into partnership with these competitors, because they will smother and destroy you—and the only way to win the race is to out-distance them.

One of the first notions that steal into the mind of the man who has gone a little way toward success is, that he must not teach others below him the things that are of fundamental importance in the work he is doing. The uneducated, the shortsighted, the undeveloped man is afraid that a plan which gives his knowledge to someone else will eat away the foundation of his own advancement. The biggest hour, or the biggest day in the life of any man, is the hour or the day in which he grows out and beyond his position.

The problem of every man is to discard the chains that tie his hands and feet—the things that hold him down. And the man who gives away what he knows, who passes every good thing along to some one else, is the man who gets the most out of the world after all. He is the man who will be pointed out in the crowd, or in the mob, as the man who is not afraid—because he has nothing to fear.

The man who trains his assistants to do his work in accord with his idea; the man who hands the key to every situation to someone else below him, is the man who is making progress—fastest and surest. We build as we are assisted to build—and we are assisted to build as we teach others to do our work.

No man prepares himself for greater opportunity until he prepares someone else for the opportunity he has already accepted and lived up to. No man takes a bigger and more important place in business or in life unless he has prepared the way for someone else to do the work he is leaving. It is the way of life, the way of evolution, the way along which life's greatest, highest and finest success is attained.

And there is something in the world after all besides money. Money is necessary, but money is only a part of the game—a very necessary part, yes—and every man should look to the fact wisely and well that both necessities and opportunities are provided for.

But in making money let us not forget to be men—and as David Starr Jordan of Leland Stanford University says, "Every man must be his own companion throughout his entire life, and only the educated, well-rounded man is fit company for himself."

CHARGE OF CONVERSION

Mrs. Sarah Jones, wife of Avery Jones, of the East river road, in the town of Volney, today instituted proceedings against Oakes Ames, a lumber dealer of Mexico, and William Jennings of Palermo.

Mrs. Jones charges conversion of a quantity of cherry and chestnut logs, to the value of $125.

The case is to be tried before justice of the peace F. J. Marshall of Palermo, February 27.

Attorney J. F. Cullen represents the plaintiff.

PROCLAMATION SET FOR FEB. 18

United Action for Protection of Neutral Shipping Rests Upon England's Change of Attitude as to Foodstuffs

By Frederick Werner

Berlin, Feb. 15.—via Amsterdam.—While some of the German papers continue to show irritation over the attitude of the United States on German's declaration of a war zone about Great Britain and its warning to neutral shipping official utterances are tending to curb them. It is known that the German government is confident of effecting an understanding that will establish the fect that Germany intends to wage no campaign of wnton destruction against neutral shipping but is taking steps to cut off England's food supplies that are entirely proper under the circumstances.

It became known today that Foreign Minister Von Jagow has kept in communication with Emperor William, who has returned to the front, and the note of reply to the American note to be given to Ambassador Gerard will first be submitted to the Emperor for his approval. It was reported here today that Ambassador Gerard would be invited to visit the Kaiser and discuss the issue with him, but no official confirmtion of this report was obtainable.

In the meantime the foreign office is working rapidly on the note of reply, as the war zone proclamation is to go into effect in three days. It is hoped by the foreign office that the reply can be transmitted to Washington by Tuesday. Some points were cleared up at a conference on Saturday evening between Herr Von Jagew and Ambassador Gerard and it is expected that the rest can be settled without difficulty.

No attempt is made to conceal the fact that the issue centering about the steamer Wilhelmina is the crux of the situation. Germany feels that England, in seizing the cargo of the ship, has declared its purpose of starving the people of Germany.

If the United States could induce England to alter her position as to foodstuffs consigned to the civilian population of Germany, it is hinted here that an agreement could be reached by which all the belligerents could unite for the protection of neutral shipping.

The Koelnischet Zeitung, which has published several editorials criticizing "Amaericn neutrality," has renewed its attacks since the receipt of the United States note, which the foreign office considers conciliatory in its entirety and a frank exposition of American views.

"From the German point of view, the contents of the United States note is not to be considered in a concilliatory manner only," says the newspaper today. It then continues with a statement as to what it considers a proper reply for Germany to make.

The Lekal Anzeiger also sharply criticizes the American note. It says: "The note is inaccurate. It does not take into consideration the situation in the war as this has developed at sea without any fault on the part of Germany. Any recognition of the action which Germany is compelled, by this defense against the superior British power at sea, to take is lacking in the note.

We are obliged and have decided to take all the consequences. Germany will have all the explanations which seem to be required at Washington. In the meantime February 18 will come and with it the time to act will have arrived."

LATE WAR BULLETINS

London, Feb. 15.—Great Britain is preparing for a period of great naval activity. It is announced here that the publication of the British naval list has been indefinitely suspended. It is the first time in history that such action has occurred. While their locations are kept secret it is known that British submarines have been detached from their main bases and have been stationed at various points where they can oppose the German under water attacks on Feb. 18.

Cettinje, Montenegro. Feb. 15.—The Austrian fleet has begun a bombardment of Antivari, the port of Montenegro. Firing can be heard here. The Austrian ships came out of their base in the Gulf of Cattare on Sunday morning and began shelling Antivaria as soon as they arrived off that port.

Venice, Feb. 15.—Servian troops are being sent against the Albanian irregulars who invaded Servia in the department of Prisrend, according to a news agency dispatch from Nish. It is stated that German gents supplied the Albanians with arms and influenced them to take the field gainst the Serbs. The Italian and Greek governments are watching developments in Albania very closely, both nations being intimately concerned with the future status of Albania.

Geneva, Feb. 15.—Following an outpost clash a vigorous engagement has developed between French and German forces in the valley of the Lauch river, in upper Alsace. The French have been able to mass a heavy force of men in that region, owing to their victories at Thann and Cernay and they have been exerting severe pressure against the German works west of Colmar.

Madrid, Feb. 15.—It was reported in official circles today that Spain is prepared to take concurrent action with the United States regarding the German declaration of a war zone around England, if the neutral powers agree to act in concert. The attitude of the government has been one of reserv, but the press professed astonishment at the German blockade.

FATHERLAND'S TROOPERS HURL BACK CZAR'S BEST BRANCHES OF SERVICE

13,000 TEUTONIC ALLIES CAPTURED

Petrograd Continues, In Spite of Authentic News of Reverses to Send Out News of Russian Successes

By Francis Lavelle Murray

Petrograd, Feb. 15.—While it is admitted here that another German invasion of Russia is in full swing along the 100-mile front from the River Niemen to Grajece, the Russians claim to have checked the troops of the Kaiser advancing from Lyck and to have inflicted heavy losses upon them. In addition, it is asserted, the Russian successes in the Carpathians have more than offset the temporary gains of the Germans in the North.

Ten days of fighting in the Carpathians, according to a dispatch from Lemburg, has resulted in the capture of more than 13,000 Austro-German troops. The Teutonic allies have suffered a setback in their attempt to relieve Przemysl by a defeat at Smolnik, in the valley of the upper San river east of Lupkew pass. The Austro-German positions in the valley and on the western heights were captured in a bayonet charge by the Russians. The Austro-German troops withdrew from that district on Saturday, leaving about half a regiment to cover the retreat. Pratically all of the troops left behind were taken prisoners.

To the southwest of Dukla pass the Russians are continuing their offensive on Hungarian territory, though meeting with stubborn resistance. The Russians have thus far been unable to force their way past the Bartfeld-Svidnik front to strike at their foes' line of communication in the interior of Hungary, but they have successfully repulsed the Austro-German attacks and forced the Teutonic troops to fall back slightly.

While no important developments are reported from Bukowina, it is asserted here that the Russians are holding their new positions there tenaciously and that the fierceness of the Austro-German attacks have abated.

POLICE CHIEF SHOT; FOUR MEN HELD

Alleged Assailants Captured After Long Pursuit Made By Soldiers and Civilians

Hingham, Mass., Feb. 15.—After an exciting chase by United States marines, the militia, the police of several South Shore towns and hundreds of citizens, four men were detained in connection with the shooting of Washington Irving James, Hingham's chief of police. James is in a critical condition as a result of three wounds which he received. Last night Patrolman Heffernen had arrested an Italian for drunkenness. Later Jmes was standing in front of the station when three Italians approached. It is supposed demanded the release of the arrested man. A moment later five shots were fired and aJmes was shot down.
and James was shot down.
tive had been surrounded on the government reservation at the United States naval magazine in Hingham.

MRS. WHITE SAVED CHILD FROM HUNGER

New York, Feb. 15.—There is one woman in this world whose head had not been turned by wealth. She has not forgotten the trials and discouragements she faced when she was seeking fame on the stage. She is Mrs. Archibald S. White, wife of a Cincinnati millionaire, who a few years ago was Miss Olive Celeste Moore, actress.

Mrs. White saw a little ragged girl weeping outside a Broadway restaurant. It was raining. The former actress got out of her limousine and inquired the child's trouble. The little girl could not sell her papers; her father was out of work; their home was poverty-stricken. Mrs. White took the child by the hand and led her into the brilliantly lighted palace. From table to table this woman in silks and furs led the ragged little urchin and personally offered the papers for sale. They went in a jiffy. Fifty dollars was raised for the child. Then she was given a meal the like of which she neve a enjoyed before. And she was sent home in style—in a limousine—happy in the thought that the wolf had been kept from the door.

Von Hindenburg Remains Master of Situation In East Prussia; Begins Operations for Decisive Battle

By FREDERICK WERNER.

Berlin, Feb. 15. via Amsterdam.—In the fastest series of offensive movements that has marked the operations in the eastern theatre of war. Field Marshal Von Hindenburg's army has cleared the Russins from all the districts of East Prussia and has in turn invaded the Czar's territory. Dispatches received here from Breslau today stated that. following their success in the Gumbinnen district, the German troops had rolled the Russians back in their attacks before Lyck and near Johannisburg and had begun n assault on the Russian positions in the vicinity of Grajeve, on the road to Ossowacie, which commands the crossing of the Bobr river.

North of Suwalki the Germans have also penetrated Russian territory and a battle is developing in the district from which the Germans were forced to retire a few months ago because of weather conditions which prevented their bringing up the forces necessary to oust the Russian troops massed against them.

The return of Emperor William to the eastern theatre after his sudden return here is believed to indicate that the German rmies will be for several weeks in the zone where they have again clinched with the Russians. The next scene of violent conflicts is expected to be before Ossowic, whose fall would allow the Germans to strike at the rear of the Russians defending Warsaw.

OTTAWA TOO, HAS ITS AEROPLANE SCARE

Like Unto London the Capital City Was Plunged Into Precautionary Darkness

Ottawa, Ont., Feb. 15.—Excitement reigned in this city last night and early today, following the receipt of a message from Brockville stating that three aeroplanes had crossed the St. Lawrence river, presumably from New York State and were headed this way.

The military authorities could not account for the pressence of the air craft unless they were hostile machines, bent upon doing damage to government institutions or harm to government officials. Although strict watch was kept, the machines were not sighted over this city.

Ottawa was in darkness all night, even the Royal Mint being dark for the first time in history.

Premier Borden is in this city, but the Duke of Connaught, the Canadian Governor-General, is absent.

SMALL GERMAN FORCE ROUTED FRENCH AT NIGHT

By Franklin P. Merrick.

Paris, Feb. 15.—The Weevre district between the Meuse and the Moselle rivers, is again the scene of hard fighting. After the capture of a strong position on the heights flnking the valley of the Mad river, northwest of Pont-a-Moussen, the French began delivering fierce counter attacks to dislodge the Kaiser's forces.

The village of Norrey was taken by the German in a surprise attack at night. It was the scene of a terrible encounter in the darkness during which it was set on fire in several palces. The weather was cold and the ground was covered with snow.

The French outpost, stationed at the edge of a forest, was surprised by German soldiers who crept up through the darkness. With machine guns ready for action, the Germans then pressed forward into the village streets.

When the alarm was given the French troops opened fire from the windows of the houses in which they had been billeted. The German sharpshooters, taking refuge in other houses, fired at the flashes of the French rifles.

Norrey is upon high ground, dominating a considerable amount of territory around it. Its capture marked the first important step in the campaign of the Germans to win back the territory lost to the French a number of weeks ago.

The strength of the German forces in the region north of Pont-a-Mousson threatens the position of the French forces southwest of Metz.

Artillery duels are occurring elsewhere upon the line. It is reported that the Germans have burned a number of villages within the French lines by dropping fire bombs upon them. This destruction was evidently intended to wipe out buildings which otherwise would have afforded shelter for the French troops and to facilitate the German artillery fire.

Pass the Federal Workmen's Compensation Act!

Awaiting action in both houses of Congress is a measure, known as the Kern-McGillicuddy bill,providing for a system of compensation for the government's employes in case of injury or death. The bill should not wait longer; it should be reported and adopted. It is altogether a desirable measure, and one which would among other benefits be an economy in that it would relieve Congress of the annual flood of special claim bills.

The United States, which should be a leader, lags behind other countries in making provision for its civilian employes injured in its service. The compensation law of 1908 covers only about one-quarter of the 400,000 workers. Others have to present claims by way of a special bill, involving a long lobbying process with all the inconveniences and injustices which accompany that way of doing business. Meantime the injured man or the family of the employe killed in duty may be in want, starving or public charges. The Department of Labor approves this measure. Decency and justice are bound to be promoted by its becoming law.—Tribune, N.Y.

Inconsistency of Labor Leaders

Why it is that many of those who are most insistent in the demand for limitation of immigration are the most ardent in their advocacy of the free and unlimited importation of the product of that same labor, provided only that it be made abroad instead of at home?

They insist on the one hand that the American manufacturer should be exposed in the marketing of his product to the direct competition of the cheap output of the cheap labor of foreign lands, and on the other hand that the foreign producer be protected through the limitation of the labor supply in the United States.

These men hug the delusion that they can compel the American manufacturer to pay high wages to the men he employs, and at the same time enable these employes to buy the product of pauper labor abroad at a lower price than the cost of production of the same articles in the United States.

Under this arrangement where do these demagogues suppose the product of the highly paid labor of the United States is going to be marketed? If not among ourselves,then certainly not among the cheap labor markets of Europe and the Orient.

The truth is, of course, that all these men aim at is injury of the American employing producer. They shut their eyes to the fact that the blows aimed at him must inevitably fall upon the whole industrial structure. They choose to ignore the fact that when an American manufacturer is put out of business the men he employs are thrown out of employment. They would make it just as expensive as possible for the American manufacturer to produce, and then they would give the freest possible access of the foreign employer of cheap labor, unaffected by this legislation to the American market.

The double program of attack upon the American manufacturer, that of making it expensive for him to produce in this country and then exposing his product to coolie, peasant and serf competition, has destroyed the employment of something like three million men in the United States. Their loss in wages in a single year vastly overbalances the advantages secured through legislation and organization for labor in the United States in the last dozen years.

The intelligent attitude on the part of sincere labor leaders would be, of course, that the difference in wages, hours of labor and conditions of labor, as between the American producer and the foreign producer, should be equalized through Tariff Protection. It is of course absolutely certain that without such legislation the competitive position of the American producer cannot be maintained. Organizations sincerely seeking the promotion of the welfare of labor rather than mere political prestige and patronage would also be as active in bringing about modern labor legislation and factory legislation in the States dominated by their associates in party leadership as in Northern States, but the fact stands out that a policy very different from this is being pursued, so that the New England manufacturer, for instance, restricted by modern labor and factory legislation, is at a great disadvantage in competition with the manufacturer of the Carolinas, where such measures have not been urged with the zeal manifested north of the Ohio, for reasons not clearly explained.

In fact a coterie of powerful labor politicians actively affiliates itself with political leaders representing in public life the very commonwealths most laggard in the enactment of modern labor legislation, and assists in the maintenance of these very politicians in power. It suppresses all reference to the desperate situation of unemployment which has followed in the wake of the policies of this administration. It pretends to believe that crusades against the employer are inevitably beneficial to the men who find employment in American industries, and joins in full cry in every movement which would tend to put American manufacturing, farming and shipping interests at a disadvantage as compared with their foreign competitors.

Doubtless some leader will yet arise from the ranks of labor to challenge such subordination of the true interests of labor to political machination, the results of which are to advance individual interests, but which lead labor through a soup house to the poor house.—Tribune, Chicago.

FULTON AND A JUNIOR CLUB

The idea of a Junior Club is not original with the Commercial Club of Belle Fourche, for many commercial organizations today have some kind of a young people's auxiliary. But to Belle Fourche doubtless belongs the credit of putting into the hands of its Junior Club the active administration of a city department.

It was last May that the board of directors of the Commercial Club of Belle Fourche decided that the purely educational period of its Junior Club was over and that the advertising end of the city should be turned over to the Juniors. Belle Fourche has the commission form of government. The city commissioners, acting under a recent law, levied a one mill tax for the purpose of advertising the city. This was turned over to the Junior Club, together with the Commercial Club's advertising budget, and the details of the city's advertising are now being carried on by the young people.

Under their direction 2,000 feet of motion pictures are now being taken of the city and surrounding country. These pictures will be used in going after conventions and in entertaining visiting delegations, all of which comes under advertising and falls to the lot of this organization. Because of the uniqueness of this idea, 500 feet of these pictures have been bought by one of the leading motion picture companies and will be widely shown this fall and winter.

Visiting automobiles are not allowed to leave the city without a Belle Fourche pennant stuck on them somewhere. Strangers visiting here are met at the depots or hotels and given club room privilege cards good for ten days. Ten thousand metal pins are now being made for use in convention work. The design is of a hatchet with the words, "Burn the Hatchet—Boost for Belle Fourche—Everybody is doing it."

The Junior Club at present has a membership of seventy-five. The age limit is fourteen to twenty-one. The Club officers consist of a president, vice-president, secretary and treasurer. The board of directors consists of five members. A committee of the whole constitutes the advertising committee on conventions, finance, and entertainment.

Belle Fourche and western South Dakota never received such advertising as they are now getting at the hands of the Junior Commercial Club.

In view of the fact that Fulton is preparing ammunition for a Boost Campaign, the above suggestion is worthy of serious consideration.

Why not gather the energy of Fulton's young people and direct it in a way that will be both profitable to the individual and to the city?

Under the tutelage of our school, the Chamber of Commerce and individual citizens, an enthusiastic body of young people could easily be developed to advertise boost and popularize the city,in away which older heads could scarcely keep up with. In addition the young people would receive an enlightened conception of Fulton's needs and possibilities and thereby the foundation laid for intelligent,, cooperative citizenship.

There is perhaps no one subject throughout the length and breadth of the land which is so completely ignored in the training of the masses of young people as that of citizen training, yet which is of such vital importance, not alone in the city, but for the state and nation as well.

Sup't Fairgrieve always shows a genuine interest in any good that comes to the students, the schools and the city. There are citizens of Fulton who would lead the young people successfully in such a movement, and the success that has been attained in Belle Fourche and other places where the plan has been tried could easily be realized.

TO START SOMETHING

Some folks seem to think work is a punishment. Plenty of men dream and hope for the day when they will not be obliged to work. Without work, life would be a baseless fabric, a groundless, unsubstantial blank. Work is the greatest gift we have, save one, and that is good health.

Without work, men would mentally melt away, physically fade out, morally dissolve. The country would be made up of John Does and Richard Roes. Business would be moonshine, with but one ultimate end—a terrible awakening.

I can conceive of no one thing so fearful as forced idleness. I know of no man so low down the ladder of life as a loafer. Idleness is what supports Reno.

The nodding, sluggish, drowsy, indolent man who waits on Providence is the most expensive mistake on your pay roll.

When Fate takes from me the power to work, I want to die. I do not mean the power to dig ditches, to plow, or to climb steel structures, but I mean the power to work; and work is largely done above the neck. The man who depends upon his hands nd his feet is an automatic machine, and you can get these for a small sum now.

This statement is made to start something—to get men who work hard, to think more. I know it's pretty rough, but it takes rough stuff to start something.—Silent Partner.

Theory Versus Practice

Jacob Hohlman, a wealthy and prominent citizen of Denver, Col., is a man whose heart throbs with sympathy for the poor. To such an extent, does it pulsate that he was recently appointed chairman of a municipal committee to relieve the distress of the unemployed in that city.

He entered upon his work with ardor. First he made an exhaustive investigation of conditions and the causes which had brought them about. Then he gathered statistics, bushels and bushels of them, which he classified and arranged and tabulated and drew inferences from and speculated on until he was tired, but well satisfied with what he had learned. And finally he made a report—a perfectly beautiful report—in which he reviewed the entire situation, discussed the causes which led to poverty and the reasons for unemployment and deplored existing conditions. It was really a great effort, but it did nothing toward relieving those conditions or affording any more work for the idle.

In the meantime, and while he was thus laboriously engaged in work for the good of humanity, Mrs. Hohlman, who is something of a practical philanthropist, had made an inspection of the 43 pieces of rentable property owned by her husband, and had found that there was much that might be done to make them comfortable for the occupants.

Then, instead of sitting down and making a report to any association, she went out into the city and gathered together a small army of unemployed workmen—17 plumbers, 22 carpenters, a dozen or so glaziers and a number of handy men for assistants—and at their head she made the rounds of the buildings, repairing leaky roofs, fixing up broken water pipes, and making various and sundry repairs and improvements, which served and threefold purpose of providing work for some of the unemployed, making the houses and flats better fit to live in, and increasing the rentable value of the property.

Inspired by her example, other property owners began to anticipate the spring repairing, and now, so it is reported, a large percentage of Denver's workmen out of steady employment are engaged at tasks that can be done now quite as well as later, and are earning their own living again. The contrast between these two methods of helping the poor to live through the winter is striking, and gives an object lesson of the difference between theoretical and practical philanthropy.—News, Batavia.

SWEET THOUGHTS

By I. E. Hyde, Fulton

We all have our loves of a life time,
And of course you know I have had mine
Time has passed, but he's still in my memory,
My sweetheart, so stalward and fine

His eyes were deep pools of brown liquid,
His cheeks were as soft as a glove
His neck had the strength of old Nero
To me, you were perfect my love.

His features I can't quite describe them,
His form would Apollo shame,
My friend was the truest and noblest,
And answered—Sir Richard— by name.

I read him my lessons at even'
We shared each the other, our joys
There were others—Oh, yes; there were others,
But he was the pick of the boys.

I told him my secrets and troubles
He'd listen with countenance serene
I told him my prayers and confessions
His sympathies always were keen.

When lonely, we'd walk by the river,
When happy we'd race down the lane.
And when I grew tired of wandering
He'd carry me home again.

And then, came a day when we parted
I left him so sad and heart sick,
To the end, I'll never forget you—
My faithful old saddle horse—"Dick."

I'm lonely so lonely without him,
E'en now tears are flooding my eyes
If there's not one horse spirit in heaven
My soul will be sadly surprised.

Public Defender vs. Prosecuting Attorney

By JOHN F. SMITH

Jack Johnson is acknowledged as the champion pugilist of the world, and, because he earned the title by hard fought battles and, against terrible odds, it is just that he should be, and is seconded, as the foremost pugilist of the times.

But there is another fighter (although not of pugilistic fame) who deserves some credit for the good he has done. He does not don a pair of eight-ounce gloves and fight his battles in a twenty-four-foot ring; neither is he a seeker of notoriety, but with the knowledge of all that is right and just he bows before a court of justice and defends those who are unable to secure counsel.

To buck aginst a public prosecutor who has might and power back of him, one must be possessed of an equal amount of knowledge as his able opponent, It sometimes happens, however, that the judge, who has the power to furnish counsel for those who have no means to secure the same, will appoint a novice in the game of law to defend a prisoner charged with a severe crime.

In cases of this kind, what chance has the novice against a man having all points of the constitutional law at his command?

There can be but one ending. The prosecutor will back the novice off his feet and another victim is led to slaughter. The victim in this case is the prisoner; and guilty or innocent, he must suffer because he had not able counsel to defend his case.

There is but one way, and only one way, by which every man, guilty or innocent, can secure and be assured of justice—that way is through the office of A PUBLIC DEFENDER.

The people nominate and elect an able attorney to defend the people's property, and it is right that this should be. But is it not also right and justifiable that another able attorney shall be nominated and elected to defend prisoners charged with crime?

Los Angelos, Cal., and Evansville, Ind., have such officers, and from the reports received those officers have proved to be paying investments to the public.

Oswego county can, and should support a Public Defender. The citizens would feel better and safer with one, the taxpayers would have to pay less taxes if such an office were to be created; and, best of all, the poor fellow charged with felony would feel secure in having an able attorney to defend him.

Perhaps, dear reader, you yourself may some day be in need of able counsel, and now is the time to boost the game while the boosting is good.

Think it over!

A Movement For Better Motion Pictures

The Woman's Home Companion has started a movement for better motion pictures. Several hundred films will be sumitted to the editors of that magazine each month in advance of their release to the motion picture houses. From these the editors will select from 40 to 75 which, in their estimation, are especially commendable both from an artistic and ethical standpoint. The names of these films will be published in the magazine. These films are recommended to women's clubs, to librarians, to teachers, and to parents as clean, wholesome, educational and entertaining exhibits worthy of patronage. Of the importance of elevating motion pictures in the United States, the March Woman's Home Companion says in part:

"Within the last few years there have sprung up in your community branches of a new institution which draws to itself every week more young people than are in the churches on Sunday; more young people than are in the schools on week-days; an institution whose influence on our young people, in the judgment of educators, is second only to the influence of the family, the church and the schools. Yet of this institution, and the men behind it, and its possibilities for good, the average parent has not yet taken the trouble to make himself or herself informed.

"The church has its pastors and governing committees; the school is watched over jealously by associations of parents and teachers. The motion picture theatre, which draws as many children as either,for almost, as many hours in the week as either; is not yet taken seriously by thousands of us. And yet the motion picture theatre has unquestionably come to remain—a permanent, potent factor in our lives.

"SANITO"
COOKING UTENSILS

are a necessity for housekeepers who wish to excel in domestic science. They are the only American-made cooking ware which absolutely reproduces the high priced imported German utensils so universally used abroad. SANITO utensils have an acid proof lining which cannot crack or scale off and retains nothing to taint or discolor the food. When cooked in SANITO the food cooks evenly, retains all its juices and flavors and never scorches or burns. SANITO is a nonconductor of heat and after being heated to the cooking point—212 degrees—it requires but a very small gas flame to complete the cooking process. With proper care SANITO will last a life time.

ALBANY LETTER DAY BY DAY

Cardoze Tells Time' Readers the Doings of Officials and Lawmakers

By Frederic T. Cardoze.

Albany, Feb. 15.—From the standpoint of dispatch the present legislative session stands out as a conspicuous example of hewing to the line without delay. In session scarcely a month, the law-makers have already prepared measures covering all of the recommendations set forth in the first annual message of Governor Whitman to the senate and the Assembly.

The law-makers appeared at the Capitol to legislate on Jan. 13, after a brief recess. On that day Assemblyman Harold J. Hinman, majority leader and Thorn, started the ball of Governor Whitman's desires rolling by introducing bills to abolish the commissioner of efficiency and economy and the State fire marshal. These bills were the first two measures presented for the session.

During the weeks that followed, legislative attention was given civil service matters, the Workmen's Compensation Law, the conservation commission, the department of highways, the board of claims, the tax commission, and the election commission; leaving practically nothing in the governor's message unattended to.

Such a volumne of important legislation presented within the first four weeks of a session is without precedent. In addition, both houses favorably passed upon the proposed Constitutional amendment granting to women the right to vote as requested by the executive.

Notwithstanding all this, Comptroller Travis set a small army of his investigators at work probing legislative State deartments and a legislative committee, known as the Thompson committee was named to probe the affairs of the public service commissions.

As the result of the determination of the Republican leaders to make sure that the recommendations of the governor be immediately disposed of to his satisfaction, local bills have been held back and there is some dissatisfaction among the legislators because of the slow progress of their measures. In previous years the custom has been to first dispose of local legislation and then proceed with the administration measures. The result has usually been that the sesion has been drawn out beyond the desired length.

Even now the leaders are talking over the question of taking a recess in April so that the members of the Constitutional Convention can organize, so it is fair to assume that all of March will be necessary to clear the legislative decks and that several weeks of April may be utilized also.

The result of the probe into the public service commission may have a far more reaching effect than was at first supposed when the Thompson committee was appointed. Neither Senator Brown, the majority leader in the upper house, or Assemblyman Hinman, majority leader of the Assembly are sure that there will be a legislative investigation into the financial affairs of New York city. Senator Brown says that his attitude will be based upon the desires of the residents of the metropolis.

"New York city is an important place and forms a large share of the State," he says. "The legislature is naturally deeply interested in its affairs. I am not committed one way or the other as regards the rumored investigation. I am awaiting public sentiment. The legislature stands ready to assist the municipal authorities in bettering conditions there. The civic debt is enormous and if it can be lessened by legislation, why should not such a step be taken?" This is as far as the Senate leader will go at this time in relation to the rumored metropolitan probe.

HOW VOCATIONAL PUPILS DIVIDE THEIR TIME

Week in School, Then a Like Time at Work is the Plan.

New York, Feb. 15.—The most noteworthy attempt that the city has made to give young people not training for college, but training for real life as the boys and girls will live it in factories, offices and shops, is now under way, according to Benjamin C. Gruenberg, secretary of the New York Association for Vocational Guidance.

"Two of the greatest educators in the country—Dean Schneider, of the University of Cincinnati, and William Wirt, of Gary Ind.—have been brought here to help in the reorganization of the schools," said Mr. Gruenberg.

"I hear that Mr. Wirt has been put under the direction of a member of the Board of Superintendents who is not in sympathy with his work and has hampered it in various ways, with a consequent waste of the city's money," I said; but Mr. Gruenberg didn't know about that.

"I know more of Dean Schneider's work," he said. "He takes young people at about sixteen when they are ready to go to work or to a technical school."

What Dean Schneider Does.

Of course, no school can reproduce the exact conditions of an office or factory. There's no doubt that the best place to learn to work is in a workshop. But, on the other hand, no industry or business can be conducted efficiently if skilled workmen have to use their time in teaching the unskilled.

Dean Schneider's plan is this: A boy or girl spends one week in school and the next in a factory or shop. Then back to the school, and so on for two or three years.

The young people work in pairs. One of the partners is always in the shop when the other is in the school. The employer is simply employing two boys to fill the place of one. Each is earning half the regular wage, and each is spending three days a week in school.

Here he studies the theory of his shop work. An instructor goes with the boys from the school to the factory and supervisers and teaches them there. He learns in this way just what is required of them and is able to help them to meet their difficulties in the best way.

"We have one group of high school boys now at work in a machine shop; another group in the drafting department of a large factory," said Mr. Gruenberg. "We have several groups of girls in the offices of publishing and mail order houses."

PLAN REVIVED AT ONEIDA TO ERECT MEMORIAL SHAFT

Miss Hammond, Financial Secretary of General Committee, Urges Early Action.

Oneida, Feb. 15.—Miss E. M. Hammond, financial secretary of the General Committee named from several civic and labor organizations of the city tonight urged the continuance of the campaign for the erection of a memorial shaft.

Two years ago the General Committee made preparation for the expenditure of $3,000 for a soldiers and sailors monument and plans for a suitable design were drawn. The specifications were favorably received and the committee was on the point of accepting when the proposition was allowed to die. Since that time nothing has been done.

Miss Hammond said in nearly every city such a memorial had been erected in honor of the dead soldiers and sailors. This city, she declared, should not prove an exception to the general rule and I believe that work should again be started by the committee.

The site of the proposed monument has been selected. The most ideal location is at the intersection of Elizabeth and Main streets in the opinion of the committee which went over the matter two years ago.

MAGEE LEAVES TONIGHT

Sherwood Magee, an outfielder for the Philadelphia National will leave tonight for the Quaker City, to take part in a sporting writers' dinner. For ten years Magee has been and invited guest at these affairs, which have become famous for their completeness.

Magee was last fall traded to Boston. Immediately after the dinner he will leave for the "Bean city", to join his team before going south, to Macon, Ga., for training and the practise games.

Magee's batting average for the past eleven years has not been less than 270, and for 1910 and 1914 he reached the 321 mark. This record places him well in the front rank of base-ball sluggers.

The many friends of Magee in this city wish him a successful season with the Brades.

ROUND ABOUT

President Jacob Gould Schurman of Cornell University told the Binghamton Chamber of Commerce in an address on "The War and American Rights," that it was unfortunate that this Government did not protest when Germany and England sowed mines in the North Sea and thus, as he argued, violated the principle of the freedom of the seas. He also criticised the British attitude on foodstuffs.

JOHN SMITH'S SUNDAY ADDRESS

Times' Reporter Holds Attention of Salvation Army Sunday School Classes

John Smith gave a heart-to-heart talk to the Sunday school class at Salvation Army hall yesterday afternoon. The class attention given by the scholars to the speaker was evidence enough that the address was as interesting as it was beneficial.

Mr. Smith's remarks were in part as follows:

"Education lifts the veil that, like a curtain, hangs between the perceptive faculties of the human mind and life's unrealized higher possibilities. Therefor the aim and end of all education is to unfold and develop to the highest point of efficiency our physical as well as our mental powers. Never before was education more essential to success than it is today.

"Life is a race in which, barring accidents, the best man wins, and the best man is generally the one who has acquired the advantages gained in the public schools."

Mr. Smith explained to the children the difficulties that confronted Andrew Jackson, Abraham Lincoln, James A. Garfield and Brooker T. Washington. "There were self-made men," said Mr. Smith, "for the education they had had to be obtained through their own ambition in order to better their conditions. How successful they were, all of you who have read history know. Jackson, Lincoln, and Garfield became Presidents of the United States, and Brooker T. Washington, although a colored man, is without a doubt the most influential and the most powerful man of his race in the world today."

Mr. Smith at this point read a verse taken from "The Billboard," which says:

"The road is long and hard, I bid thee go slow; 'Till experience comes and teaches thee what way to go."

Mr. Smith closed his address by warning the boys to attend school regularly, obey their parents' wishes, and get the Gospel of Jesus Christ in their hearts, and they would not go far wrong.

BEES DRIVEN FROM HOME

One Year's Work Showed Big Mass of Honey; Little "Busy Bodies" Deserve Sympathy

One year lost spring a Queen bee with her followers alighted on the roof of I. L. Graham of Atkins Corners, and decided to make their future home there. Though a large knot hole in the cornice the bees began to swarm, and when arrangment had been made to gather in a supply was sent out to gather in a supply of sweets for the winter.

Last Sunday, Graham with a couple of friends, drove the bees from their home, then pulled enough plaster, lath, e tc., from the interior of the dwelling so that they could get at the honey storage. The bees had been living upon their winter supply all season, and still there were between 40 and 50 pounds left for Graham and his friends.

Mr. Graham decided not to sell the the honey, but to keep it for his own use, and with the exception of a few pounds given to the friends who helped him the remainder was stored away in pails for future use.

Nature lovers will wonder what became of the busy little fellows and their queen.

SHADE TREE AREAS AS BREATHING PLACES

Suggestive plans have been prepared recently by the Landscape Engineer of the New York State College of Forestry at Syracuse University for a fifteen acre public park in the city of Amsterdam, N. Y. The location of the grounds for the park is along the Mohawk river on the historical homestead of Sir Guy Johnson famous in Revolutionary times. The property is located within ten minute walk from the center of the city. Aside from the historical value of the land, the natural topographic features are such as to make the land additionally valuable for park development. The plan calls for decidedly useful park features such as a plot of five tennis courts which will be inviting to the people of the city of all ages; an athletic field containing football and baseball provisions for summer use and a skating field for winter use; a children's playground where the small boys and girls can have use of a well equipped playground under sheltering shahde trees; a public bathhouse situated at a point along the bank of the river where a good bathing beach may be developed; and boat landings to accommodate the boating both up and down the Mohawk. At one end of the park is shown a large artificial water area and in appropriate places throughout the ground trees, shrubs and flowers are recomended. Pleasing walks and trails make all features easily accessible. Near the center of the property is the old Guy Johnson Mansion which will be used as a museum and park shelter house. This is the beginning in the city of Amsterdam for the establishment of a city park. There are many other towns and cities along the Mohawk river that have equally good opportunities for the development of public shade tree areas and recreation grounds.

CLEARING SNOW HEAPS

Supt. Rumsey has a gang of workmen today clearing the sewers and leveling the snow that has been piled up in a dangerous condition along Oneida st. Especially is this true of 4th and Oneida st. where traffic is heavy and the sewers in bad shape.

ARRESTED FOR NONSUPPORT HE HANGED HIMSELF

NewoYrk, Feb. 15.—Out of work and despondent because his wife had him arrested for nonsupport, Conrad Spunlick, 34, hanged himself with a belt in his cell in the East 70th st. police station today. He told the magistrate that he was willing to support his wife, but had been unable to find work. He was taken to a cell, brooding over his troubles, smoked a cigarette, then took his life.

YESTERDAY IN PULPIT AND PEW

Fulton Pastors Address Earnest Worshipers; Rev. Mr. Buck Told of Christ's Greatness

Rev. W. G. Buck preached a sermon yesterday on "The Greatness of Christ." Among other things he said:

"Having invented no labor saving machine and no steamboat, the harvesters and mills and steamboats this very year offer their tribute in the cargoes sent in his name to the starving and wretched victims of the awful war that is now consuming the best of Europe.

"Having never written a book, a million have been written about Him and his hold upon the literary world is growing stronger each year.

"Having never invented a printing press, 1000 are kept busy every day publishing His words.

Having never sung a song for 2000 years. He has entered into the world's music from its lullabys to its oratories.

Having never written a line of peotry, He has inspired the poetic genius of the world's sweetest singers.

Having never painted a picture, He has been the subject for all the great artists the world has ever had.

Having built no colleges, three out of every four in the world are established in His name.

Having left no monument, a thousand, thousand chapels, eatherdals and temples are erected in His memory, and more than 400,000,000 loving hearts lift every week songs of praise to His name.

He found not fame in any earthly sphere but not one of the world's great inventors, scientists, financiers, educators, philosophers, artists, musicians, poets, statesmen, orators, politicians, warriors or religionists, would hestitate one moment to say, "I am not worthy to unfasten the latchet of his shoes."

Christianity offers to the world a divine book.

Christionity offers to the world a redeemed society, the church.

Christianity offers to the world a perfect system of religion.

Christianity presents to the world a peerless personality.

Christianity supplies all our needs.

At the after-meeting held last night there were five adults who manifested a desire to lead a Christian life.

The Rev. C. S. Robertson at the Presbyterian church at the vesper services spoke on Truth.

This new-old topic is ever inspiring, and the Rev. Robertson handling it in his direct forceful manner made it doubly interesting. In homely, well chosen phrases he showed that Truth is ever pure and perfect, it alone needs no fine manner or flowery language to make itself known. Ancestry, station in life, wealth and superiority alike are as nothing when Truth in its utter simplicity stands before them.

Truth does not dwell in pleasant places always, Dr. Robertson pointed out, and, indeed it is often that this "pearl without price" is seen gleaming from the most sordid surroundings. Good breeding and a superior manner of speech is oftimes but the mask of that which is devoid of the principles of Truth. Hypocrisy and make-believe are the elements that kill rather than nourish that best of all the virtues, plain, sustaining far-reaching Truth.

MRS. HILDRETH HONORED BY HOUSEWIVES' LEAGUE

Syracuse, Feb. 15.—Mrs. Albert H. Hildreth of Comstock avenue, president of the New York State Federation of Women's Clubs, has accepted an invitation from Mrs. Julian Heath, president of the Housewives League of America, to become vice-president of the latter organization. The offer was made in a letter received yesterday by Mrs. Hildreth from Mrs. Heath.

Although there is no branch of the Housewives League in this city, members of the State Federation in this city are co-operating with the league, which is a member of the state organigation. Mrs. Hilbreth is in favor of the establishment of a branch of the Housewives League here and hopes that it will be formed soon.

Speaking of the bread making contest for women of New York city, which has been originated by Mrs. Heath, to take place from February 22 to 27, Mrs. Hildreth yesterday declared herself heartily in favor of the plan and urged a similar contest for housewives and home women of this city. Mrs. Heath's contest is an outcome of the advance in price of bread in New York city to 6 cents a loaf and is intended to revive the art of bread manking in the home in order to offset the advance.

"I think that Mrs. Heath's organization has done more than any other to keep the prices of commodities from soaring any higher than they now are," said Mrs. Hildreth yesterday. "It would be a fine thing if there could be a bread making contest, open to home women, in this city."

The Albany branch of the Housewives League will have a bread making contest the latter part of this month, in connection with the contest in New York. Mrs. Heath has made the condition in the contests that only white and entire wheat yeast bread, tea biscuits and muffins made with baking powder will be eligible.

Mrs. Hildreth will go to Auburn this morning, where she will visit the prison and talk to the women and men prisoners. This will be one of the visits to penal institutions in this state which Mrs. Hildreth will make in the interests of prison reform work. The State Federation has taken up this work and will continue it this year in co-operation with the association which is trying to remedy conditions in prisons and jails of the state.

PHOTO-PLAYS FEATURES

Tonight Pathe offers the splendid 4-reel dramatic masterpiece, "The Treasure of Abdar Rahman." Two other reels are added to complete the regular 6 reel programme. Tomorrow in addition to the 5 acts of Gus Sun Vaudeville, two 3 reel features will be shown. One of them, a K. & E. 3-reel drama, "The Road to Yesterday," will be of interest to many who have read the book and have not had an opportunity to see the play. The other will be of equal interest as it features Kathlyn Williams, and Selig has spared no pains in keeping up his grand reputation in this 3-reel wonder, "In Tune with the Wilds."

DANCE TONIGHT FOR CHARITY

Success Anticipated. Sale of Tickets Has Been Good. No Extra Fee to Be Asked For Supper

The charity dance at the Elks lodge this evening promises to be a social and financial success. The new flood just placed in the ball room bids fair to be a tempting place to "hesitate," fox-trot or just waltz.

The decorations have today been completed and the colors of the order with that of the foliage make the room an attractive bower.

Mrs. G. C. Webb, president of the auxiliary, is pleased with the interest shown by the public, and with the committee in charge has endeavored to make the affair one which will be an event of importance.

The Elks orchestra, composed of the following members will furnish the music. They are M. E. Reynolds, A. F. Buell, David Carroll, Andrew Crow, F. G. Barnes, Henry Bogue, F. G. Newton, L. A. Richardson, Edward Pooler and Herbert Adkins.

The reception committee headed by Mayor Fox is composed of the following: J. W. Stevenson, M. A. Stranahan, O. S. Bogardus, John E. Boland, J. R. Sullivan, R. J. Currier, M. B. Hargrave and L. F. Cornell.

The affair is informal and is open to the public. Evening dress is not specified on the tickets, in fact "claw hammer and fish tail" will be taboo that the informal note may add to the attendance at the dance.

The ticket of admission also includes the supper ticket. No extra charge is to be made. The committee this morning found current a rumor that the supper ticket would call for an extra fee, and this the members desire to correct. The tickets are one dollar each and includes both dancing and refreshments.

ROME INUNDATED

Rome, Feb. 15.—Twenty-five hundred persons are homeless as a result of the floods in western Italy. Many buildings in the loy lying sections of Rome have been damaged by the waters of the Tiber, which is out of its banks. King Victor Emmanuel is personally directing relief measures.

ACTION BROUGHT FOR EXPENSES

Anna M. Halloran Asks $945 for Expenses Incurred for Board and Education

An action has been entered in supreme court by Anna M. Halloran against Frank F. Wilson to recover $945.00 for board and education of a son also for the board of Mrs. Halloran.

The plaintiff is the wife of William F. Halloran, ex-supervisor of the third ward. The defendant is a son of Mrs. J. W. Snyder and the late Frank Wilson, formerly a liveryman of this city. Mrs. Snyder is now living in Cleveland, Ohio, and notice will be forwarded to her concerning the action taken by the plaintiff.

The defendant's infant son, Bernard D. Wilson, it is claimed, was boarded and educated at the expense of the plaintiff from June 23, 1907, to Feb. 1, 1915, and the board and care of Marie F. Wilson, defendant's wife, from June 23, 1907, to July 1, 1908.

The action is to recover the amount due for the support of the mother and son.

County Judge Coville today granted an order directing the serving of the summons.

Attorney John F. Cullen represents the plaintiff. The papers were filed in the county clerk's office today.

Attorney H. L. Gilman representing Attorney Cullen, secured the order from County Judge Coville today.

TWO ARRESTS MADE

Heroin was Sold to Persons in Syracuse.

Syracuse, Feb. 15.—Two more arrests were made yesterday in Chief Cadin's crusade against drug peddlers in Syracuse. Willis Clark and Frank Ross, both colored, were taken into custody by Detective John Donovan and Edward Buell, a private detective. The men are charged with selling heroin.

George Davis, colored, arrested as an alleged peddler, Friday, made a statement to the police yesterday. In it he said that two of his prescriptions were written by Dr. Philo C. Hubbell and not by Dr. Silas Hubbell. The police misunderstood the name of the doctor when Davis was first questioned.

The two men arrested yesterday made no statements to the police, but a quantity of heroin was found in their possession when they were arrested in a Grape street house.

Germany's Note Is Made Public

Ambassador Says Great Britain Has Departed From All Rules of Law

Washington, Feb. 15.—The German government in a note to the United States submitted to the State Department today from Ambassador Bernsdorff, declared that Germany is willing to retrieve from its announced intention to attack British merchantmen, if Great Britain will cease interference with shipments of foodstuffs destined for the civil population of Germany.

The note asserted that the war zone proclamation was a retaliatory means adopted as a result of Great Britain's departure from rules of international law and her purpose to starve out her civil population.

German Newspaper Sees In Note a Bluff

Amsterdam, Feb. 15.—War between the United States and Germany is considered as a possibility in a neditorial in the weekly German publication, Montag Zeitung, copies of which reached here today. With the other weekly paper it publishes an enthusiastic article on the "Fateful February 18," and asks: "What harm can American do? She has no army. Her fleet dare not approach nearer our shores than does the English fleet. The expulsion of Germans from America would mean her ruin. America's threats are simply ridiculous. It would be still more ridiculous for us to take them in earnest."

The other weeklies protest in violent language against alleged American partisanship for the allies and urge the government to resist what they call American pressure."

KING CALMLY FACED AUSTRIAN AVIATORS

Cettinje, Montenegro, Feb. 15.—Two Austrian aeroplanes bombarded the Montenegrin royal palace at Rieka on Sunday and a number of bullets fell near the spot where King Nicholasfi the Queen and other members of the family were standing. When the alarm was given the members of the royal family left the palace and remained in the courtyard, from which spot they watched the hostile aerial machines. When over the palace the Austrian aviators opened fire with machine guns and a number of bullets fell within a few yards of the King and Queen and the royal princesses. Finally the machines left.

King Nicholas and his family have been accustomed to spending the winter at Rieka, which is about six miles southeast of Cettinje.

GERMAN REVERSES NEAR LAS BASSE, SAYS PARIS

Paris, Feb. 15.—Another setback for the Germans having to cut through the Allies' lines between Dethune and Las Basse is announced in an official statement issued by the War Office this afternoon. It states that on the road between the two towns the French have succeded in capturing a trench about 250 yards long. The statement also reveals that the Germans have brought into action a heavy mortar for the fighting, but it is stated that the French artillery shows its superiority over the German artillery.

The French succeeded in driving back the Germans near Leroy.

GENERAL STAFF REPORTS SUCCESSES IN FLANDERS

Berlin, by Wireless, Feb. 15.—An important gain for the German troops operating in Flanders is announced in an official report issued by the German General Staff given out here this afternoon. It says that the enemy's positions along the front of more than half a mile were captured near St. Lois and that they were successfully held despite counter attacks. British troops are believed to be opposing the Germans in this region which is south of Ypres.

Deal, Eng., Feb. 15.—The British steamer, Wavelet, struck a mine off the coast today and had to be beached near Deal. Twelve of her crew were drowned when a boat in which they were trying to reach shore was captized. The Wavelet was bound from Pensacpla to Deal.

Paris, Feb. 15.—A Petrograd dispatch to The Herald reiterates the report that the Germans have evacuated Lods, Poland. It is also reported that they are preparing to abandon Lowiez.

BARROW THE MAN OF THE BASEBALL HOUR

By Frank G. Menke.

New York, Feb. 15.—The future of the International league will probably be decided at a meeting of that organization held here today. President Barrow is determined to save the league. He is being back by all the club owners. They believe that the depression in the National game is only temporary and that matters will adjust themselves to normal conditions in another season. Barrow hs not given up his plan to have the Jersey City team transferred to the Bronx. He may also invade New England territory and has under consideration Worcester, Hartford and Springfield as possible cities to which transfers may be made.

The league has several knotty problems to thresh out before the meeting adjourns. They are:

The adoption of the schedule;
The redutcion of salaries of all players;
The reduction of the number of players;
The hiring of only player-managers;
Each club owner to put up $10,000 as an emergency fund;
The cutting short of the spring training trips.

War: Pathos and Humor

Kragtuyevatz, Servia, Feb. 15.—While visiting an old friend, a high officer actively engaged in the Serbian operations, discussed several topics full of interest. Asked his opinion with regard to the Austrian menace of a new invasion of Serbia with a huge army composed of Austro-Hungarian and German troops, he answered:

"We are doing our duty, re-organizing the army, increasing daily its might, and, if God will, we shall be victorious as heretofore."

Passing on to the general situation, he said:

"The Allies can be perfectly satisfied with the results achieved during last year against the Teutonic combination. Nobody can doubt that the Germans will be definitely routed, there remains the question of how aim can be obtained as soon as possible with the least sacrifices. No doubt Germany will continue a stubborn resistance, counting on exhausting her adversaries, or she may sacrifice her allies—Austro-Hungary and Turkey—and endeavor to conclude peace, leaving her power unbroken and Europe eternally menaced with new bloodshed and horrors."

"When do you forsee the end of the war?"

"It is difficult to make predictions, but the newspapers were well informed in saying at the beginning of the present struggle that the war would last a long time, thereby encouraging people not to lose heart.

"The fighting of the western front has assumed the character of siege battles, and can be prolonged indefinitely. It appears, moreover that Germany, after having vainly attempted to deal a decisive blow to the Russians upon the Vistula, and having exhausted her offensive energy will also pass to a war of entrenchments in the Russian theatre. Relying upon the first-class fortresses of Koningsberg, Thorn, Posen, and Cracow and having a most admirable system of railway lines, the Germans, on the defensive, detain overwhelming Russian forces, which for offensive purposes will badly feel the lack of roads and railway lines.

"We must remember that Germany has for long been preparing for the present war, and has used all the technical means which would give her any advantage on both fronts. It remains to attack Germany from where she never expected the blow, and accordingly is unable to parry it. Sound strategy demands a concentration of forces; but every rule has exceptions, and a strong diversion thoroughly prepared can give the happy results.

"Undoubtedly Germany would be lost if Great Britain landed considerable bodies of troops in Holland or Denmark.

"But if the Allies would prepare a strong diversion from the South through Austria-Hungary it would have all the desirable advantages. Really, we wonder why the Allies have not already paid attention to and used fully the strategical position offered by Servia and the countries inhabited by Serbian people. Serbia has already rendered enormous services to the common cause, but her forces are too small to be able to undertake a successful offensive on a great scale.

"If the Allies, aiming at a definite success, should desire to reinforce the Serbian front and enable the Serbian troops to undertake a strong offensive it would have incalculable advantages.

"Firstly, the Allies armies, advancing through Dalmatia, Bosnia, and Croatia, would orgainze the resistance of the southern Slavs, who are already in a state of dangerous effervescence awaiting the first auspicious moment for open revolt. The approach of the Allied armies nearer Vienna and Budapest would accelerate the secession of the Magyar and revolution in Bohemia. Then Austria-Hungary would hardly give further resistance, nd the Russian troops now in the Carpathians would join the Allies on the banks of the Danube.

"After getting a firm base in Austria, the Allied armies would menace Germany seriously from the south, a quarter from which they neverexpected the blow. The Germans would be obliged to turn their front and change their whole plan of campaign. Then the offensive in the direction of the Rhine and through Silesia would be fast and decisive.

"It is my first conviction," concluded my friend, "that if the Allies remain faithful in their deterination to bring present struggle to the end they desire they must sooner or later begin such a plan. Of course, if Roumania enters the war she may play the part contained in the above idea."

WHEN REED RULED

And Raised a Row in Congress by Counting a Quorum.

HOW THE QUESTION AROSE.

The Issue That Moved the "Czar" to Overturn Both Democratic and Republican Precedents and Put the House in an Uproar.

In his "Life of Thomas Brackett Reed," popularly known as "Czar" Reed, Samuel W. McCall relates how the great question of the quorum that was counted arose. The famous issue came up shortly after Reed's re-election as speaker in December, 1889. The Republicans had so narrow a majority that business would have been difficult even without the filibustering of the opposition.

On Jan. 29, 1890, Dalzell reported from the committee on elections an award of a contested seat to a Republican.

"Crisp raised the question of consideration, and only 166 members responded, or two less than a quorum. Not merely was it beyond the power of the Republicans to produce a quorum at that time, but it appeared equally certain that they would not be able to produce one at any time during that congress.

"Reed had carefully planned to meet the emergency which had long seemed to him inevitable and had determined upon his course. But the element of doubt was whether his party associates in the house would sanction the radical course which he meditated. He was intending to overturn not merely Democratic precedents, but Republican precedents as well.

"Times almost without number the leaders of his own party had maintained that the constitutional quorum was to be determined by the roll call and not by the bodily presence of members. The position had never seriously been questioned that if a majority of the representatives failed to answer to their names on the calling of the roll there was no quorum present for the transaction of business, even if every member might actually be present in the hall of the house. * * *

"Instead of ordering the roll to be called again Reed calmly said, 'The chair directs the clerk to record the names of the following members present and refusing to vote.' He then proceeded to name a number of Democrats and among them Carlisle and other Democratic leaders who were present when their names were called and who refrained from voting.

"At once the house was in an uproar. There was an explosion as violent as was ever witnessed in a legislative body. The speaker's recital of the names was interrupted by passionate remonstrance. His course was denounced as revolutionary. For a considerable time the tumult stopped the business of the house. Reed remained unruffled; and when the noise would for a moment subside he would add to his count of Democrats present and not voting.

"One member of much dignity, but not conspicuous for sense of humor, gravely arose with a book in his hand and said, 'I deny your right, Mr. Speaker, to count me as present, and I desire to read from the parliamentary law on that subject.' Reed raised a hearty laugh by coolly saying in reply and with his customary drawl: 'The chair is making a statement of fact that the gentleman from Kentucky is present. Does he deny it?'

"After the noise had subsided sufficiently for the speaker to make a connected statement he proceeded to state the question to the house: 'The chair treats this subject in orderly fashion and will submit his opinion to the house, which, if not acquiesced in by the house, can be overruled on an appeal taken from the decision.'

"He then proceeded to state his opinion in a few words. Referring to the constitutional power of the house to compel the attendance of absent members, he said: 'If members can be present and refuse to exercise their function—to wit, not be counted as a quorum—that provision would seem to be entirely negatory. Inasmuch as the constitution only provides for their attendance, that attendance is enough. If more was needed the constitution would have provided for more.'"

Disorder was renewed, but after a hot debate the ruling was sustained, Reed's party standing by him to a man, and the supreme court subsequently confirmed the point.

Art of Throwing Kisses.

"Young men of this country do not know how to throw a kiss gracefully," said a college professor. "It takes a young Mexican to perform the act gracefully.

"He brings the tips of his fingers together, touches them gently with his lips and, spreading his hand out as he makes the throw, wafts five sweet kisses in his ladylove by five different routes."—Chicago Tribune.

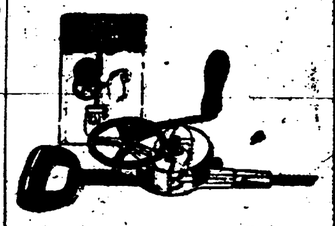
POPULAR MECHANICS

Spark Gap Electrodes.



In order to determine the effect of certain metals on electric sparks Professor Daniel M. Rich of the University of Michigan has been conducting some very interesting experiments, says the Scientific American. He has found by photographic records that on producing a spark with an alternating current between a copper electrode and a zinc electrode a certain number of sparks were given off from the copper electrode during one half cycle, while in the following half cycle, when the current was reversed, more sparks were given off from the zinc electrode. Professor Rich believes that the cause of this is that the potential must reach a higher value before it will jump from the copper. Very curiously there was always an even number of sparks from one electrode and an odd number from the other; also the last spark always occurred from the electrode having the higher breakdown value. This surprising effect may be due to the ionizing of the arc, Professor Rich believes.

Extinguishing a Candle.

An ingenious method of extinguishing a candle when it burns down to a certain point is worked as follows: Tie a string around the candle at the desired point, then take the string through the usual loop support or ring at the base of the candlestick, then pass it up to a pair of pulleys on ceiling or wall, bring down the end of the cord just above the candle and tie on a light extinguisher, which thus hangs over the candle. Nails or hooks can be used instead of pulleys for the cord. When the candle burns down to the string this is detached and lets the extinguisher drop upon the candle. The device should, of course, be tried to make sure that the cord works easily in the different supports.—Scientific American.

Mechanical Hammer Drill.

A recent invention for the use of electrical workers and mechanics eliminates the strain and drudgery of drilling by hand and substitutes centrifugal force for main strength. It consists of a hand drill operated by a crank in which revolving hammers pivoted to a steel spider strike the head of the drill rapidly. It is so geared that thirteen blows are struck to each revolution of the handle. For drilling holes in concrete, brick, stone and tile the new device enables the workmen to more than double their efficiency without fatigue.

CRANK OPERATED HAND DRILL.

Hint For Car Drivers.

The correct way to take a water splash in the road is to go through it on one of the low gears—either the first or the second in a four speed box, and to go through quite slowly and gently. If of a depth of more than a few inches it should never be rushed. If the engine is turning at a high speed and a deep water splash is rushed there is always danger of some water being drawn up through the induction pipe into the engine, and then, as it refuses to be compressed in the same way as the gas, the cylinder head is blown off or the piston broken. Even a deep water splash can be successfully negotiated if the car is taken through very slowly on the low gear.—Automobile Dealer and Repairer.

Keeping Nuts Secure.

The addition of a lock nut is nearly always effective in maintaining the tightness of a bolt or nut, but in many cases there is no room available. In such cases, if the nut and screw are moistened, the consequent slight rusting which takes place will render the nut secure. A coat of quick drying paint will often serve the same purpose. If a special nut is not obtainable a spring washer should be used. This takes up very little room and is very efficient when new, but if the nut is to be frequently unscrewed the sharp ends will become damaged and the washer will be less effective.

Wrappers For Tires.

Wrappers for spare wheels or tires are desirable in the first place, these covers render cleaning an easy matter, but the most important point is that they protect the tire from exposure to sun and moisture. If the spare tire has been used and is wet or gashed the moisture getting in starts the process of rotting, which will be accelerated each time the car is used in the rain or washed. In the summer also a spare tire, although not used, is exposed to the harmful effects of direct sunlight if it be left uncovered in position on the car.

Quick Radiator Repair.

If there is a crack in a pipe or tank or even in the radiator and no soldering equipment is at hand, common resin, melted and run over the leak to a depth of a quarter of an inch, will serve temporarily to stop the gap. If a little more permanent job is desired a bit of leather placed over the hole before running the resin makes a workmanlike job of it.

About Sports Generally

By Frank G. Menke.

New York, Feb. 15.—Joe Lannin, who owns the Boston Red Sox was confident that the Sox would win the 1915 American League pennant until the sport writing crowd began to share the same feeling—and to voice it.

"And now I'm afraid that I've been jinxed," declares the genial Joseph. "The newspaper boys didn't know they were jinxing me but I've got a little feeling that they have. You know they unintentionally jinxed the Giants in 1914, they jinxed the Athletics in 1912, and they've jinxed a lot of other teams by picking them as "sure winners."

Lannin is of the opinion that a feeling of overconfidence may prevail among the Red Sox because so many sporting persons are picking them to grab the American League bunting this summer.

I think I've got the talent that is necessary fora pennant winner," said Lannin, "and if the boys will go out and fight all the way there seems to be a good chance of their landing on top. But they must fight. I don't want my boys to get the idea that they have an easy task. If they do, the pennant chances are gone, and so I want to keep my men from becoming afflicted with over confidence—a feeling that might come to them from reading all the nice things the newspaper boys have to say about my 1915 team."

Robert Lee Hedges, owner of the St. Louis Browns is considerably amused by the fact that other magnates are pursuing him in an attempt to give some of his players."

"Gosh, I have to laugh," remarked Hedges, whereupon he laughed. "Here's me, the fellow who spent a major portion of his baseball life doing nothing else but chase after other magnates in an effort to buy a few of their stars. But nary a star could I get.

"A few years ago I quit the vain pursuit. I decided we'd develop a few stars of our own. You see. I'd grown tired of chasing around.

"Did we develop any? Say from the way the other magnates chase me now you'd think I had a million wonderful ball players. And that's what makes me laugh—this universal situation. Think of it—Robert Lee Hedges, the pursuer of other days, is now the pursued. Isn't it funny?"

Hedges, by the way, is doing unto others what used to be done to him. He is turning down pleas from other magnates who want his good players.

"The other fellows want Shotten, Wellman, Hamilton and some of my other good players," said Hedges. "They want them very, very much. It happens that I also want them. Therefore, I ask—where do you think those fellows will play in 1915?"

Everybody seems to be doing now what Johnny McGraw started doing a number of years ago—the employment of a veteran coach to train the young pitchers.

McGraw's old team mate, Wilbert Robinson, was looking for a job some years ago. He applied to McGraw. Robinson was too old and too bulky to play. McGraw was just about to turn down Robinson when he thought about the coaching idea.

Robinson was a great catcher in the old days and he always had accomplished great results in handling young pitches.

"You're hired," McGraw said to Robinson. "Your title is accomplished great results in handling young pitchers.

Robinson made good. He labored long and patiently with "Rube" Marquard—but he got results. "Jeff" Tesreau was as wild as a Zulu warrior when he was turned over to Robinson for "treatment." Tesereau today ranks as one of the great pitchers in baseball. Robinson made a good pitcher out of "Al" Demaree.

The success of Robinson with the Giant recruits has influenced most of the other big league managers to hire a veteran catcher to coach the yearling twirlers.

A Musical Tyrant.

Gluck as a conductor is said to have been an unmerciful tyrant. Frequently the musicians would have to repeat a passage twenty times before he was satisfied. The members of the Vienna court orchestra complained of this hard usage to the emperor, Joseph II., who appeased them by agreeing to give them 2 ducats instead of 1 ducat for every performance at which Gluck should conduct.

A Prophetic Writer.

In practical science the most marvelously prophetic writer was the Marquis of Worcester, who in his "Century of Inventions," published in 1663, described the steam engine, the telegraph, the torpedo, the range finder, the hydraulic press, portable military pontoons, matches and many other things which have come into use within the last hundred years.—St. James' Gazette.

THE QUEEN'S BIRTHDAY GIFT

It Was a Cartload of Roses.

By F. A. MITCHEL

The map of that part of Europe in which began the great European war has been changing ever since it was a part of ancient Gaul. Centuries ago there was a kingdom composed largely of what is now Flanders. The capital was probably Ghent, though the time of my story is so remote that one cannot be sure about this. The country was then governed by a queen who had the same name as the present ruler of Holland—Wilhelmina.

One day a farmer living on the outskirts of the capital said to his son, a strapping young man just come of age:

"Hans, I wish you to take into town a cartload of flowers. I learn that tomorrow is the queen's birthday, and there will be a great demand for the flowers on the part of courtiers to bestow upon her majesty. I hear she is both young and beautiful and that she will take a husband from one of her own subjects. Therefore many gallants will wish to bestow gifts upon her, and there is no gift that will so touch a woman's heart as flowers."

Hans obeyed his father. Going out to the barn, he harnessed a mule to a cart and then drove it into the garden. It was the month of June, and there were many roses in bud and in bloom. Hans loved the roses better than any other flower and put so many in the cart that there was no room for any other flowers. However, he knew that roses brought the best price, so he concluded to leave the load as it was. Then going to his room he put on the clothes he usually wore to the city, a doublet of dark blue and hose to match. Then girding on his sword—every one wore a sword in those days—he mounted his cart and drove the mule toward the capital.

Hans had no sooner reached the outskirts of the city than he met a young man in a very brilliant costume and with feathers on his hat and other marks of being a noble. Seeing the roses in the cart, his eyes lighted with pleasure.

"How much for your roses?" he asked Hans.

"They are not for sale at present," replied the countryman. "If they are wanted here they will bring a better price when I approach the palace, for this is the queen's birthday, and there will be many gallants wanting flowers for gifts to her majesty."

The man abused Hans for a country bumpkin, but Hans drove on, paying no attention to him. Hans was stopped many times by courtiers, sometimes men, sometimes women, and received many offers for his load, but he drove on, always saying, "If you are willing to give so much here what will I be offered when I reach the market place in the center of the city?"

Finally he stopped his mule at the palace gates and was about to drive into the courtyard when he was stopped by a sentry.

"I have a gift for her majesty Queen Wilhelmina," said Hans. "Let me pass."

The chamberlain happened to be looking out of a window at the time and, seeing a cartload of roses below, bethought himself that there was a fine opportunity to buy flowers with which to decorate the throne room, in which his royal mistress would that day receive her birthday congratulations. Running down and out, he said to Hans:

"How much for your roses, my man?"

"They are not for sale."

"But you must sell them. I wish to buy them for the queen. I will give you a thousand florins for them."

"I intend them for a birthday gift to her majesty."

The chamberlain looked at Hans as if he thought him daft.

"Come, come," he said coaxingly. "Don't be a fool. The queen will not accept a gift from such as you. But she must have your roses. So many are not to be had elsewhere. Drive them into the courtyard, and I will pay you."

"I will drive them into the courtyard, but only as a gift for her majesty," replied Hans.

"We will see about that," cried the chamberlain angrily, and, taking the mule by the bridle, he led him through the gateway into the court and stopped before a door of the palace. Then he went inside to summon servants to carry in the roses while he obtained the money to pay for them. He returned, leading half a dozen lackeys with baskets, and he held in his hands a bag containing a thousand florins. He found Hans standing before his cart with folded arms.

"Get out of my way," said the chamberlain.

"If you touch one of the flowers," said Hans, drawing his sword, "I will make a hole in you."

"Treason!" cried the chamberlain. "Guards!"

A dozen soldiers came running to the scene. The queen, hearing the words "Treason!" and "Guards!" and fearing a plot or a revolution, put her head out through an upper window and asked to know what was the matter.

The chamberlain, "refuses to sell his roses, which I wish to decorate the throne room for your majesty's reception today."

"Perhaps you have not offered him enough for them," said the queen.

"I have offered him a thousand florins."

"That surely should be sufficient. Why will you not sell me your roses, my good man?"

"Because I have brought them for a birthday gift for your majesty."

"A birthday gift!" exclaimed the queen, surprised.

"I have told him," put in the chamberlain, "that your majesty would not accept a gift from such as he."

The queen looked down on the scene below for a few moments without speaking. "The fellow," she said to herself, "has some boon which he wishes in return for his gift." Aloud she said:

"I will accept your roses. Is there anything I can do for you to show my appreciation for your offering?"

"None, your majesty."

The queen was taken aback at this, but since she had given her royal acceptance of the gift she could not take it back. So she thanked Hans, and the lackeys carried in the roses, and Hans drove away, the courtiers and others who had collected laughing in their sleeves at him.

Hans drove back to the farm, where his father, seeing the cart empty, asked him how much he had received for the roses.

"Nothing," Hans replied. "I presented them to the queen for a birthday gift."

Hans told his father what had occurred. The old man was much pleased [illegible] his son told him that when the queen asked him what she could do for him he had said "nothing." Then the father abused him for a fool. But Hans replied that if showing one's loyalty to one's sovereign were being a fool then he was glad to be one.

Queen Wilhelmina waited a month before taking any further action in the matter of her gift of roses, then made inquiries as to whether Hans had sent in any request for a favor of any kind. When she was told that he had not she thought a great deal about Hans and what she should do in the matter. She considered it beneath the dignity of a queen to accept a gift from a subject, certainly not one of lowly origin. She sent for him, and when he appeared she said to him:

"I have need for your services. I am going to try you in the diplomatic service. There is a boundary dispute between me and King Carl, whose dominions adjoin mine on the east. My prime minister will instruct you as to the matter, after which I wish you to proceed to King Carl and make as good a settlement as you can."

"But, your majesty," Hans stammered, "I am but a countryman, unskilled in"—

"Something tells me," the queen interrupted, "that what others have learned by study and experience you know intuitively. This is not a request, but a command. Go and on your return report to me what you have done. My chamberlain will provide you with the necessary funds."

Hans, after acquainting himself with the case he was to handle, dressed in proper apparel, went at the head of an embassy to King Carl, and, being closeted with him, the king steeled himself against the ambassador as he had against others. But Hans began at once to gain his confidence. He learned from the king on what he had set his heart and relinquished all claim to it. This enabled him to get what the queen wanted. The result was that he made a very satisfactory agreement. When he returned and reported what he had done the queen was very much pleased. She created him a noble and placed him at the head of all her diplomats.

Hans, after acquainting himself with sent his father a thousand florins, the amount he had been offered for the roses, and the old man, who had heard of his son's preferment, about which every one was talking, wondered how such a fool had been able to achieve such honors so far beyond his station.

Hans grew continually in influence. Those were warlike times, and ambassadors had tried to gain their ends by threatening war, and if they did not try threats they resorted to chicanery. Hans' plan was always the one he had tried with King Carl. He sought to discover what was for the best interests of both parties and when he had done so to convince the sovereign with whom he dealt of the fact. In this way he achieved a reputation for statecraft which was really nothing but common sense and a liberality which in the end resulted in his sovereign's profit.

One day Queen Wilhelmina asked Hans what she could do for him beyond what she had done to repay him for the valuable services he had rendered her in preventing war.

"Permit me," replied Hans, "on your next birthday to send you a cartload of roses."

When Queen Wilhelmina was assured that Hans would name no other favor she granted it, and on the anniversary of the day that he had made the first gift he made another, only this time the cart was driven by one of his servants. When Hans went to the palace to offer his congratulations, instead, as before, of being informed by the chamberlain that the queen would not accept a gift from such as he, that functionary announced to him that her majesty had decided that a proposition of marriage from him would be agreeable to her.

There was much debate among the queen's subjects who knew the story of Hans' birthday gift whether he made it simply as an act of homage to a sovereign of whether he aspired to her heart and hand. But no one except Hans knew that, and he never [illegible]

Woman's World

Ex-President Cleveland's Daughter Studying Nursing.

MISS ESTHER CLEVELAND.

Miss Esther Cleveland is a member of the class in nursing which is conducted at the central branch of the Young Women's Christian association, New York. Many other young women of society are included in the class. Among them are Mrs. De Lancey Nicoll and Miss Elizabeth Hibben, daughter of the president of Princeton university. Many of the women of the class expect to put their knowledge to practical use by nursing wounded soldiers of the allied armies in France and England.

This class has always been a popular one, and this year it has been especially so with women of society.

Many of the members have friends whose chateaux in France or country houses in the south of England have been turned into convalescent hospitals, and it is to these homes, as a rule, that the graduate trained attendants will make their way next spring.

Miss Esther is the eldest of the late President Cleveland's children. She was a White House baby. Born in 1893, she is now twenty-one years old. She has always been exceedingly popular in Princeton, where the family make their home. The former Mrs. Cleveland, who married a second time, is now Mrs. Thomas J. Preston, Jr.

WASHINGTON'S BIRTHDAY FAVORS.

surmounted by a doll's head, tricked out with flowing locks and a long beard to represent Yankee Doodle or that famous personage known as Uncle Sam. The other box is a miniature drum with crossed drumsticks on the side, tied together with red, white and blue ribbon. The head of the drum may be removed and the interior filled with candies.

Light Window Shades.

If in doubt what kind of shades to select for your windows use cream shades, not a dead white, and you will be pleased with the effect both from the inside and out. A good quality of "Holland" shade in cream with no trimming whatever beyond a good cord to raise and lower it by is a good choice in shades. The cream pebble dash with brown trimmings is always good and equally so with dark green trim.

Milady's Mirror

Oatmeal For the Skin.

Never wash the face just before going out into the fresh air or just after coming in. Nothing is more injurious to the skin. Washing the face with oatmeal takes off the greasy look and leaves the skin like velvet. A few drops of ammonia in the water with which the face is bathed is also excellent for an oily skin and gives a fresh coloring by bringing the blood to the surface. If the skin has already too much color borax should be used in place of the ammonia.

When the face is constantly pale bathe it in cold water, rub briskly with a soft towel and apply daily the following preparation: Two ounces of glycerin, one ounce of diluted liquid ammonia and four ounces of water. Rub well into the skin, then wipe carefully. If any irritation is felt the glycerin should be increased.

The following lotion will be found the most satisfactory and the least harmful of any of the preparations for softening and whitening the skin: Boil two tablespoonfuls of fine oatmeal in sufficient soft water to make a thin gruel, and strain carefully. When cool add a lemon with a dessertspoonful of wine. Keep on the toilet table, making a fresh supply once in about ten days. Bathe the face with this every night before retiring. Do not wipe entirely off, but leave the skin a little damp. In the morning wash in tepid water and oatmeal in the proportion of a tablespoonful of oatmeal to a quart of water. Dry the face thoroughly and put on thinly a little cold cream.

Care of the Face.

Daily attention to the face is the price of beauty. With the tips of the fingers massage the forehead from temple to temple with a rotary motion, then glide down to the chin and work upward from the chin close to the side of the nose to the eyes. Glide down again, each time a little further back, and repeat the motion until the face has been covered. Next work under the eyes with the middle finger from the nose outward to the corners of the eyes. Remember that the movement should be rotary and always up and out toward the ears.

A good cleansing cream should be used on the face at least once a day. Water and soap do not remove the dust sufficiently well. Such a cream may be made as follows: Take and combine oil of sweet almonds, four ounces; white vaseline, one ounce; white wax, one ounce, and extract of violets, ten drops.

To prepare an excellent massage cream take oil of sweet almonds, three ounces; lanoline, one ounce; cucumber juice, two drams; white wax, two drams; spermaceti, two drams; tincture of benzoin, thirty drops, and oil of rose, ten drops.

Mechanical massage will reduce a double chin.

Lemon Juice as a Beautifier.

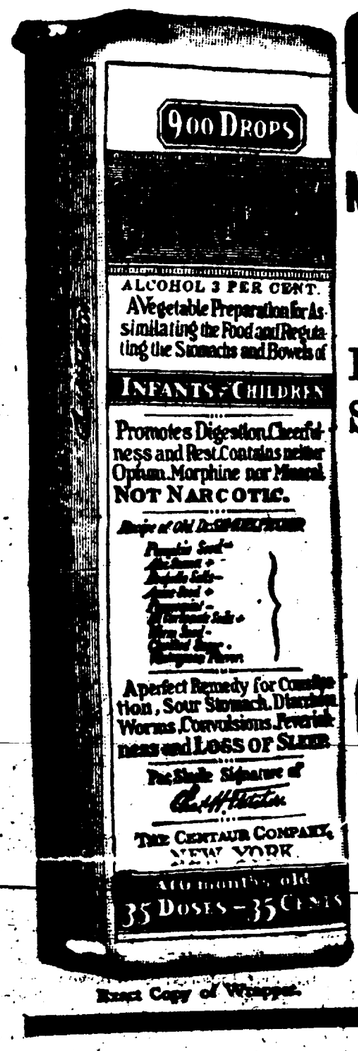
To bleach the skin and nails of sunburn, to refine coarse pores and soften the skin, lemon juice is invaluable. Where the juice is too astringent, as is the case where the skin is very sensitive, add a little glycerin, rosewater or witch hazel. See that the proportions are not over one-third strength.

Dip the finger tips in the juice and rub over the hands, or take a bit of absorbent cotton, allowing it to dry on for five minutes; then wash off in warm water and a soap containing a bleaching astringent, such as elderflower, benzoin, boric acid or similar specifics.

Direct application of the lemon juice is more effective. Do not remove all the juice. Slice the four sides of the lemon so that it lays flat and readily reaches all crevices in the nails. When the wrists or arms are also in need of renovation apply the same treatment there, otherwise a ring of tan is sure to show.

Hollows Under the Eyes.

Hollows under the eyes can be filled out by correct massage. Apply a good skin food, place the first finger on the eyelid close to the nose, move halfway to the ear, coming back under the eye to the starting point. This is an effective treatment for crow's feet, since it pans them flat and smooths the groove-ful cuticle.



Sluggish circulation, general malnutrition of the body; worry, loss of sleep and a rundown constitution will bring hollows under the eyes. Therefore put yourself on a rational diet, rest all you can, exercise out of doors every day and take a refreshing bath every morning.

Eyebrow Tonic.

A good tonic for the eyebrows is made with two ounces of red vaseline, one dram of tincture of cantharides, fifteen drops of oil of lavender, fifteen drops of the oil of rosemary. Apply nightly and morning with a tiny brush. This can also be used on the eyelashes, but must not be allowed to get in the eyes, since any oily preparation will inflame them.

DOUBLY POCKETED COAT.

Spring Outdoor Costume That Is Quaintly Picturesque.

SPORTS HAT AND COAT.

This sports coat of tan and white plaid worsted has huge patch pockets both above and below the belt. The belt is held in place by wide straps of brown cloth, which material forms the buckle and faces the collar. One notes with interest the new outing hat shaped like a sou'wester. The gown worn has a deep plait in front.

LINGERIE COLLARS.

Easy Way to Wash and Iron Thin Neckwear.

See that the collars and cuffs are quite dry after washing before attempting to starch them. Place them in a clean, dry towel and have ready a basin of well made cold water starch.

Mix the starch up well from the bottom, lay in as many collars as the starch will easily cover at one time and let the starch soak well through them.

Squeeze them with the hands in the starch; then wring as dry as possible. Draw them out straight and lay smoothly on a towel, but do not put one on top of the other; roll each one separately between the towel. Leave for half an hour before ironing, but do not let them get too dry.

When ready to iron spread wrong side uppermost and iron first one side and then the other. Iron slowly at first, then more and more quickly until there is a glossy surface and the collar is dry.

The right side naturally requires the most ironing, but the wrong side must be ironed quite smooth. Lift the collar occasionally when ironing to let the steam escape and dry the short ends with the iron. A teaspoonful of powdered borax in cold starch will give an added stiffness to linen.

Traveling Brushes.

Two flat clothes brushes packed into flat pockets of a leather case are sold in the shops. They are very convenient for the traveler, as they can be stowed away in the pocket of a suit case in an almost imperceptible space. They are likewise convenient for a man to carry in his overcoat pocket. They have black wood backs, and the bristles of one are gray, of the other white. The gray one is stiffer.

WHAT A GIRL SHOULD REMEMBER.

There are some things that a girl is richer for remembering and the poorer for forgetting. Here they are, and it is possible for most of us to acquire them without much expense; in some instances without any outlay at all.

Every girl should know how to sew and make dresses.

To cook and clean.

To mend her own and the household things.

To dress neatly and becomingly and daintily.

To keep a secret and respect confidences.

To be self reliant and resourceful.

To keep a house tidy and have a place for everything.

To respect old age.

To be above gossiping or listening to slander.

To control her temper.

To care for the sick and the young.

If she has these accomplishments then she need not trouble very much if fate has denied her the chance of acquiring some others that may be a trifle more fashionable, but are certainly not so delightful and useful.

No "Rooms For Rent."

"In London the good woman who has furnished lodgings to let never puts out that sign, 'Room For Rent,' so familiar in the cities of the United States," said a traveler. "Instead she displays the single word 'Residence.' That sounds queer to us, and until the Yankee visitor becomes wise as to its meaning he wonders what its purpose might be. Any native will tell him that such a legend means the occupants of the house will rent a part thereof to one who is seeking a place to reside in. So, if you are in England and wish to rent a furnished apartment or room, wherever you see the word 'Residence' go boldly in and state your mission."—Baltimore American.

BAKE BREAD NEW SLOGAN

Housewives' League Decides to Teach Bakers a Moral Lesson. Four Cents Cost Per Loaf

Bake your own bread. You can do it for four cents a loaf. This is the slogan of the National Housewives' League since the bakers' audaciously, in the housewives' opinion, have advanced the price to six cents. Why even pay the old price? Just start a little boycott of your own at home and give the bakers a chance to come to their senses. This is the sermon that Mrs. Heath, president of the league, and her associates are going to preach hard.

The league is starting a campaign for education along that line. Mrs. Emma G. Bossong, teacher of domestic science at the league headquarters, 27 West Forty-fifth street, gave out a recipe recently which will do the trick for four cents, or four and a quarter cents if you are very particular and use milk instead of water. Here it is:

Four cups of luke warm water
One cake of yeast
Two teaspoonfuls of salt
Two teaspoonfuls of sugar
One tablespoonful of shortening
Eight cups of flour.

This recipe will make four loaves of regulation size bread at a cost of four cents each. And this is just the way to go about it to get the best results, according to Mrs. Bossong:

How It Is Done

"Dissolve the yeast in a small quantity of water; add salt, sugar and shortening; add flour gradually to make a stiff batter; beat thoroughly, and add more flour to make a stiff dough; knead on a floured board, adding a very little flour while kneading; knead till free from all stickiness; place dough in a bowl and cover it, letting it stand in a warm place until doubled in size (about three hours); mould into loaves and place in a warm place until doubled in size again; bake in a moderately hot oven for about three-quarters of an hour.'

There you have it. Now there is no excuse why any housewife, who enjoys the proper facilities, should bother about the high price of bread.

While the Housewives' League is conducting a "made-at-home" campaign and the Mayor's Committee on Food Supply is making a study of wheat bread substitutes, Commissioner Hartigan of the Bureau of Weights and Measures is determined to see to it that the people who do buy bread at advanced prices, or any old price for that matter, shall know just how much weight they are getting.

Until Alderman Dowling's ordinance, fixing a standard loaf of one pound is adopted, Commissioner Hartigan can't compel the baker to make a loaf of any specific size. The Brooks law, enacted by the Legislature, however, gives him the power to compel the baker to label his bread with its exact weight, whatever that may be.

There has been some difficulty in satisfactorily enforcing the Brooks law, owing to the delay and red tape required in dealing with the cases of violating through state channels. The limited number of inspectors has been another handicap. Commissioner Hartigan said recently that he intended to ask Attorney General Woodbury to designate a deputy to attend to these cases. In this way he hopes to have violations promptly taken up and penalties speedily dealt out.

Moral Effect on Bakers

"This method, with a Deputy Attorney General right at hand, would have a fine moral effect on the bakers,' said Commissioner Hartigan. "They will realize that we mean to enforce the law to the letter, and violations will begin to fall off. Every one of the inspectors in the bureau will be out combing the city for violations. If we find some of them antagonistic, as has often been the case, I shall ask Police Commissioner Woods or Commissioner of Accounts Wallstein to send men around with the inspectors for their protection."

Commissioner Hartigan asserted that his own investigation indicated that the wheat bread bakers could keep the price down to five cents and still make a fair profit. He said that several large bakers had given him figures which appeared to demonstrate that fact.

A mass meeting will be held on the East Side shortly, at Christdora House, 147 Avenue B, to discuss the advance in the price of bread. Some of the city officials are expected to address the meeting.

A good many of the cities and towns in New Jersey are following the lead of New York and raising the price of bread six cents. The higher price has gone into effect in many of the bakeshops in Newark, Paterson, Elizabeth, Washington and other places.—Tribune, N.Y.

DIRECTING A BATTLE.

How the General Staff Keeps In Touch With the Firing Line.

In wartime the many threads leading from the long battle line at length reach a common point, which is the headquarters of the general staff. The activity of each officer attached to the general staff is therefore of the greatest importance for the success of every military enterprise.

During the action every officer of the staff is at the immediate disposal of the commanding general and assists him in the carrying out of orders.

Among the duties of the staff officer during action belong the gathering and compilation of reports which are constantly pouring in to headquarters and which give intimation of the progress of the battle. The staff officer must observe the needs of the troops in action. He must keep a close watch on their supply of ammunition. He must see that their commanders properly execute the orders of the commanding general. He must look after the wounded, see that they are properly treated and sent to lazarets. He must see to it that prisoners are properly cared for and that the commissariat is adequately provided for and the provisioning of the troops.

Sometimes the commanding general intrusts a staff officer with the observation of the action of the opposing forces which may be beyond the view of headquarters, or he may be sent to the firing line with important orders to commanders there, which, however, the staff officer has authority to alter if in his judgment this is necessary.

During defense movements it is of particular importance to observe closely the movements of the opposing forces in order to make preparation for counted moves, such as advances, retreats, the sending of re-enforcements and other movements of troops. The execution of these movements falls within the province of the staff officer.

The training of the staff officer is very thorough. A complete practical course in military science, extending over many years of active service with various bodies of troops, is augmented by years of study at the war college, which embraces the last word in the theoretical science of modern warfare.—New York Tribune.

BEARD OF THE TURK.

It Is Sacred, For by It He Pledges His Word and Honor.

Some years ago the German Colonel von Schlichting, instructor to the Ottoman army, was shot dead on parade at Yildiz kiosk by a young Albanian soldier, Hadji Bairam, because the German in correcting the faulty pose of the soldier's head touched his chin with his riding whip.

Unfortunately the colonel did not know or did not remember that to touch a Mussulman's chin is a grave offense from a religious viewpoint. It is by the beard of the prophet or his own beard that he swears allegiance and makes his vows and promises. According to a Turkish general, an Albanian would kill his own father if he laid hands upon his son's head in so disrespectful a manner. A Mohammedan military service is simply a religious duty, and it implies a voluntary submission to discipline. But Turkish officers know better than to touch their men rudely or even to shout at them.

Of course it was a very regretable misunderstanding, and the sultan sent a telegram to the kaiser to express his sorrow, and an imperial Ottoman prince and three Turkish ministers followed the victim's hearse to the cemetery. But in the interests of discipline the murderer had to die despite an appeal for a reprieve from the colonel's widow.

The Albanian was shot by ten men of his own battalion, and when he was asked before the execution if he repented of the deed he replied twice in a firm voice, "No!"—Washington Star.

HINTS FOR THE BUSY HOUSEWIFE

Percolator That May Be Used In Any Coffeepot.

A Pennsylvania man has brought the percolating system within the reach of all by inventing an aluminium percolator which is a separate article and which can be used in any tea or coffee pot or in the preparation of cereal drinks. This man, instead of building the pot with the necessary apparatus in it, has made the apparatus alone. It consists of an aluminium cylinder, one end of which is perforated and the other end of which has a perforated cup, detachable, within it. The coffee is placed in the top cup and the cylinder stood in the pot, which is partially filled with water. As the water boils it bubbles through the cylinder and absorbs the flavor of the coffee.

Correct Way to Boil Meat.

Have the water boiling and then plunge in the meat, so that the sudden heat will seal up the surface and keep in the good red juices. Allow this hardening of the albumen to continue for about five minutes; then pull to one side and keep at simmering point until the meat is cooked through. In simmering the water should hardly move at all, but just bubble slighly at one side of the saucepan. The time differs for the various meats—beef and mutton fifteen minutes to the pound and fifteen minutes over; veal and lamb, twenty to the pound and twenty over; pork twenty-five to the pound and twenty-five over. If the joint is thin, like the breast of veal, allow from two to two and a half hours for any weight over a pound. Keep the lid on the saucepan and skim after the water or stock has come to the boiling point.

Squirrel Pie.

Arrange thin slices of bacon in the bottom of a deep baking dish, season with salt and pepper, add one tablespoonful of chopped parsley, one tablespoonful of powdered mixed herbs and one cupful of white sauce. Cut two squirrels into pieces, season with salt and pepper and arrange the pieces over the bacon and herbs; then put in a layer of four hard cooked eggs, sliced, and one cupful of white sauce. Wet the edge of the dish, lay a rim of puff paste on it, wet again and cover the whole with pastry. Brush the surface with beaten egg, make a few incisions and cut a hole in the center. Bake in a hot oven for an hour, pour half a cupful of white sauce through the hole and serve hot.—Country Gentleman.

Points on Buying Meats.

When buying beef see that it is purplish when first cut and becomes bright red and moist. It should be firm and elastic to touch and the fat of a light creamy color, never really yellow. Veal should have a light pink flesh, with plenty of white fat. The bones should be small and the breastbone soft and red. Veal does not keep as well as other meat. Mutton and lamb should have finely grained firm flesh, with clear white fat. In the mature animal the flesh is a dull red; in the lamb it is a delicate pink. Good pork has a closely grained, smooth flesh, firm and bright, with solid white fat and thin skin free from wrinkles or spots.

Planked Steak.

Wipe the steak and just sear it in a hot pan. Then put on the plank and finish the cooking in the oven. A sirloin steak an inch thick will take about twelve minutes to cook. After it has been about six minutes in the oven take it out and arrange mashed potatoes all around, then return to the oven for six more, so as to have the potatoes nicely browned. When finished place the plank on a large platter and garnish with parsley and sliced lemon. The planks are made of oak.

Bean Croquettes.

Two cupfuls of cooked beans, baked or boiled; two tablespoonfuls of butter, three cupfuls of corn flakes, three tablespoonfuls of tomato, one teaspoonful of salt. Form into croquettes, bake in hot oven and serve with the following white sauce: One cupful of milk, two tablespoonfuls of flour, two tablespoonfuls of butter. Cook together, stirring until smooth and thick.

Salmon Loaf.

Mix the contents of a can of salmon, half a cupful of cracker crumbs, a beaten egg, half a cupful of milk and pepper and salt to taste; steam in a mold for an hour and serve hot with white or drawn butter sauce to which a beaten egg is added just before the sauce is taken from the fire.

MUSCLE WINS OVER BRAINS

Strange Courtship of a Would Be Athlete.

Whatever we do we do better if possessed of a natural faculty for its accomplishment. What we do well we are apt to do easily. What we do easily we are apt to depreciate. Therefore we are prone to grieve that for which we have no aptitude.

Wilbur Parks while at college carried off prizes as readily as a chicken picks up grains of corn. Indeed, the winning of intellectual honors was so simple a matter to him that he couldn't understand why all students couldn't do the same. What Mr. Parks coveted was success in athletics, and he especially desired to be prominent as a boating man. He had not the physique to gain him an entrance into the university crew, but felt it possible for him to stand well as an oarsman.

Parks spent his vacation before entering upon his senior year at Lake M. and sent his own boat up by rail. At the hotel where he stopped were a couple of college girls, one of whom had no end of conditions consequent upon her last examinations to make up and should have been studying rather than summering. The other, Josephine Banning, was rich, and it made little difference practically whether she got a diploma or not, but Alida Lane was poor and doomed to the drudgery of a schoolroom, and her degree was of the greatest importance to her. Since the needful is seldom bestowed in the right place, Miss Banning was a good scholar, while Miss Lane dragged along at the foot of her class. However, the latter was pretty, and there was hope for her in another direction. Parks met the two girls and devoted himself to Miss Banning.

One morning Parks was pulling leisurely on the sunlit bosom of the lake in his skeleton boat, when, hearing the sounds of oars ahead, he turned and saw Alida Lane in a light lapstreak she had hired at the landing. Not averse to company, Parks gave a few strokes with his long sweeps with a view to taking position beside her, then turned his head to speak. To his surprise, her boat was not on his quarter, but about as far ahead as he had first seen it. He gave a dozen more strokes, and turned again to look. He had not gained half a length. Then he began to exert himself, but when Wilbur Parks exerted himself he was sure to do poorly. He put his oars in too deep and took them out with a jerk. Miss Lane stopped rowing and let him come alongside.

"You don't 'feather' right," she said.

Parks, red as a lobster, looked at her with an expression denoting that he did not care to be taught rowing by a girl.

"Your strokes are too fast for such long sweeps," she went on. "You're giving as many to the minute as I with these paddles."

Parks didn't deign to reply.

"Oh," said the girl, pulling on, "I beg your pardon. I didn't intend"—

Either she didn't finish the sentence or Parks didn't hear the end. At any rate, though he worked hard, she pulled away from him.

The young man's emotions were like the rumbling of volcanic forces. What were all the scholarly prizes he had taken against this ignominious defeat by a girl. Had she beaten him intellectually he would not have much minded it, but for a man to be worsted in the matter of a man's natural endowment—strength—by a girl whose principal weapon should be weakness, was humiliating indeed. He hated Miss Lane, and when a man begins to take enough interest in a woman to hate her he is in a dangerous way.

The matter might have stood at rest here had not a sudden shower come up when the guests were having a lawn party at some distance from the hotel. Parks was walking briskly for cover when Miss Lane ran by him. Instinctively he began to race her, but when he reached the piazza she was sitting in a hammock fanning herself.

After this there was more bad blood between Mr. Parks and Miss Lane, and they barely spoke to each other.

One morning Miss Lane went to the landing for a row. There was not a boat to be had, and she was about to retrace her steps when, looking out on the lake, she was just in time to see a collision between a punt and Wilbur Parks' shell. Both oarsmen were spilled in the water, the amateur swimming for shore. Parks clinging to one of the boats.

Had the girl let him alone he would have been picked up presently and no damage done, but she saw her advantage and grasped it. Taking off only her shoes, she plunged in and swam for him. Parks saw her coming and, preferring death to being saved by her, left his boat and tried to swim for the landing. When they met he was exhausted. The girl managed to get his arm over her shoulder and around her neck and carried him to shore.

After that Parks suddenly discovered that his hatred for his preserver was of a very peculiar kind. Indeed, he disliked her so much that he became her slave. The next June he left college with high scholarly honors, while Miss Lane left by the back door—that is, without a degree. But Parks gained in her the athletic attainments he prised, and she gained a husband. She worships Parks' intellectual endowments, and he is very proud that his wife is the best oarswoman and swimmer at the summer colony of which they are members.

$40,000 FIRE LOSS IN NORTHERN VILLAGE

Ogdensburg, Feb. 15.—The village of Hammond, twenty-two miles from here, was swept by fire last night, and the general store of W. A. Laidlaws, the town hall and the Hammond Advertiser printing plant was destroyed. The fire also spread to the Hammond National Bank building, but the firemen succeeded in saving this structure. The loss exceeded $40,000. Help was summoned from Ogdensburg.

Amsterdam, Feb. 15.—It is reported here that Emperor William will arrive at Cuxhaven on Thursday, February 18, to visit the submarine flotilla that will the next day inaugurate its undersea warfare again st England and her shipping.

Private advices from Berlin state that Admiral Von Tirpitz has already arrived at Cuxhaven and that the new campaign against Great Britain will begin at midnight on Thursday.

ANOTHER CHURCH FIRE

Syracuse, Feb. 15.—Fire, believed to have been caused by an overheated furnace, pratically destroyed the Bellevue Avenue M. E. church early yesterday morning. The interior of the building was burned out, and the church furniture destroyed.

Since January 1, 1914, there has been a nepidemic of church fires in Syracuse. The University M. E. church was burned to the ground a year ago and last month Calvary Baptist church was destroyed. The Centenary M. E. Church was damaged last August. The Church of the Savior burned January 7, 1912, and Good Will church, February 22, 1912.

An reror in sending the telephone alarm to the various hose and truck companies delayed the arrival of the fire fighters more than a quarter of an hour yesterday. As result the building was in flames when the firemen arrived. The church was saved from complete destruction after more than three hours' work.

AMBASSADOR URGED TO TAKE IMMEDIATE ACTION

Madrid, Feb. 15.—An extraordinary cabinet meeting was called today to discuss the expulsion of Minister Baro from Mexico. It was officially announced later that no official steps had been taken, but the Spanish Ambassador at Washington was urged to get into communication with Senor Baro as soon as possible to take steps to insure the Spanish subjects in Mexico.

CHURCHILL SAYS GERMANY'S POLICY IS ONE OF PIRACY

Claims the Empire Weakens, and That Britain Accepts the Challenge; Press Lauds Admiralty

By HERBERT TEMPLE.

London, Feb. 16.—"No compromise." This is the attitude of the British government today in reference to the proposal transmitted through the American government that if England will permit the passage of foodstuffs for the civilians of the Kaiser's empire the Berlin admiralty will rescind its order establishing a war zone about the British Isles.

That the government has the full support of the public is shown by the enthusiasm aroused by the declaration of Winston Spencer Churchhill, first lord of the admiralty, that "Germany cannot be allowed to adopt a policy of open piracy and murder." The London newspapers declare that Germany's proffer is an indication that the Kaiser's government is weakening before the storm aroused in neutral countries such as the United States, Italy and Holland by its warning that neutral shipping is liable to suffer.

The comment of the press may be summarized thus:

"Germany has challenged us. We have accepted the challenge. Now let Germany begin its operations. In declaring a blockade of British coasts it has defied the very instrument of warfare of which it is in terror—the British fleet."

The London Times gives high praise to the navy and to the work of Churchill, asserting that the navy has and is exerting a powerful influence upon the fortunes of the land campaign.

"The result is visible in the desperate and futile threats now being uttered by the German government, threats which Churchill promptly met with a contemptuous condemnation," the Times continues. "The submarine menaced has had no great effect upon the war, nor is it likely to modify, at this stage, the grip in which the German navy is lightly held."

English naval critics assert that the German threat to sow mines in the waters along the coasts promises nothing new, citing the fact that numerous neutral as well as British merchantmen have already been badly damaged or sunk by these floating instruments of war.

Though Holland has protested to Germany against its action, the Dutch government is the first to act upon the warning that neutral ships will be imperilled in British and French waters. The Royal Dutch steamship company has cancelled its sailings to the French ports and other companies are expected to do the same.

BRITISH FALL BACK BEFORE GERMAN ARTILLERY

By Franklin P. Merrick.

Paris, Feb. 16.—Again are the Germans concentrating their pressure against the British on the northern end of the Allies' battle line and it is officially claimed by the Kaiser's government that the invaders have made a material gain on the Ypress-Menin road in West Flanders. According to the German war office, the English have lost some trenches near St. Eloi, which is 2½ miles south of Ypres. If this claim is truthful it means that the British, holding the front south of Ypres, has been compelled to fall back about seven miles.

All official information which has come from the French and British war offices, has indicated that the Allies' front in West Flanders was east of Wytschate, Zillebeke and Gheluvelt.The British have held Ypres for months, although the town has been within range of the heavy German mortars which bombarded it from time to time.

It has been customary for the Germans in Belgium to bombard the Belgian, French and British trenches every day. If the cannonade were unusually heavy, the allies might know it would be followed by an infantry attack. Otherwise the Germans were content to take the chances of killing a few of the enemy with their desultory fire.

Near Bethune, La Bassee, Arras and in the Aisne valley the French artillery has been engaged in throwing heavy lyddite shells against the German field works, some of which were made untenable by the artillery fire. North of Verdun fighting for possession of the trenches is again in progress.

East of the Meuse in the Woevre district, in the Vosges and in Alsace-Lorraine hard fighting is in progress in the mountain valleys which are deep with snow. The Germans have been carrying on an intermittent big gun fire against the cities held by the French, damaging them heavily.

WILHEMINA CASE WILL NOT AROUSE THE EAGLE

By JOHN C. FOSTER.

Falmouth, Eng., Feb. 16.—More mystery was added to the already puzzling situation of which the American steamer Wilhelmina is the center today. Arthur Hays, who represents the owners of the Wilhelmina's cargo arrived this afternoon from London, where he had consulted the American ambassador and held a long conference with Captain Brewer of the steamer.

Neither would tell what advice had been given by Ambassador Page, but Mr. Hays said:

"We have good reason to believe that the difficulties which have arisen will soon be overcome. There is no danger of any serious complications."

The cargo was still aboard the Wilhelmina today despite the announcement of the British government that it would be taken before a prize court. While it is in the custody of the authorities it has been undisturbed while repairs are being made on the vessel.

England Rejects Germany's Proposition

London, Feb. 16.—Germany's proposal that England abandon her embargo on foodstuffs consigned to German civilians in return for Germany calling off her submarine campaign against English merchant shipping was presented to the cabinet in extra session by Foreign Secretary Grey today. According to reliable reports the German proposal was rejected in its entirety. At the conclusion of the cabinet meeting it was announced that King George would hold a privy council late today or tomorrow. It is expected that at the council the King will sign a proclamation prohibiting the transportation of food stuffs to Germany, and setting for the various retaliatory methods adopted against Germany because of the threatened blockade. After Sir Edward Grey had presented to the cabinet the proposition of compromise presented by Germany the members were informed by Winston Churchill, Lord of the Admiralty, of the plans that have been made to retaliate against Germany. These are understood to include a blockade of the German coast. Announcement was made today that Premier Asquith will be asked in Parliament tomorrow whether the Government will consider the establishment of a joint prize court consisting of representatives of the United States and England, with a view to avoiding a recurrence of the dispute between neutral trade nations.

GERMANY PROMISES CAREFUL CAMPAIGN

Says Real Danger Lies In England's Policy of Flying Flags of Neutral Nations

BY FREDERICK WERNER

Berlin, via Amsterdam, Feb. 16.—Germany's expectation that neutral countries would protest against the proclamation of a war zone around the British Isles and along the French coast has been amply fulfilled. Thus far six countries, the United States, Holland, Italy, Greece, Norway and Denmark have made representations through their envoys here to the foreign office.

While these representations are in effect protests, they are couched in friendly terms and are to be answered in the same manner. A preliminary reply has already been sent to the United States, Italy and Holland, the International News Service was informed at the foreign office today and Denmark, Greece and Norway will be answered immediately. Sweden has thus far taken no action, but is expected to do so.

The replies made by the German government place full responsibility for the situation upon England, pointing out that the action of that country in cutting off the food supplies of German civilians has forced Germany to adopt retaliatory methods.

Assurances are given that German's naval forces will do everything in their power to avoid injuring neutral shipping, but is asserted that England's policy of having its vessels fly the flags of neutral countries endangers the ships of these nations.

The German statement is a full exposition of the admiralty's attitude and its desire to maintain the friendly international relations now existing between the Empire and the neutral countries, but it is also a firm avowal that this government will remain firm in its policy of exterminating England's mercant vessels as long as England maintains its policy of "starve Germany."

"We are confident that the neutral countries will understand Germany's position thoroughly as a result of the replies sent to their notes of inquiry," says the Tages-Zeitung editorially today. "We have accepted the conditions laid down by England. She, and she alone, is responsible for the situation that threatened for a time to cause misunderstandings between Germany and the neutral countries. This has been cleared up. Now England will have to answer for the policy that caused our action."

The Kreuz Zeitung speaks in a similar strain, though showing no change in its attitude toward what it calls "American unneutrality."

LATE WAR BULLETINS

Berlin, by wireless, Feb. 16.—Zeppelin airships will assist in the blockade of the English coast, says the Vossischezeitung, an official authority today. It is understood the aircraft will be used to drop bombs upon British ships that escape from submarine lines which will be established in British waters. The Lokalanzeiter states that Germany is prepared to strew the British coast with mines. This statement aroused the belief here that German mine layers are hidden in inaccessible recesses of the British coast and are ready to move as soon as the blockade is begun.

Berlin, Feb. 16.—The capture of Klock and Bielsk, two towns in northern Poland on the right bank of the Vistula river is announced in an official report made by the German General Staff issued here this afternoon. It stated that the towns were captured after a two hours' fight, which resulted in the capture of 1000 prisoners. The report also claims success on the Eastern Prussian frontier. The announcement of the capture of Klock is the most important since the news of the Russian defeat in E. Prussia.

WILSON FAVORS CLOTURE

Washington, Feb. 16.—President Wilson made it clear today that he afvors cloture in the Senate. He told callers today that he advocates a general rule limiting debate as part of the process of revising the procedure.

SIGNS OF SPRING

Wellington, N. J., Feb. 16.—Fuzzy brown caterpillars and hot-tailed wasps have made their appearance here. Robins and bluebirds were seen last week. Gardeners are getting out their spades and trowels.

SPEAKER CLARK RALLIES PARTY

All Night Caucus Results In Adoption of Administration Measure, Due to Speaker's Strength

Washington, Feb. 16.—A test in the House today indicated the passage of the ship purchase bill by that body. By a vote of 111 to 86 the House ordered the previous question on the special rule making the shipping bill in order. The effect of this rule was to limit the debate to 20 minutes on the rule followed by 6 hours' debate on the shipping bill itself.

Washington, Feb. 16.—Speaker Champ Clark came to the aid of the adminsitration ship purchase bill in the House Democratic caucus and rallied the wavering members, with the result that the caucus early today after an all night discussion, adopted the measure by a vote of 154 to 29. It was announced that seventeen Democrats, among them Majority Leader-elect Kitchin and Representative Fitzgerald of New York will not vote for the bill when it is taken up in the House and put through under the secial rule limiting debate to six hours.

The vote was taken at 2.30 o'clock this morning and the caucus then adjourned.

Speaker Clark brought many wavering members back into line with this word of warning:

"You have wandered in the wilderness for sixteen years and you will wander there again unless you follow the leadership of your party."

The Speaker pointed out that while he is opposed to the theory of government ownership, the ship bill was an emergency measure and the House should ont stand in the way of its passage because the Senate probably would filibuster against it "until dooms day."

The first vote, which showed the effect of the Speaker's advice, was taken shortly before 1 o'clock when a suggestion by Representative Page of North Carolina that the ships acquired under the act be excluded from the merchant trade two years after the European war had ended, was defeated, 118 to 38.

Representative Fitzgerald joined Representative Page in opposing the bill. He announced he could not be bound by caucus action because of his view against government ownership in any form.

Representative Hefelin of Alabama helped the fight when he announced he had information that President Wilson had decided to abandon the extra session idea. Hefelin stated that the executive would be willing to put the issue up to the people if the House passes the bill and the Senate Republicans continue their filibuter.

Senate leaders today planned to "hark time" by discussing the proposals for general and special cloture of debate. They proposed to keep away from discussion of the shipping bill until the house shall have passed the substitute for the week's naval mail line measure. Then "there will be something doing," it was stated.

PRESIDENT HAS ENGLAND'S REPLY TO AMERICAN NOTE

Washington, Feb. 16.—The whole text of England's reply to the American note of Dec. 26, protesting against interference against American shipping at sea was taken up by President Wilson personally today. It required several days to translate the document from the diplomatic code, the reply being of such length as to fill 6 columns of a newspaper. The reply was taken from the State Department t othe White House by Secretary Bryan. The text will probably be given out simultaneously in London and Washington.

RUSSIANS FEAR NOT COLD STEEL LUNGES

Petrograd, Feb. 16.—Warmer weather has again come to the aid of the Russians who have retired from East Prussia to the shelter of fortified positions on their own soil before the fierce attacks of the great army massed by General VonHindenburg and as a result it was predicted by military observers here today that the new Teutonic invasion of Russia will end in a complete collapse.

A thaw has set in the northern arena and conditions similar to those which resulted in the defeat of the Germans on the Niemen a few months ago again prevail. The soil that had been frozen by the terrific cold of January has again turned to swamp and the Germans will be unable to transport their artillery. tI was their lack of guns that forced them to retreat from Suwalki and Augustowe on their previous invasion.

Russian critics declare that in fighting with cold steel the troops of Grand Duke Nicholas are far superior to those of the German commander. The Germans fight brilliantly, they admit, but they lack the dogged courage and determination that give the Russians the better of the contest with the bayonet.

The fear openly expressed in some quarters that the German advance northeast from Lyck and the Mazurian lake region might strike at the rear of the Russians at Warsaw and compel the evacuation of that city and the fortress of Neve Geergieevsk is declared baseless by the war expert of the Bourse Gazette.

"The positions of the Russians along the Bebr and Narew rivers are impregnable," he said today. "Supported by the fortresses of Ossowiec, Lemza and Pultsk, the Russians can defy any attempt to create the natural barriers formed by these streams."

Latest reports from the Carparthians show that hard fighting continues there with the Austro-German forces trying to shatter the Russian front without any effect. The situation in Bukowina is declared by the war office to be unchanged.

Opinions

A Foodstuffs Embargo Inadvisable.

There are obvious reasons why the United States should impose an embargo on the exportation of foodstuffs only as a last resort. One of them is the desperate need of these foodstuffs among the non-combatants of Europe. Those who argue that by suspending the exportation of our wheat and flour and other materials we could starve European belligerents into concluding treaties of peace, do not take into consideration the suffering which this would entail on the part of innocent and helpless millions. Some of our exported foodstuffs may find their way to the trenches, but the bulk of them is consumed by the non-combatants at home, a large percentage of whom are much less able to endure privation than their fathers, husbands, brothers and sons at the front. It would seem highly inconsistent, to say the least, for a nation which is feeding Belgium for nothing to refuse to feed for cash a much larger number of equally innocent victims of the great war.

There is another argument, an economic one, against the proposed embargo. It is the first duty of our national government to protect American citizens from starvation, regardless of the demands of international altrusim. But the only American citizens in danger of starvation at present are those out of employment, and they, for the greater part, can't afford bread at any price. The government, to solve their problem, should encourage the increase of employment, the return of prosperity, rather than by forbidding the export of foodstuffs seek to depress the price of bread. The latter course would cut a large part of our present highly lucrative foreign commerce, cause financial disaster and greatly increase unemployment.

In this case, therefore, both self-interest and altruism dictate the continued exportation of American foodstuffs, at least until the pinch becomes much greater.—N. Y. Tribune.

Getting Good Men for Office.

Governor Whitman has now reached the stage of experience where he laments the difficulty of getting the kind of men he wants to take office to accept the offices which he offers. Yet the Governor, in the few appointments he has made so far, has set a pretty high standard and has been able to induce the kind of men he wanted to take office under him. Mr. Perkins, the District Attorney of New York County, and the new members of the State Civil Service Commission are examples of the possibility of getting a high type of public official when the conditions are right.

It is hard to get goo men—desirable men of unimpeachable repute and ability—to take an office which they understand to be "political." There are plenty of men who have genuine public spirit and a willingness to render public service, provided there are not strings on them in the exercise of the duties put up to them for consideration. A political Governor, like Mr. Dix or Mr. Sulzer, has no ability to convince real men, big men, that there is a place for them in his administration which they could fill without loss of prestige and self-respect. Mr. Hughes did not experience that difficulty. If Governor Whitman follows the Hughes road in administration it may safely be predicted that he will find no more difficulty than Mr. Hughes did in making appointments creditable to him and to the public service—The Globe.

EXTRA SESSION PROBABLE

The abandonment of the ship purchase bill was urged last night by the members of the Democratic national Committee when the President was warned to abandon the shipping bill for an extra session of Congress would chalk a disastrous score against the party. However, the President was determined to force action on the shipping bill at this session.

President Wilson will leave for San Fracisco on March 10 and is planning in making the ship fight an issue in his speechmaking tour. The traits of the "schoolmaster" are again evident in this case. The "master" is about to leave the room and the boys must have their talk completed on time.

Of the present Congress only fifteen and one-half working days remain. If this issue is brought to a close, and there is no extra session, the President will begin to shape public sentiment for a resumption of the struggle next fall. Should the bill not be brought to action a long session of the new Congress, running far into the summer is probable.

THE BIBLE BILL MAY BE FOUGHT

Greiner-Tallett Measure For Reading In School Bitterly Opposed

New York, Feb. 16.—Prominent Jews throughout this state are fighting to defeat the Greiner-Tallett bill, which requires the daily reading of ten verses of the Bible in all public schools. The measure comes up for final hearing in the Legislature next Tuesday. They are determined to kill the bill, and today ministers of several Jewish congregations of this city will petition their followers to fight the measure as an outrage. Several will make the journey to Albany for that purpose.

The Rev. O. R. Miller is behind the Bible-reading bill. He has sent circulars to hundreds of Protestant churches throughout the state urging congregations to petition Assemblymen and Senators to pass the bill. It was ready for final passage on Wednesday of last week, but hundreds of letters from Jewish ministers and others halted its passage for further consideration.

So intense is Jewish feeling against the measure that men in all walks of life have expressed their opinions by writing to the authors of the bill, Assemblyman Greiner and Tallett. "No real Jews can accept such a measure without fighting against it first," was the statement made yesterday by a rabbi of national fame.

Rabbi Silverman Opposes It.

"I am absolutely opposed to the bill providing Bible reading," said the Rev. Dr. Joseph Silverman, rabbi of Temple Emanu-El, yesterday. "I am opposed to it even if it should make provision for reading the Old Testament as well as the New. I see in this bill an entering wedge for Catholics to base their demand for state support for their parochial schools. I am just as much against reading the Bible in the public schools as I would be against the reading of Mrs. Eddy's Christian Science book, or the Koran, or some other sacred book of the East.

"Just as soon would I think of suggesting the reading of Brigham Young's revelations from God. If our Bible may be read in our public schools there is no reason why any of the other books mentioned cannot be read. The principle on which I base my opposition is that religion as such must be absolutely divorced from the curriculum of studies or from any courses of reading in the public schools.

"Patriotism and respect for the law belong to the curriculum of the public school, but theology never, either directly or indirectly. The Constitution of our country is based on the separation of Church from State. I believe that the inculcation of religion through Bible reading in the schools is a violation of the spirit and letter of the Constitution of the United States.

"Some may claim that the Bible should be read merely as literature, but that is neither the purpose of Bible reading nor is it the result. I know what the purpose behind this movement is, and I must say it is far from observing the constitutional rights of every man and woman in this conntry. If the plea that the Bible is good literature is advanced I will answer with the statement that there is plenty of literature to be read besides selecting a book whose only purpose is to teach religion."

Work of Sunday Schools

"If it is contended that the Bible is the best literature, I will answer again that such reading is covered by our Sunday schools, which have been created for that purpose. If it is claimed that not all the children attend the Sunday schools, the answer is that that is none of the business of the missionaries and evangelists who are behind this Bible reading movement."

Leonard M. Wallstein, Commissioner of Accounts of New York, has also protested against the Greiner-Tallett bill. "I do not for a moment favor the carrying of religious prificiples into our public school," said Mr. Wallstein. "The ethical principles common to all faiths can be taught without use of the Scriptures, as proposed. Their use in the manner provided in Mr. Tallett's bill will, it seems to me, either introduce the religious faith of some school children on all of them, or it will make for the classification of school children on the basis solely of religious belief. Both results are pernicious and both are distinctly un-American. Again, I wish to urge very strongly against even a suggestion of the measure."

Ex-Judge Leon Sanders, who, as grand master of the Independent Order of British Abraham, an organization enrolling 200,000 Jews, really represents more than a million of his faith in this state, is especially strong in his denunciation of the Tallett bill, and calls it a miserable meddling with matters that had best be left alone.

"It would mean the opening wedge to make our schools sectarian," said Mr. Sanders. "Today we have one measure threatening the private liberties of New York's citizens. Tomorrow there will be something else. This is not a matter of small importance. It is of untmost importance, and both Jew and Gentile should wake up to its magnitude and what it means to encroach on the private liberties of the citizens of this state. Religion under any circumstances should not be injected into a public school system, but should unconditionally be left to our churches and Sunday schools.

Fears Abuse Would Result

"While Bible reading in itself cannot do children any harm, and is to a great extent elevating and instructive, it will without the shadow of doubt lead to very grave abuses. Jewish children in classroom would be embarrassed if certain sections of the Bible, such as the crucifixion of Christ should be mentioned. Other children would feel a spirit of enmity toward them. With this result in democracy? The bill will lead us back to the dark ages of hate if it should be passed. Why should a happy condition of tolerance be disturbed, and why should unwelcome skeletons be dug up? Unless there is some motive behind this bill there can be no other reasons for disturbing a healthy condition that has existed since the public school system came in vogue."

"Reactionary to the highest degree," is the manner in which Representative-elect Meyer London, who is the first Socialist candidate to be elected from this state, describes the attempt to pass the Greiner-Tallett bill. "It is an outrageous invasion of public rights," said Mr. London, "and it is absolutely unconstitutional. It is an infringement on the rights of the state and religion. The men who elected me to Congress are absolutely opposed to the bill.

"All Jews must be opposed to the measure. There are other ways of teaching moral tenets than by foisting Bible reading on the children of this state. The individual should be left alone, to do whatever he pleases so long as he doesn't infringe on the laws of the land. The introduction of Bible reading in our public schools does not fit in with the progessiveness and outlook of this state."

SEEK AID OF LOCAL CLUB

President O'Grady of the Local Game and Gun Club Received Letter Asking Aid in Legislation

Bernard O'Grady, president of the Fulton Game and Gun Club, also a member of the New York State Fish, Game and Forest League received a letter today from president George A. Lawyer of Watertown asking for his assistance in having a bill, now before the Senate favoring the killing of doe. The bill (No. 124) designed for this purpose has been reported favorably by the assembly committtee on conservation.

The letter follows:

"It will indeed be humiliating to the sportsmen of this state to have this backward step taken. The present law in its practical working has demonstrated beyond any doubt that it is accomplishing all that its friends claimed for it. It is not only conserving the deer, which are rapidly increasing in numbers and size, but more important it is protecting human lives.

"The claim that some doe are now being killed is no argument against the present law; as well may it be said that because some man wilfully kills another, the killing of human beings should be made lawful.

"The words 'having horns not less than three inches in length,' are a 'safety first' sign, which makes every law-respecting hunter stop, look and listen. The observance of this law means that our deer supply will never be exhausted and that no hunter will ever be mistaken for a deer.

"You should at once vigorously oppose the passage of the above bills. See to it that dozens of personal letters are sent to your members in the legislature. If possible see them personally and secure from them a pledge to do all in their power to defeat this bill. Do it now; there is no time to wait.

"It is also very important that you follow the same course with Senator Wilson's bill (S. 208) and Assemblyman Hopkin's bill (A. 566), which would make it a misdemeanor for any person to hunt or fish on the land of another without first having obtained the written permission of the owner. This drastic legislation would forever end free hunting and fishing in this state. It is bad in principle, impracticable to enforce, and would work the greatest hardship to the sportsmen.

"Other important bills (A. 247, 292, and 301) would divert the hunting license money and give one-half of the revenue from license and penalties to the towns to be used, not for the protection of fish and game, but in any way the towns see fit. The sportsmen can never stand for the enactment of this law.

"Still other bills (S. 166 and 167-a, 293 and 294) would amend the court procedure so as to compel the prosecution of a violator in the town where the offence was committed, or if the offender resides in another county, in the town where he resides. Evidently this measure is backed by those who would like to violate the law with impunity. Under such a law it would be almost impossible to secure a conviction.

"In addition to this we have a vast amount of work on our hands to secure the enactment of laws recommended by the league. We hope to secure a better transportation law, without which all other laws will become ineffective; we are after more game farms and game refuges; an increased protective force with larger salaries; we want guides licensed; we must help to straighten out the migratory bird law and secure the much needed protection of such birds in the southern states. There are other very important measures absolutely essential for the proper protection of our fish and game."

It will be seen by the above appeal that the members of the Fish and Game League are hot on the trial of violaters of the law, and they showed the co-operative backing of every citizen in the state whether he or she be a member of the league or not. The young doe that scamper about our forests in the Adirondacks need to be prserved, as do also the many species of birds.

The above letter is worthy the approval of every sportsman and should be supported by theose who desire fair play in the preservation of game.

PIANOS
Would you buy a horse or a dog without first looking to the PEDIGREE of both, if you did you might possibly be greatly disappointed or badly fooled?
Why should not the same rule work in buying a beautiful Piano for your home, which becomes a member of your family for 50 years?
Would you not require the same PEDIGREE of a Piano as you would the dog or horse?
The HENRY F. MILLER PIANO and Playerpiano for 50 years have satisfied thousands of critical musicians, they will satisfy you, they have stood and alway will stand the PEDIGREE TEST, they are honestly built, they are built right, they stay right after they are built. No tone satisfies the critical musician like the Henry F. Miller tone for refinement. Durability unquestioned. PEDIGREE MEANS HIGH QUALITY. Prices right, sold on sensible terms.

Exempt from Taxation, Including the Federal Income Tax

AMOUNTING TO

$27,000,000.00

Issued in Coupon or Registered Form

WILL BE SOLD

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 10, 1915, AT 12 O'CLOCK, NOON

At the State Comptroller's Office, Albany, N. Y.

This is the only public sale of New York State bonds that is contemplated during the present calendar year.

These bonds have been segregated into two classes, and bidders will be required to state clearly in the proposal the class of bonds and the amount and price for each $100 bid for, coupon bonds being issued in denominations of $1,000.00 and registered bonds in denominations of $1,000.00, $5,000.00, $10,000.00 and $50,000.00.

Class No. 1. $8,000,000.00 for the Improvement of the Erie, Champlain and Oswego canals, dated January 1, 1915, due January 1, 1965; $4,000,000.00 for the Improvement of the Cayuga and Seneca canal, dated January 1, 1915, due January 1, 1965; $10,000,000.00 for the Improvement of Highways, dated March 1, 1915, due March 1, 1965.

As the bonds enumerated above are all 50-year bonds, bearing 4¼ per cent. interest, the Comptroller will reserve the right to allot to the successful bidder, bonds of any or all of the above issues in Class No. 1, notwithstanding the specific issue may be stated in the bid.

Class No. 2. $5,000,000.00 for the Construction of Barge Canal Terminals, dated January 1, 1915, due January 1, 1945.

Temporary recipts will be issued which will be exchanged for the permanent bonds when ready for delivery.

These Bonds are Legal Investments for Trust Funds.

No bids will be accepted for less than the par value of the bonds nor unless accompanied by a deposit of money or by a certified check or bank draft upon a solvent bank or trust company of the cities of Albany or New York, payable to the order of the Comptroller of the State of New York, for at least two per cent of the par value of the bonds bid for.

All proposals, together with the security deposits, must be sealed and endorsed "Loan for Improvement" and enclosed in a sealed envelop directed to the "Comptroller of the State of New York, Albany."

All bids will include accrued interest.

The Comptroller reserves the right to reject any or all bids which are not in his opinion advantageous to the interests of the State.

Circular descriptive of these bonds and of outstanding state bonds, sinking funds, etc., will be mailed upon application to

EUGENE M. TRAVIS, State Comptroller, Albany, N. Y.

DOMESTIC ECONOMY DEPARTMENT

A Department Conducted to Meet the Demands of the Alert Home-Makers who Number Among our Readers.

Many good cooks have an aversion for canned goods. This is an old fashioned idea, for with the modern canning facilities vegetables are as cheaply and tastefully prepared as from buying the vegetables in the bulk.

Following are a number of tasteful dishes made from canned peas:

In the first place always drain all of the liquor from the peas as soon as you have opened the can, soak them in very cold water for ten minutes to remove the canned flavor, and drain. Then put on the fire in boiling water, which you have seasoned with a salt spoonful of salt and a tablespoon of sugar. Boil for five minutes, drain and serve with butter, pepper and salt. This is the simplest way of serving canned peas. For variation you may add a sprig of mint and a small onion to the boiling water, removing them before serving the peas.

Peas and Celery make a delightful dish. Cook two cups of raw celery cut in dice in enough boiling water to cover till tender. Drain off the liquid and measure out one cup, thicken with two tablespoons of flour rubbed smooth with one of butter, boil till smooth and add the celery and one can of peas which have been previously soaked in cold water. This is very dainty in ramikins and slightly browned in the oven.

Peas with Lettuce are also savory and novel. Wash a small head of lettuce and cut into small pieces; drain and soak a can of peas, and put on the fire with the lettuce and half a cup of water, a small onion, teaspoon of sugar, tablespoon of butter, salt and pepper to taste. Simmer till the lettuce is quite tender; by this time the water will have evaporated and the vegetables will be ready to serve.

Peas in Croustades makes a fanciful little dish suitable for a company luncheon or dinner. Baking powder biscuits or thick slices of stale bread form the croustades; if biscuits are used scoop out the centres and brown in the oven; drop a bit of butter in each one and fill with creamed peas. The bread should be cut in rounds, the centres removed then treated like the biscuits.

Puree of green peas will be a nice change from the more heavy soups. Drain the peas, soak and cook slowly in boiling water till very tender. Then press them through a strainer. Add two cups of hot milk, a teaspoon of salt, a little paprika, tablespoon of butter and cook for a few moments; serve with little squares of toasted bread.

Green Pea Souffle is not unlike the puree except that it is served as a vegetable, or for a luncheon dish when it makes an excellent substitute for meat. Mash a can of peas that have been drained, soaked and boiled, and add the beaten yolks of two eggs, a tablespoonful of butter, and salt and pepper to taste. Let all become quite cold, then add the whipped whites of the eggs and a quarter of a cup of cream. Bake in a buttered dish and serve immediately.

Green Pea Griddle Cakes are also good for luncheon. Mash can of peas, rub through a sieve and season with butter, pepper and salt. Add two eggs well beaten, a large cup of milk, half a cup of flour into which you have stirred half teaspoon of baking powder, beat well and bake on a hot, greased griddle. Serve with sausage or any meat that you prefer.

There are seven delicious and brand new ways of serving canned peas, and they will all be liked immensely.

Marshmallow Apple Pie
Coffee

Creamed Hash on Toast—Slice enough of the cold beef a la mode from tonight's dinner for luncheon tomorrow, and chop the remainder very fine. Season with pepper and salt and add a teaspoon of chopped onion, and a tablespoon of chopped parsley. Make a cup of cream sauce (you can use your white thickening for this if you have it ready), and stir in the meat. Heat thoroughly and serve on toast.

Toasted Crackers and Cheese—Cover the little round snowflake crackers with grated cheese, and set in a hot oven till brown. These are also nice with salad or preserves.

Marshmallow Apple Pie—Line a pie tin with rather rich pastry, fill with thinly sliced apples, add a generous amount of sugar, bits of butter and a cup of milk, sprinkle with nutmeg and bake till the apples are tender. Then place a layer of marshmallows over the top of the pie and return to the oven till they have melted. Serve warm.

SHOW MODEL OF NATIONAL SHRINE

Catholic Women Exhibit Plan for Monument at Washington

New York, Feb. 16.—Under the immediate supervision of the New York Chapter of the National Organization of Catholic Women of the United States of America there was a private view Saturday in the Dreicer Building, southwest corner of Fifty-third street and Fifth avenue, of the proposed model and plans of the national shrine of the Immaculate Conception, to be erected on the grounds of the Catholic University, at Washington.

Mrs. Francis Burral Hoffman, who was in charge of the exhibition yesterday, is the mother of the architect, Francis Burrall Hoffman, jr., who drew the plans for the shrine and executed the large plaster model. This was much admired by the throng of society folk who visited the exhibition, which is on the ground floor of the building, just across the way from St. Thomas's church.

Those who inspected the model of the shrine, which is really a large cathedral-like edifice, and who contributed to the already large fund for its erection, were Mrs. Jacob Phillips, Mrs. Stuart, Pullman West, Senator and Mrs. Chauncey M. Depew, Mrs. Stephen Peabody, Mrs. John Wysong, Mrs. Tiffany Dyer, Mrs. Frederick Neilson, Mrs. John Bowers, Mr. and Mrs. J. McCann, Mrs. Feitner and Mrs Preston Satterthwaite.

The exhibition will be open today by invitation, and tomorrow it will be viewed by the public, remaining open daily from 10 a.m. to 10 p.m., until February 22. The committee in charge tomorrow will be Cardinal Farley, Countess Leary, Mrs. Edward Hawke, jr., Mrs. P. Henry Dugro and Mrs. Henry W. Taft. On Tuesday Mrs. Andrew Dougherty, Mrs. John G. Agar and Mrs. Walter A. Burke will be in charge, and on Wednesday Mrs. Morgan J. O'Brien and Mrs. J. Henry Haggerty.

There will be music in the afternoon and evening each day. After the exhibition the model will be sent to the Panama-Pacific Exposition, where a committee of Catholic women of San Francisco will be in charge.

A few years ago the late Pope Pius placed the United States of America under the specia patronage and protection of the Virgin Mary. Prompted by this act, a number of prominent Catholic women decided, a year and a half ago, to form a national organization of Catholic women of the United States, for the purpose of erecting a shrine in honor of the Virgin and her Immaculate Conception. A site was chosen on the grounds of the Catholic University, at Washington, D. C. Since the object was national, it was considered appropriate that the shrine should rise among the other splendid buildings that decorate the national capital.

The late Pope Pius was deeply interested in the work and sent a large personal contribution to further the object. He also sent an apostolic letter to Cardinal Gibbons.

There are at present three chapters in active operation. They are located in New York, Washington and Baltimore. The headquarters of the New York chapter is at 15 Broad street. The success of the women has been great, and a large sum has been collected.

MINUTES IN MANHATTAN

By Gotham Knickerbocker

International News Service Special Dispatch

New York, Feb. 16.—The New York subway company selects its burliest and hoarsest employes to act as platform guards.

It might be thought a waste of good money by some to pay $10 to $12 a week for uniformed ushers to trains, when the passengers could just as well step into the trains, and find seats for themselves. But such a thought could only find lodgment in the brain of some denizen of Medicine Hat, whose opinions on many subjects would be much more reasonable than those of the conceited dyed-in-the-wool subwaiter.

The latter may be densely ignorant and believe the world ends in a void just west of Hoboken, but he knows that each platform guard is supposed to and does earn just 50 cents for the subway company whenever he slams a door.

Unassisted, the passengers would only crowd into the door until they filled the space, touching each other solidly on every side. Then from the rear comes the guard, roaring, "Step into the car! Move inside!"

About the door is a fringe of those who would get in but cannot. Into them the guard catapults. He spreads his arms wide; like Atlas holding the earth, and by some inconceivable summoning of brute force, he forces ten persons through the door.

Some of those already in slip up and down, and perhaps a few dislocate shoulder or so. But holding his victims in with one arm, the guard holds the door with the other. Perhaps he finds he has gone too far and the edge of the door blackens the eye of some tired business man who is half in, half out. Then the guard seizes one or two of the outermost passengers, cries "Don't be rough," and throws them back onto the platform. In these cases it is usually found the guard has made a mistake and shoves in twelve or fifteen instead of the regulation ten.

The largest and strongest guards are to be found at the Fourteenth street station of the subway. Here the "rush" is the greatest. The passengers are mostly little $6-a-week sweatshop girls, but these are soft and yielding and can be packed much closer than the harder and more angular type of passenger getting on at Wall street. The best guards come from Eastport, Me., which is also noted for a certain small fish, highly prized by epicures.

Chiyo Sin leads a dog's life of it. He is Chinese and his only servant is a Japanese valet, who doesn't speak a word of the language of Confucius, Li Hung Chang and Yuan Shih Kai. Adachi, the man servant, isn't even able to understand English, a language in which Mr. Chiyo gets along very well because he has spent many years in this country.

Adachi tries hard, but what can a Nipponese know about a Mandarin of ancient lineage? Think of serving him with dried bread, crumbs and raw meat with flavorings of onions, carrots, spinach, and lettuce! Chiyo Sin has not tasted birds' nest soup or sharks' fins for a flea's age. So stupid!

But don't think from this comparison that Chiyo Sin is familiar with fl——, what a hateful word. Of course in that respect Adachi is perfect. Every morning he combs and brushes Mr. Chiyo's glossy hair until it shines and puts boraic acid in his eyes and manicures his nails.

But it is tedious to have such an illiterate servant as Adachi, and Chiyo Sin is always glad when he arrives at the St. Regis or the Waldorf and has plenty of other Pekingese to talk to. Then he even sticks out his chest, tilts his stubby nose and is proud because he is the only dog in the world with a Japanese valet.

CHARITY BALL SCORED SUCCESS

About Five Hundred Persons Attended; A Splendid Social Affair

The charity ball given at the Elks' home last evening was one of the most successful social events ever attempted in this city. Fully five hundred persons were in attendance. Guests from Oswego, Phoenix, Syracuse and other out of town places were present. The younger social set of Fulton was well represented.

The music for the evening given by the orchestra was especially fine and the floor was declared ideal by those who tripped to the merry strains of music in the various new and old dances.

The ballroom presented a pretty picture in its decorations of foliage, festoons, banners, flags and bunting. The many handsome gowns of variety and design also added to the attractiveness of the scene.

Dancing began promptly on the hour of eight and continued well in the morning hours. A buffet luncheon was served at midnight.

The net amount realized for the benefit of the hospital auxiliary has not been determined, but it is believed the amount will be a substantial one and will relieve the anxiety for some time of those in charge of the visiting nurse work.

The efforts of those in charge of the affair are to be commended, and it is a credit to the public interest that the affair could be made possible a success.

This is the type of work that makes for a community interest.

MOCK MARRIAGE ENJOYED

SHE FOUND KIND OFFICERS

They Helped Woman in Distress, Who Wouldn't Give up Fight

New York, Feb. 16.—There is one woman today who knows that all policemen are not hard hearted. Mrs. Catherine Gilligan was to have been dispossessed. Police Captain Duggan found that her husband, Thomas, a chauffeur, had been out of work for six months and for several weeks suffered from a bronchial trouble. The woman was ill—the constant care of her sick husband and the worry of providing for him and their two children, Anna, two years old, and Mary, five weeks old, had undermined her health. With pitiful pride she shrank from charity. She tried hard to keep up. The police found work for Gilligan.

"You're good men," said Mrs. Gilligan at the station, "but Tom can't take the job. You'd better be finding some one else that needs it. He can't go out in this weather (it was raining) and him hardly out of a sick bed. He has no shoes."

Then the police searched their lockers. A pair of footgear was brought out. The woman selected one to fit her husband. Then they spoke of her own physical condition and wanted to send her to a sanitarium. She became frightened. She did not want to be separated from her loved ones.

"I know I can't stay here and live, but I can't be separated from my babies." The kind hearted policemen did not press her but took up a collection for the poverty stricken family.

COMISKY GETS AWAY

Chicago, Feb. 16.—With about 65 persons on board, the White Sox special will leave tonight for California.

Manager Rowland said twenty-two ball players would be aboard the train.

Many of the players will have their wives along, and several friends of President Comisky will make the trip.

Manager Rowland will have thirty ball players in camp at Pase Robles.

GAYLORD HOME SOLD

This morning at the city hall the Gaylord home in So. 4th st., was sold at public auction.

Jmes A. Gaylord, husband of the owner, Celia Gaylord, of Syracuse, bid in the property for $7,200 through his attorney, Daniel A. Pierce.

Attorney Giles S. Piper acted as referee in the sale.

A. W. Wiltsie, Claude E. Guile, Lee Edgerton, Louis W. Emerick, Herbert J. Wilson, L. R. Scudder and J. D. Dyer participated in the bidding.

The homestead is one of the finest in the city. The interior is finely finished in every detail. The property was owned formerly under a land contract by Nellie A. Jones of this city.

REAL VAUDEVILLE

No matter what previous engagements one may have made for tonight, or tomorrow, it will be incomplete unless a visit to The Quirk is included. This assertion is based on the fact that the vaudeville to be presented there is the best seen this season, and that is saying a whole lot. Word has been passed to Gus Sun to, as fast as possible, improve the quality of acts. This means increased cost, which means more expense to the theatre management with the price of admission remaining the same. The feature photoplays that are shown in conjunction are fully explained in the ad in another column.

BOWLING NOTES

A new bowling league has been organized in Fulton, and will be known as the Tri-city League. There will be two teams representing Fulton, also one from Phoenix, and one from Baldwinsville.

The first game of the series will be bowled on the Onyx alleys tonight between the Shamrocks of this city and a team from Phoenix.

* * *

Manager Stauring will hold a two-man sweepstakes tournament on the Onyx alleys Friday, Feb. 19th. There will be teams from Oswego, Fulton, Phoenix and Baldwinsville take part, and a big time is anticipated.

COMMON COUNCIL

The common council met last night in the city clerk's office, voting to sell bonds for the Erie st. school building to the amount of $28,100. Bids will be received until Feb. 25, 8 p.m.

RACING BILL WITH GOVERNOR BOYLE

Carson City, Nev. Feb. 16.—The pari-matuel bill amending the anti-gambling law so as to legalize betting on horse racing on the pari-matuel system passed the Assembly 38 to 12 and went to Governor Boyle today for his signature.

SEAMAN KILLED IN A BOUT

Seattle, Wash., Feb. 16.—An inquiry was begun today into the death of A. V. Brown, a seaman on the cruiser North Dakota at the Puget Sound navy yard, who died from injuries received during a boxing bout on the cruiser West Virginia with Clarence Salmon, another seaman.

Oleo Tax and Cost of Living

Oleomargarine is a substitute for butter. It is used in thousands of homes and is regarded as a wholesome food. It is cheaper than butter, even though taxed something like 10 cents per pound.

The tax on oleo is a "protection" to the farmer. In other words, many are made to pay this added cost because of class legislation passed in behalf of farmers.

There are so many consumers of butter, who would remain consumers of butter if oleomargarine sold minus the tax, that it is not likely that, if the tax were removed from oleo, the price of butter would be affected. But the price of oleo would be considerably affected. That would help many of us who have a difficult time to get sufficient to eat and to wear. It is true that farmers on the average do not make a great deal of money, if we are to believe the statistics; but they have plenty to eat and sufficient to keep themselves warm and sheltered. That is much more than thousands of persons living in the cities can say. These persons would be benefited by anything which would relieve the cost of living.—Observer, Utica.

Proposes Voting by Mail

Albany, Feb. 16.—Senator Gilchrist introduced today a concurrent resolution providing for an amendment to Section 4, Article 2, of the constitution, to permit actors, traveling men and others who find themselves away from home on registration days and on Election Day to vote and register by mail.

ROSENBLOOM CO. LEASED STORE

The Store Formerly Occupied by James L. Jones to be New Quarters for this Firm

H. Rosenbloom, who for the past 38 years has conducted a men's furnishing store at 17 S. 1st st., dealing in clothing, shoes, rubbers, etc., has leased the store formerly occupied by James L. Jones, 53 S. 1st st., and, as soon as alterations and repairs are made will move his stock to the new place. Mr. Rosenbloom expects that the place will be ready for occupancy on or about April 1st.

An entire new line of men's furnishings, shoes, rubbers, trunks, traveling bags, etc., will stock the store and Mr. Rosebloom's aim is to have one of the most modern stores of its kind in this section.

The store to be vacated by the H. Rosenbloom Co. will be immediately occupied by the B. S. McKinstry Co., which will also add to its stock and make decided improvements in the arrangements and general attractiveness of the store itself.

The business section of the city will experience a number of changes this spring, and many exterior improvements are to be made as a result.

The "biggest little city" is steadily pushing a prospering business face to the front, and if the improvements noted during the past ten years are a sign post of progress, Fulton will continue "to keep on keeping on."

Here's to the progessive ones!

ENGLISH MOSQUITO FLEET TO AID IN SURPRISES WAITING FOR GERMANY

All Britain Remains Confident of Ability to Dissipate Anticipated Submarine Blockade

By HERBERT TEMPLE.

London, Feb. 17.—With her naval plans completed to meet the submarine campaign which Germany will launch against her tomorrow, England awaited the issue today with all calmness, confident in her ability not only to ward off the German attacks, but also to effect a blockade of the German coast that will shorten the war.

Rejoicing over the latest successful raid of the British aviation corps upon the German naval base at Zeebrugge, Belgium, was increased today by repots that the bombs dropped by the aeroplanes had seriously damaged three German submarines. Advices to this effect were received from Amsterdam, the dispatches also stating that it will be impossible for the Germans to repair these submarines at Zeebrugge.

The attack upon Zeebrugge and the placing of a prize crew upon the American steamer Wilhelmina which is at Falmouth with a cargo of foodstuffs consigned to Germany, are taken here today as the answer of the government to the German proposal of compromise.

The next active step is expected to be the establishment of a blockade of the German coast that will prevent any food supplies reaching Germany by water.

The admission made by Admiral Behanke of the German marine department that Germany has not enough food to feed her civilian population since England cut off her supplies, has strengthened the determination of Great Britain to wage a relentless camgaign against Germany. The British government is confident that it will be able to place an embargo on the food supplies which Germany needs.

For the last 24 hours there has been great activity at the admiralty. Winston Spencer Churchill and his assistants spent the greater part of last night there.

No information as to the cause of this activity was given out, but the quiet air of confidence by the admiralty attaches today spoke louder than words. There is a unanimous belief that if the German submarines enter British waters they will receive a great surprise. What the nature of this surprise is cannot be divulged but there is no doubt that England has been prepared for this submarine warfare for months.

Steam trawlers have been enlisted as auxiliary naval vessels through the proffer of rewards. Five thousand dollars is to be given to any of the vessels that sink a German submarine. A similar amount will be paid for information that results in the sinking or capturing of a German warship. Smaller rewards will be paid for other services in behalf of the navy.

With these trawlers on the lookout, the British navy will be equipped with a "mosquito fleet" that is invaluable.

Many applications for additional insurance poured into Lloyds today. They came from owners of merchant vessels who intend to keep their ships in operation.

LATE WAR BULLETINS

Havre, France, Feb. 17.—The British Carrier Delwick was torpedoed by a German submarine Monday night in the English channel off Ettretat. Captain Hunter of the Delwick declared on his arrival that the German craft had fired a torpedo without wrning. The torpedo struck under the water line and the boat went down in 20 minutes. Capt. Hunter ordered his men away in the boats.

On their way toward the French coast the crew saw the submarine three times. A few members of the crew of the Delwick are missing. Twenty-two men were picked up by a French cruiser and brought to Havre and seven others rowed to Sevant.

LL

Paris, Feb. 17.—Official announcement was made by the Minister of Marine this afternoon tht a German submarine sank the French steamer Lille de Ville yesterday off Harfur. The ship was torpedoed while on her way to Dunkirk from Cherbourg. The submarine was the U16.

Berlin, Feb. 17.—German ambassadors and ministers in neutral countries, it was announced here today, have handed to governments to which they are accredited a final warning for neutral shipping to avoid the war zone, as declared and defined in the German admiralty's warning.

New York, Feb. 17—The Oscar II, SScanadvian-American liner which left this port Feb. 4, with 600 passengers, was picked up by a British cruiser and taken to Kirkwall Sunday, according to a cable received by the company officials here today.

The line officials believe the steamer is being held until her cargo can be examined. The ship was overdue and this aroused fears that she was sunk by a mine.

Petrograd, FFeb. 17.—German troops are reported in a dispatch from Warsaw to be evacuating the town of Pietrokow, an important railway center in southwestern Poland, because of an outbreak of disease there. It states tht the outbreak has become an epidemic and that the German troops are being decimated.

NEW YORK PROBE A POSSIBILITY

Governor Wants to See a Few Things Cleared Up In The Big City

By FREDERIC T. CARDOZE

Albany, Feb. 18—Senator George L. Thompson of Niagara Falls, chairman of the legislatice committee which is investigating the public service commissions, may be the important link in the chain of possiblity with reference to the probing of the finances of the city of New York by the legislature.

Members of both the senate and assembly are awaiting with considerable expectancy the report which Senator Thompson will make concerning his findings. This report will be made public about the middle of March.

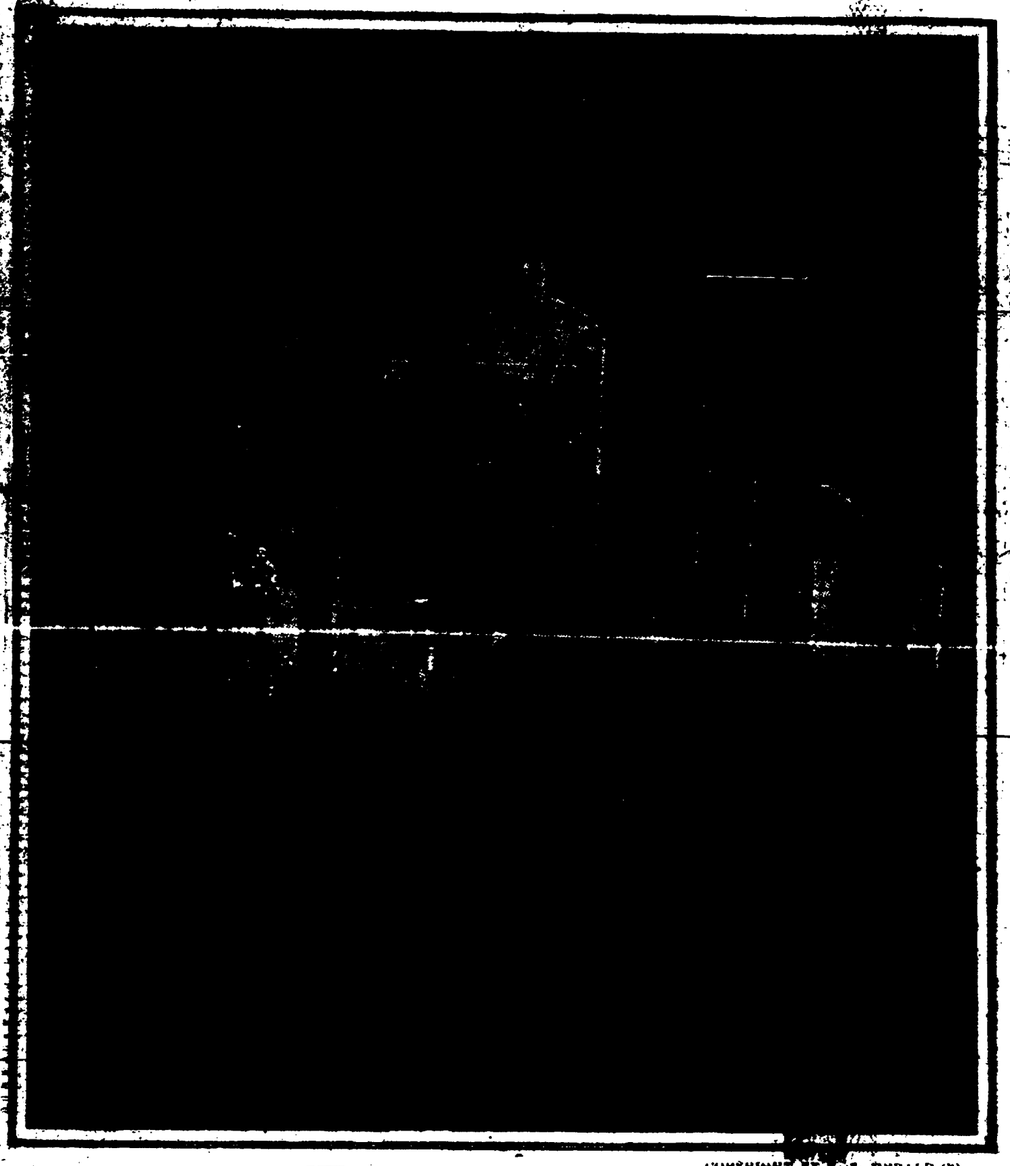
Two resolutions have been introduced providing for a legislative committee to examine the finances of Greater New York with a view of providing remedial legislation. The Republican leaders appear to be disinclined to adopt either at this time. One reason is that Senator Lawson, who introduced one of the resolutions is a first year man and that Senator Bennett, who introduced the other is not accepted as a rock-ribbed Republican. The second reason is that unless there is reasonable possibility of unearthing substantial evidence of mismanagement, the probe should not takep lace.

Where Senator Thompson comes in as the prospect connecting link is that his report may be of such a nature as to showthat subway contracts and other investments and expenditure which have beeh authorized by the public service commission, first district, have been of such a character as to indicate irregularity or loose methods, or worse.

"If your report exploits grave subway contract mismanagment or other conditions which have resulted in extravagance and waste of public monies, how will your committee have accomplished anything definite if its pathfinding is not followed up by an attempt to stop leaks by another investigating committee?" Senator Thompson was asked.

"I do not care to talk for publication nor to say anything about what our committee has discovered," replied Senator Thompson. "If the forthcoming report discloses what you suggest it may, there might be a city probe authorized."

Republican legislators seem to feel that the Democratic party in New York city has operated to its own detriment and that that fact has been established. This being so, they argue, why a probe of the finances of New York city?



Governor Whitman is interested in the probe possibility. Along just what lines his interest lies has as yet not been disclosed. As a New Yorker he is familiar with what has been going on there. His official position as district attorney of New York county put him in touch with the innermost working of the administration of the past five years there. Whether as governor he believes that he should become identified with the much discussed proposition of a probe is to be diselosed at his leisure.

As a matter of fact concurrent resolutions if adopted by both the senate and assembly become operative without executive intervention, as the governor has no power to either approve or veto. Thus, should both houses adopt a resolution to investigate the financial condition in New York city the naming of the members of such committee by the presiding officers of the two houses would start the investigation ball merrily rolling.

HOW ZEPPELINS COMMUNICATE WITH OUTSIDE WORLD.

THE WIRELESS CABIN ON A ZEPPELIN. COPYRIGHT BY N. Y. HERALD CO.

This picture, drawn specially for this newspaper, the New York Herald and the London Sphere, by G. H. Davis, shows the wireless equipment of a Zeppelin. The modern Zeppelin is equipped with a wireless apparatus with a range of 120 miles. The aerial consists of 750 feet of phosphor-bronze wire, which hangs from the airship with a [illegible] and when not in use is wound around the wheel, seen in the illustration. At night, when wireless waves are most efficient, a Zeppelin over England could easily communicate with the wonderful system of wireless stations in Germany.

COLORADO HAS INDIAN UPRISING; FIGHTS OCCUR

Denver, Colo., Feb. 17.—Fifty heavily armed men, led by United States Marshal Mebeker, set out at daybreak to give battle to fifty Piute Indians from the rservation in southwestern Utah, who went upon the war path. The Indians, equipped with plenty of provisions and ammunition, are entrenched in the mountains. A number of whites who attempted to approach the Indians' stronghold to open a parley were driven off and a desperate fight between Marshal Mebeker's posse and the Piutes seemed inevitable. All the women and children are being removed from the district where the uprising occurred.

TRAVIS REPORT FLAYS CONDUCT OF DEPARTMENT

Albany, Feb. 17.—Abuse of civil service rules, unwarranted and enormous increases in appropriations and criticism of the form of the appropriations for the expenses of the State Commissoner of Agriculture finds ample space in the reports of Comptroller Travis following his investigation into the affairs of the State Agricultural Department made public today. It is recommended in the report that $102,000 be cut from the appropriation after the facts have been laid bare that the net increase of $204,453 in the expenditures of 1914 over 1910, $100,436 was unwarranted.

FIRE AT JAMESTOWN

Jamestown, Feb. 17.—The main buildings and dormitories of the Chamberlain Military Institute at Randolph, were destroyed by fire early today. Thirty-five cadets, asleep in the dormitories when the fire broke out, escaped, but many lost their personal effects. The loss was $75,000.

BOMB UNROOFED TENEMENT

New York, Feb. 17.—Another tenement house bomb outrage took place early today when an explosion unroofed the building at 323 East 48th st., badly injuring one tenant and caused twenty families to flee panic stricken into the street.

THIS WEEK WILL SEE END OF FIGHT

Nineteen Democrats Vote Against Ship Purchase Bill; No Republicans Voted For It

Washington, Feb. 17.—The United States Senate today became the final arbiter of the fate of the ship purchase bill, when the measure put through the lower body at 1.24 o'clock this morning by a vote of 215 to 121, was sent over to it. Leaders on both sides declared that the bill either will be awaiting President Wilson's signature by the end of the week or will be laid aside with all hope gone at this session. This prospect seemed to favor the latter, as the Republicans were determined to continue their filibuster.

The method of pressing the House bill in the Senate was under discussion when the hour for convening arrived. The leaders were planning to ask for a conference as the Week's naval mail line bill, which was made part of the House ship bill, has passed the Senate. This move would deprive the upper House of a chance to amend the bill as it then would come before the Senate as conference report not subject to change. Such a course, however, the Democratic leaders recognized, would make it impossible to prevent a Republican filibuster.

In sharp contrast to the strained situation developed in the Senate over this matter, the House made a festival of passage of the bill and had so good a time that Speaker Clark was compelled to suggest that it was "Neither a beer garden nor a vaudeville show." Even the Republican filibuter was not as cindictive as it could have been. Minority Leader Mann demanded only fifteen roll calls when he could have forced 63, and suddenly permitted a vote after the members had prepared to sit through the night. There were many speeches for and against the bill, but the orators did not appear to treat the situation seriously. Members entered the chamber whenevr a quorum call was ordered, but merrily vanished as soon as the roll was completed.

On the finl roll call nineteen Democrats bolted their party and voted against the bill. They were: Bathrick, of Ohio; Borchers, of Illinois; Callaway, of Texas; Dies, of Texas; Donohue, of Pennsylvania; Fitzgerald, of New York; Gerry, of Rhode Island; Gordon, of Ohio; Jones, of Virginia; Kindel, of Colorado; Kitchin, of North Carolina; Morrison, of Indiana; Moss, of Indiana; Page, of North Carolina; Saunders, of Virginia; Slayden, of Texas; Whitacre, of Ohio; White, of Ohio; Witherspoon, of Mississippi.

No Republicans voted for the bill, but five Progessives gave it their support, as follows: Bryan, of Washington; Kelly, of Pennsylvania; Lafferty, of Oregon; Macdonald, of Michigan; Murdock, of Kansas.

Best Get Back Home Trade First

The Philadelphia Public Ledger of February 5 published an interview with Nathan T. Folwell, president of the Manufacturers' Club of Philadelphia, in which Mr. Folwell is quoted as saying:

"Had there been no European war either there would have been a decided reduction in wages or the mills of my firm, as well as those of other manufacturers similarly situated, would undoubtedly have been forced to shut down as a direct consequence of the Tariff reduction put into force by the present Washington administration. But owing to the failure of our English, Belgian, German and Austrian competitors properly to look after their American trade since hostilities began in Europe, we have been able to keep going at near full capacity in our Collingwood mills.

"Our plant is really a miniature Bradford, England. Only we pay double the wages paid at the English worsted center, and operate under the disadvantages of poorer climatic conditions for spinning. Nor do we get any more work out of our employes than our foreign competitors do, for our looms run at practically the same rate of speed as theirs, which quite effectually disposes of the stock argument of American Free Traders that our mill hands are superior to the European toilers in efficiency. They are unquestionably superior in intelligence, but their skill as workers is identical with theskill of the foreign mill hands, because both are under the control of the self-same machinery, which is fixed as to output."

In the same interview Mr. Folwell expressed the belief that the best trade opportunities for American manufacturers are right here in this country. He was not particularly interested in the South American market. "If the Bradford people can pay a 35 per cent. duty and shipping charges in competition with American mills, and still undersell us," he said, "it is hardly reasonable to suppose that we can manufacture and ship our textile goods to South America and have a profit."

There is practical sound sense in this preference for the home market as against world markets. The main thing for American producers to study is how to rescue the American market from the slough of Free-Trade depression. That accomplished thru restored Protection, it will be time enough to figure out how to compete in other markets with the cheap labor production of foreign countries.—American Economist.

Belgium and Poland

Almost side by side in yesterday's news columns appeared a report by the Rockefeller Foundation on conditions in Belgium and Henryk Sienkiewicz's picture of devastated Poland. Both of these countries, completely innocent of those blunders of ambition and politics which made the war possible, have yet been completely sacrificed as battlegrounds and have suffered from the European conflict much more than all the rest of the world put together.

The two descriptions of desolation have, naturally, a great deal in common—trampled harvests, ruined industries, mangled villages, outrage, sorrow, destitution, indescribable human suffering. There is practically nothing to choose between the two in the point of material and physical loss and woe. But when we come come to the thing which counts more than all of these, national self-respect and pride in grief, we find these war-scourged countries as far apart as the mind can conceive.

Belgium suffers unbelievably, but Belgians may hold their heads higher than their conquerors, higher even than their allies, and they may die happy in their martyrdom. They have sacrified everything for an idea.

"What is the position of Poland?" writes the famous novelist. "She had nothing to do with the war, but is conquered and partitioned. She is not one of the belligerent nations, yet a million and a half of her sons are fighting fratricidal battles in armies of three different warring states. Our country has been made the cockpit of Europe and devastated from end to end. Three-quarters of a million of our children are fighting in the Russian army and another three-quarters of a million are bearing the arms of Austria."

Poor Poland, torn apart by her own sons in the interests of her conquerors, suffers for no idea and has no consolation. Her destruction seems the most abysmal of the war's disasters.—The Globe.

"Billy" Sunday

The New York World says "the eagerness of 400 Protestant ministers to get Billy Sunday to come to reform New York is a humiliating confession of their own failure in their profession. If they had been doing their work properly, there would be no need of these doctors of the soul calling upon an advertising quack to come and heal their patients."

This reminds us that the New York Times last Sunday printed an article in which it showed that "Billy" Sunday, when he delivered a Decoration Day oration in Beaver's Falls, Pa., in 1912, stole almost word for word Colonel Ingersoll's Decoration Day oration delivered in New York city in 1882, just 30 years before. The Times printed Colonel Ingersoll's lecture delivered in 1882 and "Billy" Sunday's speech delivered in 1912 in parallel columns showing that Sunday's speech was taken almost word for word from Ingersoll. This, of course, was not exactly honest or ethical, but perhaps you could not expect a baseball player who has turned evangelist to have a very nice conception of Christian ethics. However that may be, we do not see as the taking of Ingersoll's Decoration day oration and palming it off as his own did any particular harm because it created a great impression upon the audience and was so much better than anything that Sunday could have said himself that it is a question if the result was not a good one and probably Sunday thought that the end justified the means.

There is one thing in connection with this incident, however, that has escaped the attention of the Times and that is the fact that after Sunday stole and delivered Ingersoll's lecture, he got it copyrighted as his own. This would look as though Sunday had a commercial side to his nature as well as an emotional side.

We, however, look upon "Billy" Sunday a little differently than a great many. While he resorts to sensational methods, while he has a very crude idea of ethics and while he seems to be actuated quite as much by the desire for money as anything else and while he takes everything in sight and appropriates it to his own use and presents the thoughts of others as his own, yet there is another side to the question.

"Billy" Sunday has animation, emotion and ability. He knows how to appeal to the great mass of people. He knows how to stir their emotions and fire their hearts with enthusiasm and in view of the fact that he is doing this along the line of urging them to lead better lives he is entitled to credit for accomplishing much good even though his methods are not the nicest. There are a great many people who can only be reached by the methods employed by Sunday. There are a great many people in the world who can only be roused to action and to better lives by being frightened with a fear of hell and it is necessary to keep raking the coals over their heads and picturing the horrors of Hades in order to arouse them and stimulate them to be better and do better.

Along the line of frightening people to leave off their old ways of sin temporarily, at least, and walk in a new and better path, Sunday is doing a good work and in his line he has no rival.—Republican, Lyons.

REFORM WORKERS

Reform workers ofttimes in their zeal stir the pot so vigorously that they become unconscious of the unmixable qualities of the ingredients. Qualities of opposite nature, as oil and water, refuse to mix, and were one to stir till the very bottom drops from the kettle they still would refuse to mix.

Within every village or city are to be found the two unmixable quantities of humanity. The one is found in his home enjoying the warmth and cheer of his fireside, or in the comfortably cushioned pew of the church to which he contributes, or at the club or lodge discussing with his comrades the questions of the day.

The other quality seeks one of the few attractive spots open to him where, in his rough coat and unpolished manner, simple tolerance lets him at least look on. Perhaps these spots may be a street corner, sunny and peopled, or a waiting room in the station, or the saloon—just a place to be with people, to rest in warmth and to feel as a part in the world.

Untrained, untutored, uncultured these individuals in their little place in the sun have unbridled their emotions and so the man of the bule coat and the Reformer, too, cries "Move On!"

Move On? Where—to the next corner? "Go home," says the Reformer with emphasis on the word home, and as he carefully enters the portal of his own home he casts over his shoulder a reproachful glance at the retreating figure.

"Home" and the figure under the rough coat—are in all probabilities strangers in the true sence of the word and its meaning. "Home" to these two unmixable quantities of humanity is, indeed, an unexplored region. Perhaps a better, better brighter world could grow were each to know the "home" of the other.

THERE IS NO FAILURE

There should be no such thing as failure. There is a point where some men give up, quit, and lie down. Failure is the end of effort.

War does not end with one battle. Business is not built by one stroke. Failure does not mean final, unless you accept it as the finis. The biggest and the best men in this country have "failed" once, twice, and many of them a dozen times; but they never gave up, and for this reason they never really failed. The point is, don't give up.

You think you have trouble. You feel you are about to fail. Trouble! You don't know the full meaning of the word "trouble."

Suppose you were in the position that your neighbor is, down the street. Go out on the walk and watch the people pass by. See how many you would like to exchange positions with. Most of them have kicked a hat with a brick under it, but they continue to limp along and smile.

Did you ever notice that the tide turns when it reaches its highest point? And it is so with trouble. Just when you feel you can't hang on any longer, this is the time to hang on.—Silent Partner.

A Ship Purchase Bill Needed

The Senate adopted Monday a resolution ordering an inquiry into the interests and influences alleged to be behind the project to purchase merchant ships for governmental use, as well as behind the opposition to that project. A full and free investigation is desirable.

It has been charged that selfish interests are opposing the creation of a government-owned ocean transportation service. Owners of American shipping are fully justified in protesting against a scheme which would put the government into unfair competition with them, since it would be of no particular consequence to the government whether it operated its transportation lines at a profit or a loss. But the relatively small private shipping interest in this country could make no headway against an emergency plan such as the administration claims to be fathering, if there was any real national emergency in sight. The opposition shown to the President's plan is too powerful and too widespread to be due to any special interest. It is based on the fact that the experiment which the President advises is generally recognized to be economically unsound and impracticable and to be highly dangerous so far as our foreign relations are concerned.

It is far more important for Congress to inquire into the influences which are pushing the bill. Apart from the President's obstinacy in sticking to a losing cause and the itch for larger power which afflicts one of his closest advisers, who is destined to be named as a member of the federal Shipping Board, there may be interests behind the bill which have planned to benefit financially from the purchase of interned and non-interned merchantmen. It would be better to get to the bottom of these mysteries before trying to railroad through Congress a measure which is not understood by the country and which no political party has ever approved.—Tribune, New York.

"TOWN HEALTH DAY"

Volney Center to Observe Day on Feb. 19. Dr. Sears to Speak.

Dr. Robert Simpson, health officer of the town of Volney, assisted by the board of health, is planning for a "Town of Health Day," Friday, Feb. 19, at the town hall at Volney Center. Dr. F. W. Sears of Syracuse district, sanitary supervisor of Onondaga, Oswego and Cayuga counties will deliver an address on the prevention of communicable diseases and Dr. Fred M. Meader of the State Department of Health, in charge of the division of communicable diseases, will give an address illustrated with stereopticon views. Exercises will begin promptly at one o'clock, Friday afternoon, Feb. 19. Everybody is cordially invited to attend this health day meeting, especially the teachers and pupils of the several district schools in the town of Volney. The ladies aid of the Bristol church will serve supper at the close of the exercises.

The Star-Spangled Banner

Adapted for British use and respectfully dedicated to the British Admiralty.

Oh, say, can you see by the dawn's early light
What so proudly we spurned at the twilight's last gleaming,
Whose broad stripes and bright stars through the perilous fight
We have always regarded as gauche and ill-seeming;
But the submarine scare and the bombs in the air
Have made us content that our flag is not there.
Oh, say does that star-spangled banner now wave
To insure that no Briton can e'er be a slave?

On the shore dimly see through the mist of the deep,
Where the Kaiser's grim host in dread silence reposes.
"What is that?" he exclaims, "do I wake or I sleep?
What flag now the breeze half conceals, half discloses?"
Now it catches the gleam of the morning's first beam,
And Old Glory reflected now shines on the stream.
" 'Tis the star-spangled banner, intended to wave
O'er the land of the free and the home of the brave."

Oh, thus be it ever when Frenchmen shall stand
Between our loved homes and the loss we might suffer.
Blest with victory and peace by our Allies' firm stand,
And by brave little Belgium, which served as a buffer.
Then conquer we must for the Yankees we trust
To kindly forget we are ever unjust;
And the star-spangled banner we earnestly crave
May enable Britannia to still rule the wave.

Our Borrowed Timers

By Rev. C. L. Peck.

THERE are clubs, a great multitude—clubs galore,
Clubs by the hundred, and then some more.
Of every conceivable nature and name,
Clubs that are obsolete—clubs of great fame.
But a club based on years—some ten and three score,
A "Borrowed Time Club,"—I've not heard of before.
Indeed I am told it is something unique,
That you'll find but one other wherever you seek.
A "club," not a knocker, inflicting a sting,
Tho' it may "make a hit" or "strike" a good thing.
But a bunch of good fellows with juvenile hearts,
Of royal connection and noble good parts,
Like "The Boys" the good Doctor recked "twenty to-night"
And paid such enconiums—witty and bright,
They're twenty indeed—just an even score,
They're as old as their feelings—not a day more.
Not mere "Borrowed Timers"—Good Timers as well,
Their gatherings are jolly, their programs are "swell."
Class not Borrowed Timers as mere "Out-of-Daters,"
Nor dare to define them as poor "Second Raters."
As truly progressive they're up with the times,
Searching out great movements by men of all climes.
They're Timers, and Time is the stuff we all want,
Demanding, expecting, a liberal grant.
And wonderful movements the records would show
Had we only more time for achievement below.
Our good Borrowed Timers propose to improve
The time thus allotted with freedom to move.
But why Borrowed Timers, what curious notion
Applied such a name to these sons of devotion?
Why can't we all borrow, buy, beg or steal
A few added years as a field for our zeal?
Has old Father Time stopped to sharpen his scythe
When approaching the realm of these youngsters blithe?
O'r like Joshua ordered the "sun to stand still,"
To give them a chance to accomplish their will?
The Scriptural limit is three score and ten,
They've completed the roun-up and gone on again,
Borrowed from eternity's great shoreless sea,
And probation extended by special decree,
And the extra that's borrowed they need not repay;
No interest is reckoned for a single day.
Borrowed Time's a misnomer—the notion's all bosh.
'Tis an out and out grant, and the fabric will wash,
And its members apprize the endowment so high,
They're bound to improve as the years multiply.
These fathers a valuable lesson impart,
Bearing fruit in old age and keeping good hearts.
They're happy, God bless them, may blessings increase
'Till they enter the land where Time's office shall cease.

"SANITO" COOKING UTENSILS

are a necessity for housekeepers who wish to excel in domestic science. They are the only American-made cooking ware which absolutely reproduces the high priced, imported German utensils, so universally used abroad. SANITO utensils have an acid proof lining which cannot crack or scale off and retains nothing to taint or discolor the food. When cooked in SANITO the food cooks evenly, retains all its juices and flavors and never scorches or burns. SANITO is a nonconductor of heat and after being heated to the cooking point—212 degrees—it requires but a very small gas flame to complete the cooking process. With proper care SANITO will last a life time.

ALBANY LETTER DAY BY DAY

Cardoze Tells Time' Readers the Doings of Officials and Lawmakers

By FREDERIC T. CARDOZE

Albany, Feb. 17.—Handicapped as the result of the small appropriation made last year by the legislature, the national guard, through its highest officers, will ask the law-makers to set aside $250,000 so that during 1915, there may be ample opportunity for field practice.

In this era of lowering war clouds, both Major General John F. O'Ryan and Adjutant General Stotsbary, believe that the legislature will not again pass by the demands of the citizen soldiery, but will promptly make provision for the appropriation desired. A bill providing for the amount mentioned has been prepared at national guard headquarters and is expected to be introduced this week.

High officers in the national guard call attention to the fact that under the provisions of the State Constitution, the national guard is required to be ready for war and that the legislature are directed to make provisions for such preparation. They hold that without field practice no militia organization can be properly termed prepared.

If the $250,000 as desired is appropriated, it is planned that there shall be field service of ten days' duration for two periods for the First and Second brigades of New York and Brooklyn together with a proper proportion of artillery, cavalry, engineers and sanitary troops. Later the Third and Fourth brigades, up-state organizations, will be sent into the field. In addition, it is planned to open an infantry and medical school at Peakskill for officers.

Last year there was no field or practice service for the guard because no appropriation was made. It is true that $60,000 was finally set abide, but this around was not available until October 14, too late to be of use for 1914.

Field service is regarded by national guard officers as most important for the instruction and finishing of troops, because no such service was possible last year it is far more important that there should be this year, they point out.

Although economy is the watchword this session, national guard officials are determined that the State militia shall not suffer again if they can help it. They maintain that unless adequate funds are raised to maintain the guard as it should be maintained there is little use for its maintenance as an unprepared organization,

In spite of the fact that the Mexican problem faced the Federal government last year, the legislature saw fit to cut down the appropriation asked by Adjutant General Hamilton. This attitude is quite unexplainable to high national guard officers. While fearful that the lawmakers may take a similar position this year, they believe that they can impress them that it will be unwise to again withhold from the citizen soldiers the funds they so badly need for the completion of war knowledge.

State camp and practice marches have always encouraged enlistments. From year to year the rank and file have looked forward to a fortnight in the open. To do away with such training would be to materially curtail enlistments, it is believed.

Although the armories have their use, they cannot provide every practice feature of the life of a soldier. Both officers and men realize this and there will be an organized effort on their part soon to prevail upon the legislators to grant the request of both the major general and the adjutant general that $250,000 be appropriated before the session comes to a conclusion, for the national guard of the State.

CAMERA MAN'S CLOSE SHAVE

Officer Detailed for Hazardous Job Within 20 Yards of Enemy's Lines

Paris, Feb. 17.—The current issue of "L'Illustration," France's leading pictorial weekly, contains a remarkable story and a remarkable photograph of an incident which occurred ten days ago in the famous forest of the Argonne. Both picture and narrative are the work of a French junior officer, who writes:

The General one morning said to me, "I want you to make your way to our first line, and if possible photograph the German trenches twenty yards away. Mind you keep your wits about you, for the enemy shoots the first kepi he sees and the moment he hears a sound!"

Amid a mass of branches I perceived our lads. A lieutenant, warned by telephone, was expecting me. In a pentrating whisper he said, 'Hish! they're only 15 metres off." I soon reached a faggot hedge, and peeping through, with the aid of a field-glass, I could distinguish a heap of fresh soil ahead. It was the German trenches.

"Dont' look too long," said the lieutenant in my ear, "or a bullet will whip that periscope from your hand. What we'd like to know is whether they're 'bad boys' or 'good boys.'"

By "bad boys" he meant the Prussians who filing grenades, bombs, or mineawerfer shells morning, noon, and night; and by "good boys" the Saxons, who are lazier, and leave us in peace for hours at a stretch.

We kept as still as mice all the while, watching intently. Suddenly the lieutenant began to whistle the popular German song,

Drunten im Unterland,
Ei! da ist's so wunderschon.
In the valley below
How glorious the life!

He stopped. We never moved a muscle. Then from the trench opposite came the concluding couplet, whistled in the same key:

Ei da ist's so wunderschon,
Da Mocht' Mich Jager sein!
How glorious the life
With the huntsmen you know!

I could hardly believe my ears. At my side a soldier exclaimed, "Look! there's a German. That's the first we've seen alive since the war began.

"Hold your tongue! Do you want to be bombarded?" This from lieutenant.

"Heavens!" pursued the soldier, whom artillery has made deaf, "there is a couple, one with a green cap and something on it."

With my glass I could easily see two German heads just appearing above their parapet of earth—a sharpshooter and a Bavarian infantryman.

They saw the blue kapi of our imprudent "piou-piou." In genial tones they called out, "Guden Morgen Kamarade." (Good morning, comrade.) Then other heads appeared. I counted five; one belonged to an officer. This seemed to be the psychological moment to get a useful and curious record. So I handed the lieutenant the camera and he held it above the trench and cried out, "Photographir-en?"

"Ia, Ia," called back the Germans, whose round faces broke into a broad smile.

I quickly scaled our trench and, getting possession of the kodak, I stretched myself flat on the loose soil and focussed the German trench. "Click," and with a salute to the enemy I dropped back into the trench just as a cherry, "Dank" came across the intervening space.

They seemed quite happy. One of them went so far as to throw us a packet of cigarettes. A bough stopped it, and instantly a German came out of his trench apparently with the object of picking it up and handing it to us. But the lieutenant, with a grim smile, pointed a revolver at him; the Teuton returned, and the cigarettes stayed where they were.

COST PER PUPILS IN 10 N. Y. CITIES

Fulton Ranks Low In Comparison to 51 of State's Cities

The annual report just issued by the State Education Department shows that the annual cost per pupil based on average daily attendance to the City of Fulton was $29.60. This was the fifth lowest in the 51 cities of the State.

The average annual cost per pupil in cities was.....$58.17
The average annual cost per pupilin towns was..... 41.07
The average annual cost per pupil in the State was..... 53.43

Several features, including average daily attendance per teacher, total enrollment per teacher, etc., have much to do in getting the cost per pupil to a city or town.

This is just estimate of the actual conditions as may be seen from the following statistics that the State Education reports for the five lowest and the five highest are given.

Number of children in city over 5 and under 18 years old to each qualified teacher (lowest)—Cortland, 46; Oswego, 64; Binghamton, 36; Ogdensburg, 57; Fulton, 34.

Whole number of children attending school any portion of the year for each qualified teacher—lowest (read cities in order of preceding paragrph) 35, 37; 33; 34; 39.

Average daily attendance per teacher—lowest (cities in order of first paragraph) 29; 29; 27; 28; 32.

Percentage of daily attendance based on total enrollment—lowest (read cities in order of first paragraph) 83.3; 78.6; 82.4; 81; 82.2.

Cost per pupil based on average daily attendance, lowest (read cities in order of first paragraph) 028.20; 028.30; 028.69; $29.37; $29.60.

Number of children in city over 5 and under 18 years old to each qualified teacher: New Rochelle, 39; Pough keepsie, 44; Ithaca, 36; Troy, 46; Rome, 48.

Whole number of children attending school any portion of the year for each qualified teacher (read cities appearing in preceding paragraph) 32; 41; 35; 30; 36.

Average daily attendance per teacher (read cities appearing in first paragraph) 26; 33; 38; 23; 28.

Percentage of daily attendance based on total enrollment (read cities appearing in first paragraph) 80.3; 74.4; 78.1; 77.3; 76.8.

Cost per pupil based on average daily attendance (read cities appearing in first paragraph) $84.55; $81.55; $73.85; $66.44; $62.64.

For the first time since Fulton became a city, all pupils are this term attending school on full time. Last year 328 pupils, owing to the crowded conditions, could attend school only half a day. The favorable conditions for housing school children this term comes from the parochial school taking 147 pupils; the completion of the new Oak st. and Erie st. buildings; and the Board of Education retaining four school rooms in the Falley Seminary building.

There are present 1987 pupils attending the public schools as follows:

High School	339
Phillips St. School	363
Erie St. School	299
State St. School	298
Fourth St. School	267
Oak St. School	265
Academy St. School	116
Walradt St. School	40
Total	1987

29 ELIGIBLES FOR GRADUATION

Principal Wilcox Announces Names of Students Who May Graduate In June

The following are the members of the high school senior class whose credentials and class standings have warranted Principal Wilcox to recommend for graduation on June next:

Evadene Austin, Margaret Clark, Eliza Hubbard, Rose King, Isabel Merriam, Florence Moody, Eryma Paige, Lola Palmer, Amelia Rolfe, Lillian Simons, Jessie Wilcox, Muriel Winters, Harold Caffrey, Leland Carner, Mathew Frawley, Harold Gillespie, Dempster Hill, Earl Hopkins, Ramon Lewis, Harry Lynch, Frederick Martin, Marshal Penfield, Bernard Reswick, Leland Root, Albert Sanford, Howard Shaff, Andrew Sharp, Edward Sullivan, Harold Thompson.

There are several more who may meet the requirements and be admitted to membership on May 3rd under the following conditions:

1. Providing they are taking subjects which will earn a Regents' diploma at the June examinations.

2. Providing their class standing this term in each subject necessary to secure a Rengents' diploma is, on April 30, 75 per cent. or more.

The earning of a Rengents' diploma is considered a minimum qualification for graduation from the high school. The Classical, Scientific, Normal and Commercial Courses printed in the School Manual each more than meets the requirements for a Regents' diploma. The school officials feel that a well balanced course of study must be taken by all high school students who wish to be graduated and that the minimum qualifications will be met at the June examinations.

"TIME LOCK 776"

Regular Melodrama in Six Parts With Joe Welch in Leading Role.

To those who like the real thing in melodrama we can heartily recommend this offering "Time Lock 776" made by the Photo Drama Company. This reviewer enjoyed all of its six reels and didn't find a dry inch in it; but it is all melodrama. The thing he enjoyed in it is the types; they are delightful. The good human acting furnishes many a moment enjoyable to both mind and heart.

Hal Reid, the author of "Human Hearts" wrote and directed it. Joe Welch plays the big, human heart character, a kindly watchmaker, most delightfully. The daughter of the watchmaker is a winsome heroine played by Dora Dean. The hero is Edward Carewe and he is working as a clerk for a broker, David Wall, the heavy villian. Behind the broker is the scheming woman his accomplice, played by Mae Georgina. On the other side of the story is a band of counterfeiters with the old hag, Adella Barker, a fence; the tough Fred McKaye and the chief, Edward Sullivan, an Italian. Strung through the tale are other fine characters including one dandy tough cop, Peter Burns, and a poor old woman starving with her two children whom the pawnbroker helps, a rich uncle of the two children, Hal Reid, and the secret service man, John Starkey, etc.

The story making good use of all these characters had to be fairly elaborate. It has something doing all the time. Very truly that something is often twent, thirt kind; is intended to be just that, knowing that there were many who like it now and then. It is a picture that will please old and young, even with the critical we believe that nearly every one likes to be uncritical at times. It ought to be acceptable.

It is a picture that will amuse the tired business man, will feed the romantic, and stir the simple hearted spectator. The photography and staging are excellent. At The Quirk Thursday, Feb. 18.

BOARD DISCUSS SPRINKLING TAX

Schools May Not Be Taxed For Street Sprinkling; School Entertainments Approved

The Board of Education met last night at the High school building. The members present were: President L. C. Foster, Dr. Gladman, A. T. Jennings, J. R. Sullivan and D. C. Case. The minutes from the last meeting were read and approved.

A list of the names of twenty-nine pupils who have qualified to take examinations for Regents' diplomas was read by President Foster and recommended by Supt. Fairgrieve. Dr. Gladman further recommended that any pupils showing improvement in work between now and the time set for examinations, May 3, that Supt. Fairgrieve add the names of such pupils qualified for graduation to this list without further discussion from the Board.

The question of insurance on the school buildings was again taken up at last night's meeting and it was shown that an average of $21,000 on building and $1,0000 on furniture in each school is now being carried, making a total of $133,500 on all, and at a cost to the city of $440 per annum. The most of these policies expire on or about March 15, 1915. All policies are about equally divided between the agencies in this city.

The question of the sprinkling tax was taken up. Attorney Jennings had studied the question and read from certain statues that school property is exempt from all taxation inasmuch as the schools are city property the city cannot impose a tax for sprinkling or other purposes upon such property as the city cannot tax itself.

Attorney Jennings further informed the board that in St. Louis, Mo., a case of this kind was tried out in the courts and the city won out, but in other cities where like cases were tried the schools won out on the plea that the schools are city property and therefore cannot be taxed by the city.

A motion was made and carried to have the taxation bill placed on the table until the city attorney could be consulted regarding the advisability of paying a city tax on city property.

At the last meeting of the board it was recommended that a bill amounting to $75.35 be paid to the sidewalk improvement fund, which was done. The city chamberlaine returned a check to the board for this amount stating this bill should be paid from the sidewalk improvement fund. On motion of Mr. Case the check was returned with appreciation.

The question of the schools giving a public entertainment was next taken up and fully discussed. Such entertainments it was generally conceded are of benefit for the stimulating of a school spirit, both through the public in general and the pupils also. Athletic, too came in for the approval of the board, thereby demonstrating the fact that a memory of boyhood days had not been consigned to the dim past.

President Foster exhibited a loose leaf book, a gift of the government, which describes the benefits of proper food, dealing with proportion, composition and general value.

Several small bills totaling $195.00 were ordered paid.

The board adjoruned until March 2.

HOME GARDENS ARE POPULAR

Magazine Editor Explains Culture of Flower; Mistakes In Growing

Syracuse, Feb. 17.—The aesthetics of amateur gardening in America has developed rapidly in the last decade, according to Leonard Barron, editor of The Garden Magazine, who Tuesday night addressed members of the Syracuse Rose Society at the Onondaga.

Mr. Barron received his technical education in the Royal Horticultural Gardens in London. He has been in this country twenty years as editor of agricultural and horticultural magazines, and is regarded as an authority.

"There is a steady growth of popular interest in developing and beautifying side yards and rear gardens of residences in this country," Mr. Barron said yesterday afternoon. "The general public has become acutely critical as to stock for flower beds and more pretentious gardens, approaching in this regard the traditional exactness of their English cousins.

Show More Knowledge

"Formerly Americans bought shrubs and flowers by the dozen without discrimination as to the character of the location in which they were to be placed or with any comprehensive aesthetical plan in view. This is no longer so. Orders to horticulturists are accompanied by the names of the plants and shrubs desired, showing a general knowledge of the subject. A willingness to pay high prices for good stock is also manifest."

"What America Needs in Roses" was the topic of Mr. Barron's address before the Rose Society. In the audience were many prominent residents of the city who are interested in flower culture.

"In rose culture," Mr. Barron said, "America has made a vital mistake. It has tried to adapt the roses of England and France, grown there in small areas, to the entire country, a climatic impossibility. In the United States there are many radically different climates, and roses which thrive in one section will not grow in another.

"The climate and soil of the Northwestern territory are the most ideal in the world for rose culture. Portland, Ore., is known as the 'Rose City.' In California conditions are especially favorable to the cultivation of tender varieties.

Poor Climatic Conditions

"There is a peculiar situation in the Northeastern states, including New York, in that it includes the greatest number of lovers of roses with the worst possible climatic conditions in which to grow these flowers."

"Considerable work has been done in utilizing and developing the hybrid climbers, a product of Western China, in this section of the country," the speaker continued. "All one has to do is to set out the plant and it grows.

"There are other varieties of roses from China, hardly in character, which will stand the rigorous weather conditions of extreme heat and cold, characteristic of New York state."

President Mills explained further plans for the University rose garden and announced that several donations of plants for the fifty-four beds contemplated had been received. Among the donors are the Syracuse Botonical Club, bed of twenty-five; Robert Pyle of West Grove, Pa., one of the judges at the rose show last June, bed of twenty-five varieties, and Hamlet Worker of Camillus, bed of twenty-five Lady Hillington.

Reports showed that the last year was the most successful in the history of the society.

BOWLING NOTES

The mail carriers were defeated last night by the bartenders, score 2254 to 2035. Murphy, of the bartenders, scored the high single game. He bowled 198. David Welsh, of the bartenders, scored the high three-game total of 504.

BOWLERS DINED

There was mirth and goodfellowship at last night's dinner, held at Hotel Reynolds, West Broadway, and then there was some business transacted, for it was resolved to reorganize the city bowling league. A new schedule will be arranged and some evening next week the first game will be played.

During the jolly moments, a pair of handcuffs was slipped over the wrists of Mr. O'Brien, who declined to stand for the insult, and he promptly managed to free his extremities without the use of a key.

Manager Stauring of the Onyx alleys was toastmaster. Responses to toasts were made by Sealer of Weights and Measures H. M. O'Brien and "Effie" Brown of the West Side bowling team.

POLICE COURT

The criminal action case that was to come up in court this morning which involved Dan York, defendant, and Helen Monta, plaintiff, for violation of Section 720 of the penal code, has been postponed until March 2d.

The case will be tried before Judge Wilson in city court.

Attorney James R. Somers appears for the defendant and Attorney John F. Cullen for the plaintiff.

A criminal action to recover $250 for board, room and rent, from Thos. Jasack, a Pole, has been instituted by Paul Sajdyra: Both are Polish residents of the West Side, and the case is to be tried in city court tomorrow before Judge Wilson.

Attorney R. J. Pendergast appears for the defendant and Attorney J. F. Cullen for the plaintiff.

MASONIC FUNERAL

The funeral services for the late J. H. Alkenbrach will be held from the family home, 207 Seneca st., tomorrow afternoon at 2.30 o'clock.

Hiram Lodge, F. and A. M., will have charge of the funeral. Elks lodge will also attend in a body, and the Rev. George Stockwell will officiate. Interment will be made at Mt. Adnah.

PUBLIC CONTROL FOR TREES

Preservation of Trees Planned in Same Manner as Any Street Improvement

The New York State College of Forestry at Syracuse university is urging the municipalities of the State to take up public control of street tree planting and preservation in the same manner as public control is exercised over other street improvments. During the past year the college has made investigation of the shade trees in many cities and towns of the State including New York city, Syracuse, Binghamton, Amsterdam, Mount Vernon, Newburgh and Oean, It has been found that thousands of shade trees are dying along the streets of the cities due to past mistake in selection of varieties and in spacing the trees at time of planting which has forced the trees to grow with weakened vitality, inviting decay by tree diseases and b ythe attacks of insect pests. There is a great need for aystematic work in planting trees to replace those that have failed to fill in the many unplanted areas along city streets. It has been estimated that within the cities of the State there are 20,000 miles of streets capable of sustaining a growth of 5,000,000 shade trees which can be made worth $100,000,000 in increased property value.

Recent investigations in Broome, Chenango and Otsego counties by the New York State College of Forestry at Syracuse university show that the towns and villages in these counties have an opportunity to improve the streets and roadways by planting good varieties of shade trees to replace those that have failed to grow and to fill in the unplanted spaces of the streets and highways. The number of trees of really undesirable sorts that are being planted is surprising. The Carolina poplar and soft maple have been quite generally planted. Both of these trees are quick growing which probably is the only reason why these have been planted. However, these trees should be rarely planted and only as temporary trees between other more permanent varieties such as elm, Norway maple and red and pin oaks. In order to maintain a growth of desirable shade trees in the cities and towns much care at the time of planting should be exercised in the choice of a good variety, a location that will allow plenty of room for uniform development and a thorough preparation of soil in which the trees may make a luxuriant growth.

"IT WAS JUST RIGHT"

Searchers of diversion from worldly cares found sufficient quantity and quality in the really high-class vaudeville and photo features as presented at The Quirk yesterday. Boothe and Boothe, in a little of everything, are there and deliver the goods just right; Sonia is rightfully styled the best lady violinist in vaudeville; Major Wright's Dancing Bugs present an out of the ordinary act; Mills and Moulton, in their travesty act, are one round of laughter, and the Three Romans are a fitting climax to the bill with a most beautiful and noved gymnastic act. The two feature pictures, "The Tell Tale Hand," an Essanay featuring G. M. Anderson, and the Lubin, "The Spy's Fate," are all that could be desired.

YOUNG FOLKS' CORNER

The Weathercocks.

Any number of players may take part in this game, which is really good fun.

The four corners of the room are named after the four points of the compass, north being diagonal to south and east diagonal to west.

One of the players is called the wind; the rest are weathercocks. The latter should stand in a line in the center of the room. When the wind points to one corner, calling out the name of that cardinal point, the weathercocks must immediately face the opposite point. Thus if the wind says south they face north, and so on. If he should name a point they are already facing they must remain perfectly still.

When the wind cries "Variable!" the weathercocks must raise themselves to their toes and sway back and forth until the name of one of the cardinal points is again called, when, as before, they turn to the opposite point.

Whenever the wind calls "Storm!" or "Tempest!" each vane must whirl entirely around three times. Any player failing to obey any one of these directions, which are more confusing than they sound, must forfeit some article, such as handkerchief, ribbon or trinket, to be redeemed by a humorous "stunt" after the game is over.

Naval Arithmetic.

Example: What number becomes even by subtracting one? Answer—8-even.

1. What number by adding one becomes sound?
2. What number by adding one becomes isolated?
3. What number by inserting one becomes fine meal?
4. What number by subtracting one becomes a vegetable growth?
5. What number by subtracting one becomes a preposition?
6. What number by subtracting one becomes an exclamation of contempt?
7. What number by subtracting one becomes a costly material?

Answers—1. one-tone; 2. one-lone; 3. four-flour; 4. three-tree; 5. two-to; 6. five-fie; 7. four-fur.

Big Boy Scout Camp.

A camp on the Desplaines river not far from Chicago for boy scouts is in development. A rustic building, a deep woods, and fifteen acres of land to scout over are included in the plans. The camp is expected to be ready in the early spring, according to D. W. Pollard, the executive secretary. The camp will be near the game farm, and a director will be in charge all the time. The purpose is to take 500 boys at week ends to show them what the country is like. They will cook their own food. Then they will be taught to work. Gardens will be allotted to the boys and an agriculturist will give them instruction and practice in intensive farming. Naturalists will give field lectures on birds and trees.

Facts About Rivers.

The Tiber is only 230 miles long.

The Zambezi, in South Africa, is 1,800 miles in length.

Slow rivers flow at the rate of three to seven miles an hour.

Twelve creeks in the United States bear the name of the Rhine.

Every ancient city of note was located on or near the sea or a river.

For over 1,200 miles the Nile does not receive a single tributary stream.

The Ganges is 1,570 miles long and drains an area of 750,000 square miles.

The Mississippi and its tributaries drain an area of 2,000,000 square miles.

The river Jordan has its origin in one of the largest springs in the world.

Smallest Boy Scout.

The smallest boy scout in the world lives at Blue Springs, Mo., just a little way from Kansas City. His name is Arthur Portwood. He is exactly twenty-nine inches high and weighs thirty five pounds. Arthur is fourteen years old and in the sixth grade in school. He is the Tiny Tim of the Blue Springs boy scouts and goes with them on all their hikes. "Course, sometimes they carry me," he explained gravely, "my legs are so short I can't keep up with them when they go fast; but they always take me with them, and I attend every meeting."—Kansas City Star.

Numerical Puzzle.

I am formed of nine letters and am called a prince. In order to acquaint myself personally with my subjects and with their real needs I often take long journeys about my country, accompanied only by my bodyguard, which I call "the faithful 3, 4, 5." Whenever I am weary they make use of my 1, 2, 3 and prepare for me my 6, 9, 7, which I drink in my 3, 4, 5, 6. What am I?

Answer.—Potentate. Words—ten, pot, tea, tent.

When Mother Cooks.

Whenever I am out at play
And smell that goody smell
That mother makes on cookin' day,
I don't put ball or gun away—
I just drop things and yell!

I rush right to the kitchen door
To pinch and taste and look;
I do not care about the score
Or tops or marbles any more
When mother's goin' to cook!

Perhaps it's bread to send to town,
Or maybe pies to bake,
Or doughnuts bobbin' up and down
In meltin' lard till they are brown,
Or even raisin cake.

When mother says, "My little man,
You'll find in yonder nook
A piece of dough and patty pan,
Just make yourself one—if you can!"
You ought to see ME cook!

—New York Press.

ARGUE AGAINST BIBLE READINGS

One Spokesman Claims Measure Violates Section of State Constitution

Albany, Feb. 17.—Favorable action on the Tallet bill intended to provide for the reading of ten verses from a Bible in every public school in the state at the opening of each school day was taken yesterday by the Assembly Education Committee by a vote of nine to two.

The bill as will be reported would provide for reading from "the Holy Bible," and it was pointed out this would make permissable reading from the Duoay Bible, the St. James version, or the Old or New Testament, thus covering many denominations.

The question of the constitutionality of the measure was raised by several of its opponents, among them being Phillip H. Donnelly of Rochester, representing the State Federation of German Catholic Societies. He said the bill is a plain violation of a section of the state constitution.

"The section," he said, "prohibits the use of the state's property or money for the maintenance of any school in which any denominational tenet is taught and the Court of Appeals has held that that covers teaching in the public schools of a sectarian influence. I claim that the reading of the Bible will have sectarian influence. Report the bill out, amended in any way that you want, and we will bring a test case in the courts of the state that will declare the law unconstitutional."

Among others who spoke against the bill were Assemblymen Alfred E. Smith, Joseph Steinberg, Simon L. Adler and Sidney Scharlin and Michael Schaap, who was Progressive leader in the Assembly last year.

They argued that the bill was un-American and unpatriotic in that it conflicts with the separation of the church and state.

Senator William P. Greiner, who has a similar bill in the Senate; Senator S. A. Jones and several Protestant ministers spoke for the bill. Rev. C. W. Leitzell of Albany asserted that crime is on the increase in this state because more attention is paid in the public schools to intellectual than moral training.

Assemblyman Smith in voicing his opposition suggested that if the committee deemed such a bill desirable it should provide for a common prayer for children of all faiths.

At the Front With the Prussian Army

BY GRANVILLE FORTESCUE

Sochaczef, Feb. 16.—Sochaczef is the skeleton of a town. The rafters and wreckage of its houses stick up from the ground like carrion-picked carcase in the desert. A month has passed since the Germans were stopped at the Bzura, and during that time Sochaszef has been incessantly under fire. When I was first here the town had suffered only from the enemy's field artillery; now it has been battered beyond all recognition by the German siege guns.

With Sochaczef as your center, taking a mile radius, measure north along the Bzura to the east, and then to the south on the same river, and you will have a sigment pockmarked with shell holes—alone 2 feet excavations, made by small shells, but enormous pits that mark where the 12-inch projectiles of the great cannon have exploded. One of these excavations was directly in the center of a road about 1,000 yards east of Sochaczef. My companion, Mr. Berson, described it as "big enough to bury an elephant in." This is hardly an exaggeration for I took a photograph of another such hole, with two officers standing one above the other, and yet not reaching its rim.

The town shows the frightful ravages produced by these giant shells. Houses have literally been disintegrated when these cones of explosives have touched them. A whole block of buildings have smashed into the street in an indistinguishable pile of rubble. One house stands with its front torn off, and the kitchen and the bedroom above it exposed to view, showing the pitiable disarray of the household goods. Not a soul treads the silent streets; the fear-stricken populace long ago have fled.

My friends, the Siberian Fusiliers, have been relieved and their places taken by another regiment. With characteristic Russian hospitality, Major Cokolowski invited me to the commodious cavern that serves as his quarters. Going underground from the bright sunlight, I could not help thinking that the modern soldier had developed the characteristics of the mole. He lives underground, and displays the greatest activity at night. By the dim rays of a single candle, I make out a table covered with the out line of the orders for the day. The adjutant sits before it, and the routine of the regiment goes on underground exactly as if they were living normal existence in barracks.

After a short visit, I went with two Russian officers to the observation stations. This was in the garret of a half-wrecked brick building, overlooking a bridge across the Bzura. The river looked fresh and blue in the sunlight; the snow had disappeared, and the ground before the German positions was green with winter wheat.

The enemy's trenches are hardly 500 yards distant. A line of raw earth marks their position. At the back of their trenches, near a wood are the artillery positions, and beyond these, some white buildings which the Russian officers tell me are hangars. Six aeroplanes are housed there. In addition to bombs, it is said that they are fitted with specially constructed one-pounders.

The Germans showed little sign of life along the front and this seemed a favorable moment for entering the trenches. There are elaborately constructed saps that lead to a position on the bank of the Bzura, and there is an order which says that officers passing to and from the front line should use this approach. But there is a short cut, and as traversing it is spiced with danger small parties always take this route. It is an open stretch of about fifty yards, commanded by the German sharpshooters' trench.

The game is to run that fifty yards and not get hit. The adjutant went first. He was halfway across, when three bullets plastered themselves against the bricks above his head. My turn was second. I knew the game, as I had practiced it from the sharpshooter's point of view myself. I knew the whole squad would be ready to welcome me, so I started out to beat the fifty yard record. I had time to count eight twanging shots before I was safe beside the adjutant. I felt like a clay deer in a shooting gallery under cover.

I turned to enjoy watching the others making their dash. The way into the trenches leads through a cemetery, a grim road enough for men whose profession is killing.

The east bank of the Bzura rise thirty feet from the river. Along this crest the trenches are constructed; they are not elaborately built, but have plenty of head cover. The men sleep most of the day, leaving only a guard to watch the enemy's movements. Rifles always lie in the loopholes, and every few yards a shelf is dug in the wall of earth for a box of extra ammunition.

It is not the enemy's attack, but the weather, which most affects the spirits of the men. A week of alternate snow and rain is enough to discourage men comfortably housed above ground, to say nothing of soldiers who have spend days and nights in damp dug-outs. Today's bright sunshine has started the Russian soldiers singing.

We stopped at the company officers' quarters for lunch in a comfortable cavern. Captain Melinkof welcomed us to what he called his two-roomed subterranean flat with all modern conveniences. The door, taken from a house in Sochaczef, divided the kitchen from office living and sleeping room. A stove was crackling in one corner. A coffee pot was put on to boil as we entered. Two iron beds, a table, and two stools complete the furniture. The officers were delighted with our visit. They complained most of the monotony of the life. It is hard to conceive a position subject to constant night attack and always suffering more or less from shell fire as being monotonous, but it was just the sameness of these incidents that annoyed the officers.

The meal was served with cheerful informality. I have only met in the American army. Coffee, black bread, thin slices of bacon and fat, with white bread, as a delicacy, is the lunch ration. While we ate, the oerie buzz of the field telephone sounded. "Is there any chance on your front?" was the question that came over the wire.

"All quiet here," was the answer, after one of the officers had taken a hasty survey; but he had hardly replied when a German battery opened. Its target was a group of Russian guns well in the rear.

Durin gthe rest of the meal an officer kept count of the shells that whistled overhead—forty-three in the course of an hour, and no damage. The trench cat purred against my ankles, begging her share of lunch. Sometimes our voice would be drowned by the curious blast which a shot fired from the trenches make. The pickets at the loopholes let go at anything that shows above the enemy's trenches.

The whirr of the aeroplane sounded overhead, and we came out to see a Russian flier start on a reconnaissance over the German lines. Suddenly four white balls of smoke appeared in the sky, below him, but he never swerved from his course.

THE VALUE OF BALL PLAYERS

By Frank G. Menke

New York, Feb. 17th.—There's a heated debate going on just now in baseball circles over this subject:

"Is a married ball player of more value to a club than a bachelor ball player?"

One faction—the wedded faction—asserts loudly that the wedded gent is more valuable to the club, while another faction—the unwedded gents— take the opposite viewpoint. It looks like a deadlock.

The wedded fellow says that after a ball player gets married he quits frivoling and that the less frivoling the better it is for the ball club as a whole. That faction asserts that after a ball player gets married he becomes steadier in his habits; he doesn't stay out all night, or even half the night. He realizes that he has a family responsibilities and that he must keep working so as to hold his job and thus keep the wolf from the doorstep.

Ollie O'Mara, who shortstops for the Brooklyn Dodgers, and who is spokesman for the bachelor gang, has this to say:

"As soon as a guy gets married he begins to go back. He loses his pep and he loses his nerve. He no longer takes the chance that he did in the past. He doesn't try the long shots on bases that he did before he got hooked up.

"A married fellow detracts from team spirit instead of getting around with the boys in the evening, he ducks off into some corner and writes a letter to his wife. Then he sneaks off for bed. The married fellow won't get into a card game unless the limit is about ten blue chips for a penny.

"A married ball player doesn't sass an umpire as an umpire sometimes needs to be sassed. Why? Oh because the married fellow fears a fine and a later accounting to wifey for the shyness in the pay envelope.

"The unmarried ball player plays baseball all the time—on the field, on the Pullmans and in the hotel lobbies. As soon as fellow gets married he plays the game only on the ball field. At all other times he plays the love game. And baseball and love don't mix."

Seems to us as if Ollie's words are going to be used against him someday. Ollie is a good looking young fellow of the heroic type of athletic, he's a Beau Brummel dresser and he's made a perfectly tre-ee-mondous hit with the girlie fans in Brooklyn, N. Y.

The Dodger home attendance perked up wonderfully last spring while Ollie was cavorting on the green and quite a bulky portion of the increased patronage came from the shy, sweet maidens that bloom in Brooklyn. Every time Ollie ambled to the plate he was greeted with lady-like plaudits and whenever he pulled a sizzling play around shortfield he got a round of applause from feminine throats.

One day Ollie went out and busted his leg and was carried off to a hospital. From that day on the feminine attendance at the Dodgers' Park showed a decided falling off; but the visitors' lists at the hospital where Ollie was confined, grew to astonishing proportions.

So, you see, Ollie had better be careful about how he spools matrimony because someday———.

HOT LINERS

By Frank G. Menke

While travelling in the land of dreams I met a bearded scout,
Who seemed to have no end of dope which he was handing out.
I sidled up beside the chap and whispered in his ear:
"Do you suppose that Jack and Jess will hold their fight this year?"
The bearded scout looked very wise, then slowly winked one eye,
He tapped one foot upon the ground and nodded to the sky.
He drew me off into a nook and whispered soft and low:
"The lads may meet and punch a bit, but as for fighting—NO."

Fake Interviews:

"I have a warm spot in my heart for all umpires."—John McGraw.

"I love the umpires."—Heine the Zim.

If Jack Johnson hopes to get into Mexico via the aerial route a Zeppelin will be necessary, if reports as to his present weight are true.

Jess Willard is making noble efforts to develop speed. Does he expect to do an extra amount of sprinting?

Folks who call football a rough game may read this:

"Hugh Blacklock, one of the football stars of Michigan agricultural college, has quit playing hockey. He says the game is too rough."—Detroit News.

It's all over for Jess Willard. The famous jinxer—James J. Corbett—has picked Jess to beat Jack Johnson.

A sport page item says: "Officials of the amateur athletic union have made a ruling that women's swimmers, competing in aquatic contests must wear more modest suits.

She wore the sweetest bathing suit,
The color scheme was pink.
It made the Johnnies strain their eyes,
It made the women blink.
(The color scheme was pink, we said)
The lines were very bold.
And now the maid who wore the suit
Has got an awful cold.

Clark Griffiths, manager of the Senators, is recovering gradually from the shock he received when Howard Ehmke, recently graduated from the Los Angeles club, asked for a $6,000 per year contract.

No, Mr. Ehmke, didn't get the contract, not yet.

About Sports Generally

By Frank G. Menke

New York, Feb. 16.—And now that the Jack Johnson-Jess Willard affair seems fairly certain of being staged, as per schedule, we venture forth with his prediction:

There are a number of reasons why we pick Johnson, but the most important one is that he comes of the negro race—of a race that can grow old in years and yet retain its endurance; of a race that can indulge in wild dissipation and not lose much of its physical power.

Those who believe Willard has a fair chance for victory come to such a belief not because they think Willard is a great fighter. They know he isn't a wonder, but they think that the negro champion has "gone back" so far that any ordinary fighter can beat him. They think that added years and an intemperate life have reduced the once-time king of the pugilistic world to a point where he will become easy prey for any type of ring foe.

Those who figure thusly figure wrongly, in our opinion. Johnson is 36 years old. There is no denying that, nor is there any denying the fact that he has dissiapated. The extent of his dissipation is an open question, but those who are close to Johnson say that the reports of his swimming in champagne and doing like stunts are gross exaggerations. But in our opinion the added years and the dissipation, no matter how wild it has been, have not reduced Johnson to the point where he will not be able to hand Willard, the white giant, a beautiful lamming.

Johnson was 36 years old when he fought Frank Moran in Paris last June. At the time, many figured that Johnson had "gone back" so far that Moran had a chance against him. What happened?

Johnson, the "physical wreck" simply toyed with Moran during those 20 rounds. He could have knocked out Moran in any round that he chose, but he elected that the white man should stay the limit. Moran did not furnish Johnson a battle. The negro didn't have to extend himself, yet several times during those 20 rounds he cut loose. Those who were at the ringside say that the old Johnson speed, the old Johnson endurance and the old Johnson punch are still there.

Johnson, 36 years old, and reported as a physical wreck, came out of that scrap with hardly a mark on him. He was as fresh and as cool as when he entered the ring. On the other hand, Moran, who is nine years younger than Johnson and who was touted as being physically perfect, was near a point of collapse, when the last gong sounded.

But you needn't stop with Johnson in putting to the test our theory that a negro can stand more physical mistreatment than a white man. The records of Sam Langford and Joe Jeanette, the other two negro heavyweights, will bear us out. Go back further into ring history and you will find that the negroes who mixed in the fight game seemed just as able to withstand the ravages of age and physical excesses.

Langford has been fighting almost constantly for 13 years—and living a free and easy life during all those years. Langford rarely trains for his battles. For 13 years he has been living the careless kind of life that probably would send a white fighter to his grave in three or four years, yet today that same Sam Langford is able to send the best white fighter in the world to the pugilistic scrap heap.

Langford is a fighter—not a pugilistic loafer. During 1914, after 12 years in the ring game, he mingled in 17 ring battles—an average of one scrap in every three weeks. The only reason he didn't fight oftener was because he couldn't get any more matches.

Joe Jeanette, the other ebony hued heavyweight, is 34 years old—2 years younger than Johnson. He horned into the fighting game back in 1904 and has been at it ever since, fighting every time a match was offered and not stopping to quibble about terms.

Jeanette fought 16 battles in 1911, twenty-two in 1912, thirteen in 1913 and 14 in 1914—an average of about one battle in every three weeks over a four year stretch—a record that no white fighter of the past or present can equal.

And so in face of that the negro fighters have done—and are doing—in spite of their added years and careless living, it seems to us that it is a bit unsafe to bet on Willard if you are banking on his meeting a physical wreck in the person of Jack Johnson.

OSWEGO TOWN BOARD MUST CALL FOR ELECTION

Minetto, Feb. 17.—As the result of a conference between County Superintendent E. A. Howard, Supervisor R. L. Callison of Oswego town and County Attorney W. M. Gallagher, held Monday at Mr. Howard's office, a meeting of the town board of Oswego town will be held either Saturday or Manday next to decide upon a date for a special election of taxpayers to authorize an issue of bonds for the proposed Minetto bridge. The time for the meeting has been left open because of the desire to have present William Meuser of the Concrete-Steel Engineering Company, architect of the bridge, to explain certain features of the cost, etc.

The town of Volney must also be considered in any action on the proposed bridge, but as the petition for an election came from Oswego town taxpayers, this town only is for the present concerned.

The proposed meeting of the Oswego town board is made necessary by the fact that a petition for a bonding election has been offered by twenty-five residents of the town living at or near Minetto. It is not believed that the petitioners are actuated by a friendly spirit, as some of the petitioners were active opponents of the concrete bridge on the new site. The town authorities have done nothing toward holding a special election, as it was desired to know definitely what amount it was necessary to raise. This could not be done until it was certain what amount the State would appropriate for the structure.

The town law provides that the town board must order a special election on the request in writing of twenty-five bona fide taxpayers of a town. Under this law it is mandatory on the town board to take such action.

IN MEMORIAM

Henrietta L. Mason, wife of S. P. Mason, who died February 10 was born in the town of Columbia, Herkimer county, in 1841. Had Mrs. Mason lived but 12 days longer the 56th anniversary of her marriage to Mr. Mason would have been realized.

Mrs. Mason was a woman loved for her simple, helpful life. At all times she was a true friend and neighbor and a loving wife and mother. Early in life she became a member of the Free Will Baptist church of Gilbert's Mills, at which place she resided with her husband until five years ago. Since then Fulton had been her home.

Dr. Mason, of Phoenix, Mrs. C. W. Chaffee of W. Virginia and Mrs. E. E. Jardine of this city are the children surviving. S. P. Mason, the husband also survives.

Interment was made at Gilberts Mills.

For the Children

A Titled English Girl Who Likes Lawn Tennis.

Quite a noted tennis player is this little girl here pictured. She is an English girl, and her name is Lady Rosamond Butler, quite a high sounding title for one so young. In England, however, it is not at all unusual for some small person to bear a big name. Lady Rosamond is very fond of racket and ball and is said to be very skillful. Tennis is an excellent outdoor sport and is deservedly popular in this country. In winter, of course, there is not much opportunity to play the game, as it is essentially a game to be played in the open air. Some folks have indoor courts and keep up practice all the year.

Game of Tip Cat.

This is a common sport among boys, more particularly in the country. It has a great advantage in being easily made with a common knife. The piece of wood which is called the "cat" is about six inches in length and from one and a half to two inches in diameter, gradually tapering from the middle to each end.

The cudgel with which the game is played is about the length and thickness of a common hoopstick.

The player, taking this in his right hand, strikes one end of the cat smartly, which causes it to rise in the air high enough to be struck before it again falls to the ground.

There are several ways of playing the game of cat. The most common is to make a ring, selecting a piece of flat ground. One bo holds a piece of string that will make the circle required at the center, and another one takes the extremity of the line, and with a piece of chalk he walks round and forms the ring. The player takes his stand in the middle, and his business is to strike the cat outside the ring. Should he fail in doing so he is out, and the next player takes his place; if successful he judges with his eye the distance the cat is driven from the center of the ring and calls for a number to be scored for his side. If the number named be found to exceed the same number of lengths of the stick he is out. If, on the contrary, it does not he obtains his call.

Some Hints on Fire Making.

To begin with, dry wood must be used to get the fire started, and after it is once going you should mix green wood with the dry. Birch bark is about the best thing to start with, or pine needles and other things may be used. On top of the birch bark small dry twigs should be laid. Around all this a sort of blockhouse of larger wood should be built. The whole fire should be built between two green logs about four or five inches in diameter, if such logs are easily procured. If not, the fire should be built inside a three sided wall of rocks. The opening should be turned toward the wind. Never choke a fire by piling on too much wood. Grass is a poor substitute for birch bark, as also are leaves.

A Potato Race.

Put ten medium sized potatoes in a pile for each contestant and about twenty feet away from each pile a pan. Provide each contestant with a teaspoon and at a given signal let all start to transfer the potatoes to the pans. The potatoes are not to be touched with either hand. The contestant who first gets the ten potatoes into his pan is winner. The larger the potatoes selected the greater is the skill required. Entries may be limited to men, women, girls under twelve, and so on.—Country Gentleman.

Politeness Pays.

A little tramp dog met a nice little cat.
And he bowed most politely and took off his hat.
"Good evening, good evening!" so sweetly said he,
That pussy invited him home to tea.

NOTABLES IN THE LIMELIGHT

Archduke Frederick, Head of the Austrian Army.

Archduke Frederick of Austria, directing head of the entire Austrian army, is a cousin of Emperor Francis Joseph. Frederick is acting head of the army because of the age and feebleness of the emperor. General von Hoetzendorf, chief of staff, who is second in command, is the strategical expert and author of Austria's plans of campaign in the present war. So far as is known the archduke has not visited the battle lines. He is reported to have been deeply chagrined from the failure of the Austrian campaign against Servia.

Rather remotely, Archduke Frederick has American connections by marriage. His wife, former Princess Isabelle of Croy, is the aunt of the Duke of Croy, who married Miss Nancy Leishman, daughter of the former ambassador to Germany. Archduke Frederick is the richest man in Austria and also the most wealthy member of the Austrian imperial family. His income is said to be more than $2,000,000 a year and is remarkable because Austria is not a country of very rich men. Less than thirty citizens of the empire have incomes of more than $200,000.

Archduke Frederick is fifty-eight years of age and is the father of seven daughters and one son. It was not until July, 1897, that a son and heir was born to him. The archduke is a brother of the dowager Queen Maria Christina of Spain, and during the Spanish-American war he spent much time at Madrid in the role of military adviser to his sister.

The King of Roumania.

When Ferdinand I. succeeded his uncle, King Charles I., as king of Roumania last October he faced a serious situation. A member by birth of the German Hohenzollerns and cousin of Kaiser Wilhelm, he found himself at the age of forty-nine called to rule a people alien in blood, language and sympathies.

By personal inclination the new king, like his late uncle, found himself drawn toward the German emperor. His subjects, however, are anti-German and favor the triple entente. As matters stand the tendency in Roumania is to take the allies' side. The people are said to be anxious for war and the ministers have been represented as hesitating on the verge of declaration of hostilities. Already the army is in process of mobilization and any day may see the actual outbreak.

FERDINAND OF ROUMANIA.

King Ferdinand I. is the son of Prince Leopold of Hohenzollern-Sigmaringen and by royal decree of March 18, 1889, was declared Prince of Roumania and heir apparent to the throne, with the right of hereditary succession. His wife was the Princess Marie, daughter of the Duke of Edinburgh, a brother of King Edward VII of England. She therefore is the first cousin of King George V. The couple have five children. Prince Carol, the heir apparent, is just past twenty-one and is a lieutenant in the Roumanian army.

SCHOOL MARKETS AND PRIZES

Successful Career of New England Plans That Instruct in Marketing

In Norwalk, Conn., the Woman's Civic League is offering prizes to the grade school children for excellency in gardening. The Outlook gives an account of the enterprise:

"For three years the League has offered money prizes to the children of the graded schools for the best-kept gardens. The prizes have been competed for eagerly and well earned. This year it occurred to the Committee that some outlet for the vegetables and flowers raised would be useful both to the competitors and to the townspeople. As a result, the Children's Market was established. It was held every Saturday morning from eight to ten in front of the Norwalk hotel, and was a success. The details were carefully thought out and the organization was complete. A young teacher was engaged and paid by the League as manager of the market under the direction of the Committee. Part of her duty was to make the rounds of the greengrocers' shops each Friday night and ascertain the current charges. From these data she set the price for each product the children brought. The testimony of the buyers was invariably that the food was the best to be procured anywhere, and the same people came regularly, bringing their baskets to take home purchases. The flower display increased each week and made a fine showing.

The children themselves were the most vital exhibit. The oldest was thirteen, and several were but five and seven. They had raised their own vegetables and flowers, as was carefully ascertained by the garden visitors.

"The enterprise has aroused widespread attention and should prove stimulating. The garden contest and the market seem significant for two reasons. The advantage of bringing the producer and the consumer directly together is evident, and the incentive to the little farmers to carry on their work is important.

"A large proportion of the successful prize-winners have been the same each year. There are wonderfully interesting agriculturists among them. The fathers of many own their little farms back in the country. Yet heretofore the moment Mary and John reached fourteen, the age in Connecticut when children can be pushed into a factory, in they went. It is highly probable that children who show marked talent in doing the thing they love could make the little farm pay. Among other successful venders, one is a girl of twelve with seven younger brothers and sisters. She has, entirely lone, cultivated half an acre for two years, this summer making about thirty-five dollars and winning a prize of five dollars."

WILLS PROBATED

Citations to prove the will of Catherine Garahan, of Oswego, were filed Monday in the Surrogate's office. The will was filed February 13th.

The will of former Mayor James A. Foster, of Fulton, was probated Monday. He leaves an estate listed at $9.000 in value, $5,000 in personal and $4.000 in real estate. Two-thirds of the estate is left in trust for the widow and two sons. Norman W. and Chas. Earl are named as trustees. With death of the widow the estate is divided equally between three sons, the third being Victor Foster. None of the stock in the Foster Brothers-Chatillon Knife Works is to be sold without the consent of Charles E. Foster.

Surrogate Miller signed an order Monday appointing Avery S. Wright, to examine into all guardians' accounts that have passed the Surrogate's hands within the past year.

The signed order of Surrogate Clayton I. Miller administered to probate the will of Betsey Hunter, of the town of Hastings yesterday. Truman E. A. Cook is the executor.

The will of Mary Pringle Calkins was filed in the Surrogate's office Tuesday. Letters were issued to Frank Pringle, a son, of Fulton. Personal property $1,000, no real estate. The will leaves two hundred dollars to William Pringle, a son, and the balance to Frank W. Pringle.

RUSSIAN TENTH ARMY CRUSHED IN E. PRUSSIA

Kaiser Witnessed Complete Rout of Czar's Army of 200,000 Men

By Frederick Werner.

Berlin, Feb. 17, by wireless.—The tremendous victory of the Germans over the Russians in East Prussia was won under the eyes of Emperor William. More than 50,000 prisoners were taken by the Germans, who also captured more than fifty cannon and sixty machine guns.

Only a remnant of the Russian army, which consisted of more than 200,000 men, succeeded in escaping across the frontier into Russia. A vast quantity of ammunition and other war supplies was abandoned by the Czar's troops in their fight.

These facts are set forth in an official statement issued at the war office today.

The conflict lasted for nine days in the Mazurian lake region and terminated in a decisive triumph for the Germans. The victory was later celebrated in the town of Lick, where Emperor William personally congratulated his soldiers, who sang "Deutschland Uber Alles" in their exultation.

The war office statement, which is based upon an official report from the German staff, follows:

"In a battle lasting nine days in the Mazurian lakes district, the Russian Tenth army, consisting of eleven infantry divisions and several cavalry divisions, was not only driven out of its strongly entrenched positions east of the Lake Plateau, but was also driven over the frontier, being utterly defeated at almost every point.

(A division of infantry consists of 18,000 men. The Russian infantry in this battle, therefore, numbered 198,000 men, and with the cavalry divisions the Tenth army was well over 200,000.

"Only remnants of the Russian army managed to escape to the woods east of Suwalki and Augustowe (in Russia), where they are being pursued.

"The enemy's losses were very high. The number of prisoners taken by the German troops has not yet been ascertained definitely, but it was certainly over 50,000. We captured more than fifty cannon and 60 machine gunns. A vast quantity of war material was also taken, but no figures are yet available.

"Emperor William was present at the decisive conflict in the center of the fighting line.

"The victory was won by the veteran East Prussian troops and by other troops, who, though young, proved their worth in achievement.

"These troops supported the fighting under the most fearful weather conditions due to torrential rains. They marched and fought day and night and their achievements against such a stubborn enemy are beyond all praise.

"Field-Marshal Von Hindenburg directed the operations, which were carried out by the masterly hand of Lieutenant General Von Eichborn and General Von Buelow.

"An important epoch in the war was marked by the battle for Lick, which offered the Russians a firm point of support.

"The Germans succeeded under the eyes of Emperor William in driving the enemy out of town on January 14. Immediately afterwards the Emperor appeared on the street. The German warriors exultantly pressed about the Emperor, who spoke personally to many men and officers.

"Suddenly "the national anthem, "Dutschland Ueber Alles, rang out.

"Later the Emperor visited the outskirts of the town and was greeted by other troops stationed there. He delivered an enthuiastic speech to two battalions of Pomeranian grandiers in which he praised highly the achievements of the troops."

PETROGRAD SAYS ORDER ATTENDED WITHDRAWAL

By Francis Lavelle Murray.

Petrograd, Feb. 17.—Russian troops have effected orderly withdrawal from all points on their front where their positions were menaced by the terrific offensive of the Germans and their Austrian allies, it was announced here today. The withdrawal from East Prussia and southern Bukowina was caused by the apprentice of great opposing armies and not to any decisive battles resulting in Russian defeats, the war office claims.

Military experts assert that Russia's superior resources permit her to adopt a policy of attrition, which will result in the ultimate collapse of the German's offensive because of the heavy losses that will necessarily fall upon armies continually attacking.

The German claim that General Von Hindenberg has won a great victory in Eastern Prussia are denied here. It is admitted that the Germans are again advancing upon Ossiwiek, but the falling back of the Russian army is declared to have been due to the appearance of German forces numerically superior to the Russians and not to any defeat suffered by them.

ALLIES PRESSING ENEMY WHO CHASED RUSSIANS

Berlin, via Amsterdam, Feb. 17.—That both the British and French troops are taking the offensive in the western theatre of war was shown by an official report from the German General Staff issued here today.

This offensiveness is attributed to efforts on the part of the allies to weaken the pressure which the Germans are bringing against the Russians.

The General Staff reports that the assaults of the French and British troops were repulsed yesterday through very strong opposition, with the exception of points in Champagne where French troops succeeded in repulsing German attacks.

BRITISH UNABLE TO STAND GERMAN RUSH

By Franklin P. Merrick.

Paris, Feb. 17.—Persistent reports that the Germans have evacuated Ostend are shown to be false by official dispatches from the front otday, stating that a small British squadron is bombarding the German troops holding that Belgian city.

The French have strengthened their position in the Champagne region and there is ground for the belief that a part of the British army has reinforced the French in that district. The French who captured some trenches in that region have been able to hold them despite the vigorous counter attacks of the invaders.

In the forest of La Petre, to the north of Pent-a-Mousson, rFench artillery destroped some German defensive works. The woods were set on fire by exploding shells and the Germans had to abandon some of their works by fire.

It is now known that the fighting in West Flanders on Sunday, Monday and Tuesday was more violent than was at first believed. The British lost heavily in the bloody assaults made by the Germans against the English trenches. Fierce hand-to-hand fighting took place in the field works in which the men on both sides fought like demons.

Shouting "For the Fatherland," the Germans drove against the British in a smashing onrush, disregarding showers of bullets. Once inside of the English redoubts the Germans fought with the bayonet and swung their rifles like war clubs. The English fought gallantly, but they could not withstand the furious attacks of the Teutonic hosts. The English were compelled to fall back, but later delivered counter attacks with an aggressiveness and spirit which equalled the assaults of the Germans.

TIME LIMIT SET FOR GREEK ULTIMATUM

By Burton L. FFrazie.

Bucharest, Russia, Feb. 17—War between Greece and Turkey is declared by diplomats here to be imminent. A dispatch from Athens states that the Turkish minister to Greece has left for Constantinople and that members of the Greek legation in the Ottoman capital are preparing to depart for Athens, whither Minister Panas has already gone.

The departure of the Turkish minister from Athens is said to have followed the delivery of an ultimatum from Greece demanding an apology for insults to the Greek naval attache at Constantinople and assurances that he would hereafter be shown every mark of courtesy.

According to private advices, the time limit on this ultimatum expires at 6 p.m. Thursday.

PRESIDENT SAYS REPORT IS OUTRAGEOUS

Washington, Feb. 17—The tension existing between the United States and belligerent nations in the European conflict was relaxed today by a reassuring word at the White House, that President Wilson is confident the international situation will be cleared without embroiling this nation in war.

The report published in a New York newspaper today saying the President was disturbed over the situation was declared by the White House as "outrageous."

WASHINGTON RECEIVES GERMANY'S REPLY

Berlin, by Amsterdam, Feb. 17.—Ambassador Gerard today transmitted to Washington thec omplete reply of Germany to the note of the United States inquiring as to what precautions Germany would take for a neutral shipping in the submarine warfare against England. It was onnounced here that German's answer would not be given out here, but it was stated that it was in the same spirit of friendliness that has been shown in the preliminary reply to the German embassy at Washington.

Nish, Servia, Feb. 17.—Albanian troops are attacking the Servians along the entire frontier, it was announced here today. On Monday the Albanians invded the department of Okhrida, southwestern Servia, and forced the numerically weaker Servians to retire. They captured the town of Schjafassan Tuesday.

Fighting raged all day Sunday about Revatz and continued Monday and Tuesday.

The Christians living at Rodefievae, Lina and other frontier places have taken refuge at Stronga.

There ws fighting yesterday in the vicinity of Prisrend, in which the Servians lost thirty killed and wounded, but Prisrend is now believed to be out of danger as large Servian forces have been hurried to tht region. These troops expect to enter Vranitze, just across the frontier in Albania, very shortly.

WAR ARTICLES

By Teddy Robinson

I am still neutral, I have read
How one side violates its dead,
And how the others slash the foe
That's false—that I also know;
French, German, British, Russian,
Turk—
I've read about their awful work!

I know one's savage catechism,
The other's civil barbarism;
One has an ancient, bloody creed,
The other loves to stab and bleed
The enemy, whoever it
May be. I've heard every bit.

I still am neutral. I have felt,
(Being part Saxon and part Celt,
With something of the Latin, Slav, Teuton and Tartar). Well, I have Decided that this racial strife
Adds naught to death and naught to life.

By thinking of my family,
I know how all this fight can be;
My father hates my brother-in-law,
My sister hates my mother-in-law;
I cannot bear my uncle's son—
And that is how the thing is done.

Of course, I'm more than conscious that
I ought to love my neighbor's cat,
Which wakes me up at half-past four;
But he should love my dog the more
Which wakes him at half-past three.
We don't. And that's why wars must be!

BAKER LEAVES THE GAME; BACK TO THE PLOWSHARE

Philadelphia, FFeb. 17.—Connie Mack will have to mold his Athletics from the bottom. His $100,000 infield has been shattered; the twirlers who brought fame and glory to the team have gone. The latest desertion from the ranks of baseball is "Home Run" Baker, hero of the World's Series of 1911 and 1913.. Baker is through with baseball. Although signed up for two years more the call of the farm is louder than the call of the Idiamond. Baker wants to plough the ground. He is tired of hearing the plaudits of the thousands of fans.

With both Baker and Eddie Collins out of his infield and Bender, Plank and Coombs off the firing line, Mack's task this year will be a huge one. But Connie smiles and says "Wait."

THE CUNNING OF CROWS.

In India These Birds Have Been Labeled "Shreds of Satan."

Travelers in the orient have much to say about the Indian crow, a bird that for uncanny knowingness and prankish audacity has perhaps no equal. Corvus splendens—thus have ornithologists flatteringly labeled him. But a naturalist who knows the Indian crows at first hand has called them "shreds of Satan, cinders from Tartarus." To give these impish creatures their due, however, it should be said that life in India is not a little enlivened by their presence. A correspondent witnessed the following incident:

A small hawk had seized a little bird and perched on a leafless branch to devour his prey. The spectacle drew two crows to the spot. They hopped and flapped from branch to branch, noisily discussing the strategy of their intended raid.

Then one of them quietly slipped away through the surrounding foliage. At the same time his mate flew in front of the perching hawk and, hovering within a foot of his beak, maintained a bustling menace of snatching the titbit. That effectively compelled the attention of the hawk. His prey firmly grasped beneath his feet, he angrily hissed and lunged at the hovering nuisance. So lively was the skirmish that the human onlooker forgot the existence of the second crow. But now that wily bird reappeared some distance in the rear of his destined victim. With stealthy sidlings and short, noiseless flights, he drew near. Then he made a swift dash, seized the hawk's long, barred tail by the tip, hung on it with his full weight and toppled the luckless hawk in a complete back somersault from the branch! The released titbit was instantly seized by the first crow, and the clever pair bore off their booty with much triumphant cawing.—Youth's Companion.

JOHNSON MIGHT BE KIDNAPED

Curley Confident the Battle Will Be Fought on Mexican Soil

El Paso, Tex., Feb. 17.—Jack Johnson will arrive inJuarez next Monday and the day he arrives he will be in shape to step into the ring with Jess Willard, Jack Curley, promoter of the fight said today.

Johnson, according to Curley, is today close to the Mexican coast. Where he will land and what route he will take to reach Juarez, Curley now has and says he will continue to keep absolutely secret. All he will say is that Johnson has touched at Cuba and si well on the ocean.

"Both Johnson and Willard will step into the ring on March 6," said Curley. "There is no possibility of the fight being postponed. Johnson since he left England, has had three trainers with him. He has been in constant training while on shipboard and will arrive in Juarez almost ready to enter the ring the hour he arrives. He will not ask for any postponement for training."

Johnson, when he arrives at Juarez, will be more elaborately guarded than General Panco Villa. In a statement made to Curley today, a brother of Villa stated that he had arranged for a personal guard of ten picked men, who would constantly be with the big negro. A large house in Juarez next to the one in which Villa lives when he is in Juarez, which is the home house, by the way, in which the Englishman, William S. Benton, was murdered, has been reserved for the champion.

Extra precautions are being taken, according to the Juarez military authorities to prevent Johnson's being kidnaped. Under no circumstances will be the big fighter be turned over to United States authorities. This statement is made on the authority of Jack Curley, General Villa's brother and the military and municipal authorities of Juarez.

Work on the big arena for the fight, which is to be located on the course of the Juarez race track, will begin ten days before the fight.

Willard is in splendid shape for the fight and his condition is rapidly shortening the odds that at first favored the negro. Willard is guarded night and day at his camp and for two weeks has been putting in regular training. Many who had heavily backed the negro when Willard first began training are now hedging.

FIVE BRITISH MERCHANT SHIPS SUNK BY GERMANY'S CRUISER KRONPRINZ WILHELM

GALICIAN TOWN LOST TO AUSTRIANS

By Steven Burnett.

Vienna, via Berlin and Amsterdam, Feb. 18.—The capture by Austrian troops of the important Galician railway center of Kolomea on the Pruth river is announced in an official statement issued at the war office today. The statement also tells of the capture of more than 6,000 Russians, 2,000 having been taken at Kolomea and 4,040 in the Carpathians.

Kolomea is 96 miles southeast of Lemberg and 45 miles northwest of Czernowitz, the capital of Bukowina. It controls the railroad line between Stanislau and Czernowitz and its capture splits the Russian forces that have been driven back to these two cities.

The official statement follows: "After two days of hard fighting we captured Kolomea on the afternoon of February 16. Stubborn encounters occurred south of the town near Kluezow and Wiznitz before Kolomea was taken.

"The Sussians made strong efforts to hold Kolomea, moving up considerable reinforcements for its protection. Their heavy counter attacks were repeatedly repulsed as our troops advanced. Our artillery was operated with good effect, inflicting severe losses on the enemy. At 5 o'clock Tuesday afternoon we succeeded in driving the enemy from his last position by a general attack, notwithstanding resolute resistance. In the same attack by which we captured Kolomea we also prevented the enemy from blowing up the bridge over the Pruth river. As the Russians retreated we occupied the town. We captured 2,000 prisoners, seven machine guns and two cannon.

"Hard fighting which has taken on the aspect of a general battle continues in the Carpathians as far as Wyzkow. The battle is being fought with great ferocity. Our troops have brought in 4,040 more prisoners."

KAISER LEAVES FOR GERMAN NAVAL BASES

By FREDERICK WERNER

Berlin, Feb. 18.—Via Amsterdam.—Official announcement was made today that Emperior William had returned from the eastern front for a short stay in Berlin. This news was received with enthusiasm by the public coming as it did on the same day that the Germany opens her submarine campaig nagainst England.

While no announcement has been made as to what section of the Empire the Emperior will visit next, semi-official intimations were made today that he would visit Cuxhaven, Wilhelmshaven, and Heligoland, the German naval bases, and then proceed to the western battle front.

While enthuiasm was caused here by the news of the destruction of the British collier Dulwich and the French steamer Ville de Lille in the English channel, the general public takes the opening of submarine warfare with calmness.

LATE WAR BULLETINS

Paris, Feb. 18.—Several successes for the allies along the entire battle front are claimed in an official statement issued this afternoon. The French have made a particularly important gain between the Argonne and the Meuse river, advancing 400 yards.

The French also captured two lines or German trenches to the north of Aarras causing heavy losses to the enemy. They captured a bomb thrower and severeal hundred bombs. In the valley of the Aisne and in the sector of Reims there were artillery combats in which the French gained the advantage.

Berlin, by Wireless, Feb. 18.—An official report from the German General Staff issued here this afternoon admits that the British troops on the road near Lisle have made gains and are continuing their offensive against the right wing of the German forces, and that the French attacks in Champagne have ceased.

London, Feb. 18.—Turkey has apolized to Greece for teh arrest of the Greek naval attache at Constantinople, according to a dispatch from Athens and danger of war between the two couuntries has been removed for the time being. The naval attache also received a personal apology from the Constantinople chief of police in the presence of the Greek legation staff.

Copenhagen, Denmark, Feb. 18.—The Scandanavian liner Oscar II, which was held up by a British cruiser off the coast of Scotland until search could be made for contraband among her cargo, is expected to reach Cshristiansand tonight. After leaving Kirkwall, Scotland, into which port she had been taken for search, the Oscar II was allowed to continue her voyage to Scandanavian ports.

New York, Feb. 18.—An evening newspaper publishes a dispatch as coming from its correspondent in Berlin, by wireless. The head of the Admiralty information bureau says:

"We have receide the information that it is the intention of England to torpedo the first incoming American steamship and charge this to the German submarines."

Lierpool. Feb. 18.—The Whlte Star liner Adriatic arrived here today. She made the voyage across the Atlantis without incident.

New York, Feb. 18.—The Adriatic left here on Feb. 1 with 450 passengers including a number of prominent Americans.

Short Sharp Attack Off South American Coast Scores a Point for "Blockade Day"

Buenos Ayres, Feb. 18.—Four British steamers and a British schooner of a total tonnage of 11,874 have been sunk off the East coast of South America by the German converted cruiser Kronprinz Wilhelm, which before the war was a North German Lloyd liner. This was learned today from Captain Dreyer of the German steamer Holger, which arrived last night bringing 314 persons comprising the crews of the destroyed English ships.

The steamers sunk by the Kronprinz Wilhelm were the Highland Brae, 4824 tons; the Petare, 2810 tons; the Hemisphere, 2230 tons, and the Semantha, 1811 tons. The three-masted schooner, Wilfred M., 199 tons, was also sent to the bottom by the cruiser.

After the vessels had been sunk by the Kronprinz Wilhelm the Holger was summoned from Pernambuco, by the captain of the cruiser to take on board the passengers and crews of the British vessels. After leaving the Kronpinz Wilhelm the Holger was pursued to Montevido by two British cruisers, but succeeded in escaping owing to a heavy fog.

The Highland Brae, which was the most important victim of the Kronprinz Wilhelm, was sunk two weeks after leaving London for Buenos Ayres. She was sunk near the Brazilian port of Pernambuco after her cargo, coal, crew and passengers had been removed to the Kronprinz Wilhelm. The passengers stated that they had received good treatment from the Germans, both on the cruiser and on the Holger, to which they were transferred near the Brazilian coast a few days after the Highland Brae was sunk.

They complained, however, of a lack of comfort on board the Holger, which is a coal carrying tramp.

Captain Dreyer of the Holger stated that after he left Pernambuco in response to an aerogram from the cruiser he had considerable trouble in locating the Kronprinz Wilhelm. She was on the high seas for several days before she came up to the cruiser.

The Holger, which is bringing a cargo from Bremen, had a crew of forty men, who will be compelled to remain here because they have no health certificates.

The Highland Brae was built in 1910; the Hemisphere in 1897; the Semantha in 1899 and the Wilfred M. in 1908.

KEEP SHIPS AWAY FROM WAR ZONE

Empire In Reply to Note Emphasizes Necessity for Taking Drastic Attitude Against Great Britain

By FREDERICK WERNER.

Berlin, Feb. 18.—Germany's reply to the note of the United States protesting against the submarine blockade of the British coasts set forth firmly the petition of Germany, but at the same time the doument is couched in cordial terms and shows a spirit of friendliness towards America. The German reply, which has been transmitted to Washington by American Ambassador Gerard, explains that German's drastic naval policy toward Great Britain was made necessary by the attempts of England to cut off the food supply of German's civil population.

A summary of the contents of the Germany reply was secured by the International News Service today. One of the proposals contained in the document is the suggestion that the Declaration of London be ratified, in accordance with a suggestion made by the United States at the outbreak of the war, thus enabling Germany to import food and raw material. With this artification, it is pointed out, Germany would be in a position to modify her maritime policy.

The German reply is begun with the following expression of friendship toward the United States:

"The Imperial government has examined the communications from the United States government in the same good will and friendship by which the communication seems to have been dictated.

"The Imperial Government is in accord with the United States Government in that for both parties it is to a high degree desirable to avoid any misunderstanding which might arise from the measures announced by the German admiralty and to provide against the occurrence of incidents which might trouble the friendly relations which so far happily exist between the two governments.

"With regard to assuring the friendly relations, the Imperial Government believes it may all the more reckon on a full understanding with the United States, as the procedure announced by the German admiralty, which is fully explained in the note of February 4 is in no way directed against the legitaimate commerce or legitimate shipping of neutrals, but represents solely a measure of self defense imposed on Germany by her vital interests against England's method of warfare, which is contrary to international law, which, so far, no protests by neutrals have succeeded in bringing back to the generally recognized principles as they existed before the outbreak of th war."

Regarding the flag question the German government recommends that American ships avoid the war zone around England. The hope is expressed that the United States will fully respect the struggle of Germany for her national existence and will fully understand and appreciate the motives that impelled the proclamation of a war zone in English waters.

The German government also suggests that the United States govern-

HUSON SAID TO HAVE RESIGNED

Albany, Feb. 18.—Explanation of the resignation of Calvin J. Huson as State Commissioner of Agriculture, which is to take effect March 1 and concerning which Governor Whitman and Commissioner Huson have kept silent, was made here today. Although Huson denied he has resigned it is learned from authentic sources that his resignation was sent to Gov. Whitman last Monday. An important lik made in the chain of reason why the resignation has been kept secret is that negotiations were made by Commissioner Huson to resign so that Comptroller Travis would not proceed against him. When the question was asked Comptroller Travis if there was any truth in the report that he had found extremely damaging evidence against Commissioner Huson he would make no statment other than to say: "The teeth had been drawn from the report."

The original report filed with Gov. Whitman by Comptroller Travis was filed three weeks ago.

RUSSIANS SNATCH SLIGHT VICTORY FROM GERMANS

By Francis Lavelle Murray

Petrograd, Feb. 18.—At bay in their positions in northern Poland on the right bank of the Vistula river, the Russians are withstanding terrific attacks by the German forces advancing from Thorn and Soldau. Reports received here today stated that the German drive was being checked on the Pleck-Raciene front, where the battle is raging with great intensity.

Further Russian successes in the Carpathians were announced by the general staff, these including the capture of more than 1,400 prisoners at one point tand the complete annihilation of a German battalion at another. Most of the men in the battalion were killed by Russian bayonets. The survivors were captured.

The official report of the general staff says:

"On the banks of the Vistula the fighting is proceeding in the same regions as yesterday with extreme desperation in certain sections, particularly about Plock.

"In the Niemen region (east of the German frontier) only patrols of the enemy have been encountered by our troops.

"There is no change on the left bank of the Vistula (the Bzura-Rawka front west of Warsaw.)

"In Galicia we repulsed an attack yesterday in the front of Khava-Vikeretch with heavy loss to the enemy. Farther east the enemy sought to attack us, but was unsuccessful in the Lubne-Studenne region. In repulsing this attack we captured more than 1,400 men and three machine guns.

"On the front from Koziowa to Wyzkow pass the Germans delivered a series of sustained impetuous attacks, pushing forward vigorously in the direction of Wyszkow. All were repulsed with heavy loss to the enemy. Almost a whole battalion was bayonetted. The survivors were captured.

"The situation in Bukewina is unchanged."

GERMANS BREAK DOWN; FRENCH MAKE GAINS

By FRANKLIN P. MERRICK

Paris, Feb. 18.—The new offensive movement by the allies now extends over the greater part of the battle line and hard attacks have been delivered at half a dozen different points. Gains made by the French in the Champagne district are considered unusually important because of the nearness of the French to the German lines of communication in that region now. German prisoners taken in that part of the field were in bad condition from exposure and lack of food. They declared that many men in the trenches, both officers and privates have gone violently insane from the exposure, the strain of constant fighting and the horrible sights which continually greeted their eyes.

Sniping operations on a big scale, as well as fierce cannonades are reported from West Flanders. In Alsace the French are strenghtening their positions.

This gigantic conflict has now been in progress for more than 22 weeks with only one important and one decisive development. This was the breakdown of the German forces defending Alsace and the invasion of Alsace-Lorraine by the French.

It is believed that Emperor William will shortly pay another visit to the western front and that his appearance will be the signal for another series of German assaults similar to those made along the Aisne, northeast of Soissons.

TROOPS OCCUPY ROME TO PREVENT OUTBREAKS

Rome, Feb. 18.—Ten thousand Italian troops marched into Rome at dawn today and took up positions where they would be at an advantage if any outbreaks occurred at the demonstration in favor of France and her allies arranged for this afternoon. The demonstration was arranged by the leaders of the Democrats, Republicans and Nationalists as a patriotic movement to support action for intervention in the war by parliament, which reconvened today. Heavy guards of soldiers were thrown about the government building and about that occupied by the ministry. Soldjers were also placed about the German and Austrian embassies.

Opinions

Obstinacy Carried to Folly.

Who is in favor of the Ship Purchase bill except the President of the United States and Secretary McAdoo? Why should Mr. Wilson have spoken in Indianapolis of the opposition to his measure as opposition to the will of the people, when the people seem to be either indifferent or antagonistic? Why should he go so far as to "indicate to individual Congressmen that he is determined" to summon an extra session unless this hobby of his is made law before the statutory adjournment of Congress, two weeks and a half hence? It is an exercise of power, a demonstration of unyielding purpose, that might be not only excused but justified in the case of a great national emergency, when a few stiff-necked politicians were standing out against an overwhelming popular demand, but who can excuse or justify it when it is the overriding of the reluctance or hostility of the elected representatives of the people by a man obstinately bent on a pet project of his own?

And what is the argument for this chameleon bill, which changes its hue overnight? What is left of it now, after all the changes that have been made in it, except an appeal to the persons who believe in Government ownership? What is Government ownership but the beginning of State socialism? There is, it is true, a sentiment for it in the South, where it is mistakenly believed that it would benefit the cotton industry; but the fact that an overwhelming Democratic majority in the House has to exert every effort to hold its men in line shows clearly that not even the Southerners are universally subject to this delusion. Some of the strongest protests against the measure have come fromSoutherners, such, for instance, as those strong and true words of Representative Dies on Saturday: "Once we embark this Government in socialism and Government ownership there is no turning back."

If there is any demand for it in the North it is that of Socialists or near-Socialists, such as Senator La Follette, who seems to object to it only because it does not in terms commit the nation forever to Government ownership. The Socialists and near-Socialists are men and voters, and have a right to have their opinions respectfully considered; but they are not yet in a majority, and there is no occasion to use the utmost power of the Executive to force through, against the judgment of Congress, a measure pleasing only to them and regarded with apathy or aversion by all the rest of the people, save only a faction in the South.

And now we hear that in order to jam through this undesired and unfriended bill measures or cloture are to be applied that make the worst days of Reedism seem like an era of real democracy and free speech. We hear of a proposal to force its passage in the House by a cutting down even of the pretense of debate and deliberation which used to exist in Cannon's days; of prohibiting all amendments except those framed in secret conclave in advance, and of strangling argument under a special rule. We hear of a proposal to apply cloture to the Senate. When the Democrats came into power in 1911 the first thing they did was to amend the Reed rules and give an air of democracy to them; now they propose to extend those rules to the Senate, hitherto safe from gag law under even Republican domination. And for what? To save the country, to avert some great national danger, to crush some impudent minority which is defying the popular will? No; it is proposed to place the Senate under the tyranny of a partisan majority and to make more rigid and intolerable the tyranny that already exists in the House, just to save a bill that the conscience and judgment of the nation evidently disapprove, but which one mon—the President of the United States—has obsfinately set his heart on.

This curious frenzy can be carried to success only in an extra session of Congress. That body, despite its patience, has revolted at last. The resolution for an investigation of lobbying influences, passed yesterday, makes it as certain as anything can be that the bill cannot be pushed through at this session, whatever the President may do. But it does not prevent his calling an extra sesion and applying the same methods of cbercion there; and his attitude throughout makes it extremely probable that this is what he will do. Indeed, he can hardly avoid it; for only seventeen days remain of the session, even should Congress work on Sundays, and that is insufficient time for the passing of the great supply bills, which are the real business o fa short session, but which have been sacrified to the Administration's insistence on forcing this bill through.—Times, N. Y.

THE LOCAL PAPER HAS SOUL

Behind the big advertising blotches on top of buildings, on barns, fences, and at the side of the road, there is nothing but wind; dead wood is behind the advertising placards in the trolley cars; there is soul behind the advertising contained in a living, pulsating newspaper, because every good newspaper has a soul, and this makes its advertising effective and valuable.

A live newspaper is one that goes into every home in the community it endeavors to serve. Live advertising that produces results is to be found in the papers that are not so large that an ordinary advertisement is lost in them, like a diamond in a heap of cobblestones. While the large papers, too, have souls, it is the small paper going into the homes because it is wanted there that gives the advertiser the results to which he is entitled. It cannot be disputed that there is soul and activity in the large newspaper, and in the full page advertisements contained in it, but how much of the real live tissue shows itself in the advertising matter of the small city merchant especially when it has to stand face to face with the big brother on an opposing page?

The big city paper has its field—a large one, a field that brings returns to the big city patrons of its advertising columns. Its circulation may be numbered by the thousands of copies, but is it really backed as an advertising medium by a soul?

Not much! Because it does not contain a bit of mutual or community interest. Itl does not bring together the people of this or any other community. It therefore ceases to be a paper with a soul; it becomes a thing without drawing power, because it is neither part or parcel of the people who take pride in their homes and home town.

GREAT COUNTRY, THIS

It takes an army of twenty thousand in Europe to destroy a railroad. In this country a few directors can accomplish the trick. Truly, this is a great country. And speakin' of this country, it takes a lot of politeness and a heap of patience to own even the Panama canal.

The way things are goin' here, it won't be long until parents will be sent to bed without their supper because they talk back to the children. It's a great country, this. In Massachusetts, one man has been fifteen years piecing a quilt, and they have failed to get him in the insane asylum. In this country some people get pinched by want and cold, and others by the cop.

But somehow, these days can't compare with the good old times of long ago, when Dad used to buy me a twelve-year-old suit, and then crowd me into a six-year-old seat on the local train goin' home. Those were the happy days!—Silent Partner.

DOINGS IN SUFFRAGE WORLD

New Jersey and Massachusetts have been added to the States in which the voters will decide next fall whether the franchise shall be extended to women. Legislatures in these States passed the necessary resolutions.

In South Dakota the Senate rejected the measure to let women vote on municipal issues.

A bill granting limited suffrage, providing that women be permitted to vote only for statutory officers, chosen by the people, was introduced in the Indiana Legislation.

Mrs. O. H. P. Belmont has appealed to the lawmakers of Rhode Island to support the measure for Presidential suffrage now before the Legislature.

OSWEGO'S HIGH SCHOOL SAID TO BE OVERCROWDED

Oswego, Feb. 18.—The Department of Education is confronted with a problem of furnishing more room for students in the Oswego High school, according to a statement made yesterday by Superintendent of Schools Charles W. Richards. Tuesday afternoon members of the department and Mr. Richards paid a visit of inspection to the High school building and its annexes and there saw at first hand the over crowded conditions which have existed since the middle of January. There are now 730 students registered and regularly attending the High school. With the main building, the portable school house, and the annex, there are seating accommodations for 650 students. Where the others get seats Mr. Richards couldn't state, but he has the word of Principal Leighton that every student has a seat of some sort.

ALBANY LETTER DAY BY DAY

Cardoze Tells Time' Readers the Doings of Officials and Lawmakers

By FREDERIC T. CARDOZE

Albany, Feb. 18—Legislation for organized labor, which has been prolific during the past few years and has been most satisfactory to union men, has by no means been neglected during the present session. There are a number of bills in committee which have a direct bearing upon hours of labor and matters which are aimed to better generally the conditions under which work by the day is done.

State Railway Employees are interested in a number of bills and will seek to have them placed upon the statute books. The measures advocated include an amendment to the workmen's compensation law through which employees who are injured may obtain benefits from the day of their misfortune instead of from a date two weeks later; a measure to compel the traction companies in the State to run each car with a crew of not less than two men. In Lockport and a few of the smaller cities the companies are said to be running "bob-tail" cars which have no conductors. The passenger drops his fare into a box.

The McCue Mothers' Pension Bill is endorsed by the State Federation of Labor. The measure in question takes children out of Orphan Asylums and gives them to their widowed mothers, paying her the same amount that is at present allowed out of the public funds for their maintenance at these institutions.

The bill by Assemblyman McNab making it a misdemeanor to fraudulently represent one's self as a member of a labor organization is another measure which finds universal favor with representatives and members of organized labor bodies.

There are a group of bills before both the Senate and Assembly which provide for days of rest and shorter hours; all of these measures are approved by those who are watching out for the well being of the laboring man and woman of the State.

Senator George F. Thompson has introduced a bill which permits employees engaged in the work of any industrial or manufacturing process to work more than eight hours a day during a peroid of shift or tour rotation, which shift or tour rotation shall not, however, be made more often than once a week.

A bill has been introduced by Assemblyman Landon which permits the employment of a female over sixteen years of age, more than nine hours a day in a mercantile establishment for the purpose of making one or more shorter working days instead of a shorter work day on some other day in the week.

The provisions of a measure presented by Assemblyman McNab, changes the time during which a minor under sixteen may work in a factory, from six days a week to forty-four hours a week. In the case of male minors under eighteen years of age and female minors under twenty-one years of age, the period of work is reduced from fifty-four to forty-eight hours a week and from nine to eight hours a day.

Three bills which await final attention are disapproved by the advocates of organized labor legislation. These bills exempt from the provisions of the Labor Law women and female minors over eighteen years of age employed in canning establishments between June 15th and October 15th each year; by exempting canning establishments from the one day in rest provisions of the Labor law; providing that females in canning establishments between June 15 and October 15, may be employed between the hours of 6 a. m. and 12 p. m. instead of between the hours of 6 a. m. and 10 p. m.

REFEREE IS BLAMED FOR LOSS OF GAME

At least five meteoric young men showered into the city last night, and by way of pasttime they played a game of basketball with the Tiger Juniors of Fulton. The game proved to be anything but a dry affair, provided the score is a criterion, for when the dust aroused by the meteoric dashes by the Oswegonians had cleared away the Juniors found they had lost a game to the time of 30—29. Of course that score should have told a different tale. The element preventing it was "de referee," as one doughty Tiger warior put it. At any rate, the Y. M. C. A. Meteors put it on, and Kinney and Johnson of that team had a lot to do with the putting.

It must not be taken for granted that the Tigers slept while getting the trimming, as "Honny" Barnes and R. Foster featured a few features, too.

In order that the Referee Prevost could not escape Arthur Perkins 'tended door.

The lineup:

Meteors		Tigers
Parhatt	Center	Waterhouse
		Gosich
McCarthy	Right guard	Barnes
Burke	Right field	Larrabee
Johnson	Left guard	Murphy

Charged With Professionalism

A letter from Joe Basloe written in Duluth contains the information that his Oswego basketball team has been barred from the amateur tournament at San Francisco for accepting money for games on the way out. Bas is just as well satisfied as he holds the opinion that the tournament won't amount to much. Fond Du Lac Minneapolis and Toledo have also barred for the same reason.

Those You Know

The D. A. R. will observe Washington's birthday by meeting with Mrs. A. P. Bradt at her home in Hannibal street. The program will be in charge of Miss Ada Wright. Sketches will be given from the life of Washington with questions in history. Supper will be served at 5 p. m.

Attorney and Mrs. Frederick Spencer entertained informally at their home in Academy street Wednesday evening.

Raymond Crowe of Syracuse is the guest of his brother, Andred Crowe, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. James Keeler, Oneida street.

* * *

Circle No. 5 of the Congregational church will give an oyster supper on Saturday evening, in the church parlors.

* * *

Harold A. Reed of Herkimer has returned after a visit with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. D. J. Read.

* * *

Mr. and Mrs. John Watson have been entertaining Miss Ethel Cook of Oswego at their home in Emery st.

* * *

Mrs. Russell Draper entertained at her home last Thursday.

* * *

Mr. and Mrs. Gifford Mace of Syracuse were the recent guests of relatives in the city.

* * *

The members of the Junior League of the State Street M. E. church are giving funds for educating a little boy at Baroba Camp, India.

The Midweek service of the State Street M. E. church at 7:30 p. m. will be a rally service. Morning class meetings at 9:30.

* * *

An entertainment under the auspices of the Ladies Aid society of the State Street M. E. church will be given on Friday evening in the church parlors. Miss Elinor H. Hodges of Emerson College will entertain.

JESS DISCOUNTS JACK'S RECORD

But Willard Has Not Done Better Than to Beat Beaten Fellows

By FRANK G. MENKE

New York, Feb. 18.—The records of Jack Johnson and Jess Willard effectively shoot to pieces some of the recent utterances of Jess Willard, who has been spending part of his time spoofing the past doing of Johnson and praising his own.

"Johnson has scored only 11 or 12 knockouts," said Willard. The records show that Johnson has scored 26. Willard has scored 17 knockouts. Take a squint at the "fighters" that he hask nocked out. Not one of Willard's victims can be regarded as better than a third rater. Most of them are fourth and fifth raters—the type of "fighters" that would be "soft pickings" for a hard hitting lightweight.

Against the second rate fighters Willard has been turned back and beaten. Gunboat Smith, who is about one half of Willard's size, beat Willard in that 20-round affair in 'Frisco, and both Luther McCarty and Arthur Pelkey were given the popular decision over Willard. Tom McMahon, a joke fighter, tackled Willard in a 12-round bout in Youngstown, Ohio, last March and gave "the greatest heavyweight pugilist in the world" a thorough beating.

Here are some of the records of the pugilists who are scheduled to meet March 6th in Juarez, Mexico.

PRIVATE MAIL BOX NOW SAFE

Law Protects Receptacles Erected for Carrier's Convenience

Citizens who have placed receptacles for mail on their houses and residents of rural districts who have placed boxes on trees, fence posts or other places in front of their homes, for the convenience of carriers, have now the assurance that their mail is protected by law as fully as is that in the regular mail boxes on street corners. It is a very serious offense to tamper with mail left in a United States mail box. It is now just as serious to disturb that left in a receptacle placed on a house or other place by a private citizen for the convenience of a carrier.

An amendment to the postal laws and regulations passed on January 7, reads as follows:

"Any letter box or other receptacle intended or used for the receipt or delivery of mail matter on any city delivery route, rural delivery route, star route, or other mail route, is hereby designated a letter box for the receipt or delivery of mail matter within the meaning of the act of March 4, 1909, section 19."

HARDWARE MEN ARE CHEERFUL

Business Conditions Improving; That Outlook is Bright; That Prices Will Stiffen

Syracuse, Feb, 18.—Two hundred traveling salesmen, associate members of the New York State Retail Hardware Association, which is holding its annual convention at the Yates, report tangible evidence of improved business conditions in nearly all sections of the state, according to William P. Foster of Rochester, president of the associate members' organization.

Speaking from his own experience in the general hardware trade, Mr. Foster yesterday declared that business has been "picking up," particularly during the past six weeks, and that unless the European war brings new and serious complications things ought to be "humming" by the middle of the year.

"The stiffening of the metal markets is causing many hardware merchants to place orders before prices go higher," Mr. Foster continued. "We—the traveling men—are not here to urge sales, but I observe that some good business has been secured today from retail dealers, we see the advantage of replenishing stocks at this time.

"Stocks are lower than ordinarily in the country districts, but a buying tendency is encouraging the hardware merchants to purchase goods. While some of the manufacturing communities have been hit hard by the industrial depression, those largely dependent on agricultural interests for trade are flourishing."

GENEROUS SUM REALIZED

The Amount of $276 Turned Into Treasury for Visiting Nurse Work.

The woman's auxiliary of the hospital announces the amount realized from the charity ball for the visiting nurse fund to be $276. The amount directly gathered from the sale of tickets by the auxiliary was $203. In addition the Elks committee has turned over $73, this the amount cleared by the lodge after the expenses of the affair had been met.

The public generally is appreciative of the opportunity afforded by the Elks to raise the funds for carrying on this good work. Commendation and congratulations are both due from the public.

MICHAEL HARTY

Michael Harty, 88, died this morning at his home, 307 Highland st.

Surviving are two daughters, Mrs. B. G. McGrath of Oswego and Mrs. John Reynolds, also one son, James Harty, both of this city.

The funeral services will be held at 9 o'clock Saturday morning at the hom and at 9:30 from the Church of Immaculate Conception. Burial will be made at St. Mary's. Friends are asked to omit flowers.

WOMAN'S LEAGUE MEETIING

The Woman's League meeting will be held at the library tomorrow afternoon at 3:30 o'clock. The annual election of officers will take place and the addition of two new departments to the league will be made.

Each old member is urged to be present. Any new members will be welcomed. The league is ambitious to rank with other small but progressive cities along civic lines, and it is believes Fulton women are surely awakening to their splendid possibilities in human welfare work.

HART-MORTON

The wedding this morning of Ernest Morton of 113 Oak st., and Miss Eva Hart, 103 S. 7th st., came as quite a surprise to the numerous friends of the young persons.

Early this bright morning City Clerk Scudder issued to them a license, whereupon the parsonage of the Congregational church was visited. There a cordial welcome awaited them as the genial pastor, the Rev. Charles Olmstead, while surprised when he learned the object of the visit, soon performed the wedding ceremony. Immediately Mr. and Mrs. Morton left the parsonage for the home of the groom's father, William Morton, 113 Oak st., from whence the sound of wedding bells issued.

Mr. Morton is a cloth inspector at the American Woolen Co.'s plant. Mrs. Morton has a large circle of friends in this city where she has lived always. She is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Hart, 103 S. 7th st.

JEROME MILLER

Jerome Miller, 82, a former well known boat builder of this city, died yesterday at Ithaca, and the body will be brought here on the 11:40 train Friday and placed in the receiving vault at Mt. Adnah cemetery until spring when interment will be made in the family lot.

Undertaker E. S. Brown is in charge of arrangements.

MISS HODGES WILL READ

Miss Eleanor Howe Hodges of the Boston School of Oratory, will entertain an audience tomorrow evening in the State st. M. E. church, by giving a series of readings.

Miss Hodges enjoys a fine reputation as an entertainer in a literary way and the women of the church are indeed fortunate in securing her services.

KEEP SHIPS AWAY FROM WAR ZONE

ment cause all American ships passing through the war zone waters be accompanied by convoys of warships flying the United States ensign. It is emphatically pointed out in this connection that only those ships carrying no contraband should be convoyed.

Though the German government inclines to consider every measure possible to guard the shipping of neutral nations, there are two circumstances which demand consideration:

First, the use of foreign flags by British merchant ships; second, the carrying of contraband of war in merchant ships of neutral countries.

In regard to the carrying of contraband in neutral ships the Imperial government expresses the hope that the United States government will be induced to observe the conduct which is in agreement with a "real spirit of neutrality."

(Germany's references to the transportation of contraband is directed toward the shipment of guns, ammunition and other war munitions which have been made to England and France from American ports since the war began.)

It is pointed out that Germany gave ample time (fourteen days) for neutral countries to prepare to meet war zone conditions. In other words the ships which have sailed for English waters since the German proclamation was posted, have voluntarily accepted responsibility for the dangers attending the voyage.

The lengthy document vigorously defends Germany's present course throughout.

About Sports Generally

By Frank G. Menke.

New York, Feb. 18.—The Juarez race track officials deserve a commending slap upon their spinal columns for their recent action in putting into force a rule concerning apprentice jockeys that will do much to make the racing game more honest.

The officials long ago realized that if they could devise some rules that would reduce to a minimum the number of plausible excuses that horse owners could resort to when the favorite horse lost the race, or when an outsider won, that they would be taking a long step toward the goal of honest and clean racing.

So they passed this rule:

"Hereafter the apprentice allowance will be permitted only on the horses owned by persons holding the contracts on apprentice riders. This will not apply to horses trained by such employers unless they have ownership in them."

That rule means much for the racing game. In the past the apprentice jockeys have figured—unconsciously perhaps—in many crooked races. There are several ways in which the crooked owners worked things through the medium of apprentice jockeys. The most popular method was this:

Let's say Bill Hanger owned a horse named Kinky Kink, who was compelled to carry 100 pounds in jockey weight. Kinky Kink couldn't do very well with a 100 pound load, but he always was sure to be in the fight with a 95 pound load.

The public knew this. It also knew that Owner Hanger had no apprentice jockeys—that he always rode the expert jockeys who must carry 100 pounds. Therefore, the public never bet on Hanger's horse; at least, not in any amounts.

The race on this particular day is fixed for Kinky Kink to win. The owner of the horse knows that his only chance to win is to put in an apprentice jockey, because the rule provides that whenever an apprentice jockey rides the horse is given a five pound allowance. That is, if the horse, under the rules, is scheduled to carry 100 pounds regular jockey weight, he need carry only 95 pounds if an apprentice rides him.

At the last minute, the owner of Kinky Kink put a 95 pound jockey on the horse's back. With such little weight Kinky Kink can go at his best—and he usually wins.

The public probably bet heavily on the other horses in the race. They never figured Kinky Kink to have a chance because they know he can't carry 100 pounds jockey weight and they didn't learn about theswitch in jockeys until the horses were at the post or had left it.

This switching practice has been carried on extensively in the past and every time it has been the public that has been stung. The public rarely figured that the owner Kinky Kink and horses of his kind would be handled by apprentice jockeys because the owner of the horse did not employ apprentice jockeys.

The crooked owners "crossed" the owner at the last minute and there was nothing in the rules to prevent the borrowing and the switching of riders.

The Juarez rule prevents further borrowing. An apprentice jockey cannot ride a horse and get the five pound allowance unless he is regularly employed by the owner of the horse. An owner, in future, who wants to use apprentice jockeys must make public the fact that he is meploying apprentice jockeys. That will act as a "tip-off" to the public and remove at least one of the many practices of crooked race horse owners to "flim" the public.

BREAD WAR NOW COSTS GERMANY NEARLY MILLION

Two Zeppelins On Scout Duty Lost On North Sea Island

By Herbert Temple

London, Feb. 19.—English ships have thus far escaped destruction or damage in the "bread war" in which German submarines and airships are co-operating in an attempt to cut off England's food supply. The only losses suffered thus far by either of the belligerent nations has been suffered by Germany. Two great Zeppelin airships of the fleet that the Germans are using to patrol the North sea and to flash to submarines word of the approach of cargo ships have already been wrecked upon the coast of Denmark.

With the war zone proclamation in effect for less than two days the Germans have thus suffereda monetary loss of $600,000, the cost of the Zeppelins lost off Denmark, not having been less than $300,000 each.

That Germany had carried out her threat to use the Zeppelins in her new campaign against England was definitely confirmed today by dispatches from Rotterdam telling how the Dutch steamer Helena was held up by the Zepplin L-5 in the North sea. The best description of the incident was given by the correspondent of the Daily Express, who telegraphed as follows:

"The captain of the Dutch steamer Helena has just described to me how his ship was held up forty miles from Haake Lightship in the North sea by a German airship which descened near the sea and hoisted signals orderin gthe steamer to heave to.

"The Helena was overhauled by Zeppelin L-5 at 10 a.m. The morning was clear and in the sunshine the airship was seen at a great altitude approaching swiftly from the direction of the coast and rocking like a schooner in a rought sea. It flew directly over the Helena, whose crew distinctly saw fifteen or twenty persons in its cars, which were connected by a covered gangway. The men wore dark, close-fitting tunics, caps like hoods and goggles.

"They watched the Helena through glasses in a kind of turret in the fore part of the airship. The crew of a quick firing gun were at their stations and a great naval ensign flew at the stern of the gas bag.

"The airship circled the Helena twice, then appeared to be satisfied and after exchanging signals returned in the direction of the coast."

According to dispatches from Copenhagen the Zeppelin wrecked off Esjberg yesterday was the L-4, whose sister ship, the L-3, was destroyed on France island the day before. The L-4 was in command of Captain Count Platen-Hallertund. Four men of her crew are missing.

The Copenhagen correspondent of the Daily News declares that the survivors of the L-4 attempted to conceal their identity when taken to Esjberg.

"The Germans declared at the official inquiry at Esjberg," he says, "that they had escaped from a wrecked fishing boat which struck a mine, but the magistrate refused to credit their story. Then they confessed that they were survivors from a Zeppelin.

They tried to steer in the teeth of the gale, but the motor smashed

"In Wednesday's night storm the airship got into difficulties. as they neared shore, and, driven down by the snow, the captain gave orders to set the ship on fire and leap for their lives.

"The whole ship was ablaze as the men leaped overboard from a fair height, some two or three miles from shore.

"There were fifteen men on board and four were lost. The survivors swam about, clinging to the wreckage, and eventually reached shore near Varde, where, realizing they were on neutral ground they made for the railway station and tried to escape by a passing train. One man broke both legs in jumping from the Zeppelin.

The men will be interned at Odense.

U-16 SENDS FRENCH STEAMER TO BOTTOM

Havre, France, Feb. 19.—The French steamer Dinorah was torpedoed early today without warning by a German submarine a few miles from the French port of Giette. The German torpedo failed to sink the Dinorah but stove in a plate below the waterline. The steamer was kept afloat by the crew at her pumps and she was towed into Giette. This is believed to be the first case of a German submarine attacking one of the allies' vessels since the declaration of the war zone went into effect. The Dinorah was being towed outside when she was attacked. The submarine is believed to be the U-16 which sank the steamer Ville de Lillie on Tuesday. Several fishing boats were in the vicinity when the Dinorah was attacked. These fled into Giette and assistance was promptly given to the steamer Dinorah when the news was also flashed to the French naval base.

Following the torpedoing of the Dinorah it was announced that all sea travel between Giette and England would be discontinued immediately, London, Feb. 19.—The Norwegian steamer Belbridge struck a mine off Dover today, according to the Exchange Telegraph Co. The Belbrige was bound from New Orleans to Amsterdam. The crew was rescued.

This is the first neutral vessel to have suffered damage since the German war zone proclamation went into effect.

NO CONCESSION SEEN IN REPLY

Cabinet Officials Believe Neutral Vessels Should Keep Away From War Zone Waters

Washington, Feb. 19.—The most important cabinet meeting in many months was held today in President Wilson's library, and the issue between the United States and Germany over the war zone declaration practically was the sole topic of discussion.

The German reply to the Ambassador's note was dissected and it is understood that the current of action and the policy for United States to follow in the event that a German submarine might sink an American ship was gone into. The prevailing temper of mind in Washington today was that this Government would state the possibility of being drawn into the European conflict if an American ship is sunk... Most of officials, however, refuse to believe that Germany will permit an American ship to be torpedoed, because of the consequences of such an act. Administration officials expect find the slightest concession to the United States in the German reply to the American protest. They believe that it makes the warning stronger for all neutral vessels to keep out of British waters.

THE EXPRESS SAFE; BANDITS MADE ESCAPE

Washington, Feb. 19.—Police of Washington and sheriffs and constables of Virginai counties near the capital today are searching for the two bandits who threw the express safe off the Atlantic Coast Line Florida Special soon after the train left here.

The men, wearing masks, appeared just after the flyer left Alexandria and bound and gagged Messenger Chambliss. They could not open the safe so they rolled it from the car and jumped when the train slowed down for a grade near Franconia. The bandits got nothing for their work, for the strongbox was empty.

GOVERNOR IN WATERTOWN

Albany, Feb. 19.—Governor Whitman left Albany at noon today for Watertown where he wil laddress the Lincoln League. The Governor will return to Albany tonight and leave for New York. Tomorrow night he will attend the anniversary of the 22d Regiment N. Y. N. G. in Brooklyn.

BURNS BEATEN

Vancouver, B. C., Feb. 19.—Joe Bailey, former light-weight champion of Canada, regained the title here last night, defeating "Rough House" Burns in a 20-round bout.

STEAMSHIPS STAY IN PORT

IN LOCAL COURT

The civil action case growing out of a debt of $350, between Eugene Ingraham, plaintiff, and John Belaski, defendant, was being tried out in city court today before Judge Wilson.

The courtroom was filled with mechanics of various trades. The trial will in all probability last two or three days, as many witnesses are to be examined on both sides.

The suit is for claims growing out of a contract in which the plaintiff built a house for the defendant.

Attorney C. E. Guile appeared for the plaintiff and Attorney F. G. Spencer for the defendant.

JOHNSON NEAR BATTLE GROUND

Willard Rounds Into Shape to Meet the "Big Smoke" And Win Fortune

By LEWIS T. MATSON

El Paso, Tex., Feb. 19.—"Fight! Fight! Fight!" Thatis what every one in Juarez and El Paso is talking about today. But it is not the revolution in Mexico they have in mind. It is the coming fight between Jack Johnson and Jess Willard.

Now that the apprehension over Jack Johnson's whereabouts has been cleared up the doing in fistic circles has taken on added interest. Word from Tampico that the big black champion had arrived there and was leaving today for Juarez (the scene of the battle ground, has spurred those staging the great bout to greater activity.

In Jess Willard's training camp "hard work" was the rule. The big cowboy has been taking things rather easily, owing to the uncertainty as to whether the "big smoke" would arrive here on time. Now that the champion is on his way Willard started today to put in some hard licks to his training, in order to put himself in the best physical condition when he steps into the ring to try and win the title and incidentally the fortune that goes with it.

Johnson's training quarters have already been selected. They will be just on the outskirts of Juarez where the big black will finish up his training. Reports from Tampico say that Johnson is already in good condition, showing that he has put in some hard licks for his coming match, and that he would requier only about ten days to put himself in shape.

TWIN HAD TO QUIT

New York, Feb. 19.—Jack (Twin) Sullivan of Boston is not the same fighter he was in days gone by. He essayed a come back stunt last night with Jim Coffey, the Dublin Giant, but was forced to quit in the sixth round. He made the mistake of going against a younger and stronger man and only his pluck, craftiness and ring generalship carried him along as long as he did last.

RUSSIANS MASS 300,000 TROOPS

Will Be Used to Drive Back Germans Who Have Advanced Seventy-Five Miles

By Francis Lavelle Murray

Petrograde, Feb. 19.—The latest official report of operations issued here says: "On the front from the Niemen to the Vistula fighting continued on February 17. It was of a particularly desperate character in the region of Augustowe and also in the region from Sierpec to Plock.

"On the left bank of the Vistula (west of Warsaw) calm prevailed.

"In the Carpathians the Russians repelled a series of persistent attacks on the Austrian front at Svidinik. On the upper San and in the regions of Koziowa, Tucla, Szenchouwa, Wyszkow and Klauz we are continuing to repel incessant German attacks. The Russians are now delivering a series of successful counter attacks."

German armies are continuing thei terrific attacks upon the 300 mile Russian front between the Niemen and Vistula rivers, but it is officially claimed here that the troops of Grand Duke Nicholas are successfully withstanding the assaults. In the Carpathians, because of indications that the Austro-German attacks there are weakening, the Russian troops have in turn opened an offensive and have gained a number of successes with their counter attacks.

On the northern front, Russian reinforcements have been sent to the region of Augustowe and Plock over the new military railways which have been constructed since the war began and it was asserted here today that the armies of Field Von Hindenberg are now confronted by 300,000 fresh Russian troops who will take the offensive as soon as the German's heavy losses compel them to slacken their attacks.

Claims made by the German war office that 64,000 Russians retired from East Prussia were branded as "absurd" by Minister of War Sukhomlinoff. Today, he reiterated the claim that the Russians effected their withdrawal from German territory without severe losses either in men or equipment.

An official statement issued at midnight admitted that the Russians in Bukewina had retired to the North bank of the Pruth river, but the military experts here declared this would have no effect on the Russian campaign in Galicia. The correspondent of the Bourse Gazette at Lemberg telegraphed today that the Russians had gained all approaches to Usek pass and that two columns were concentrating upon Ungvar pass, the capture of which will permit the Russians to pour into Hungary.

Berlin, Feb. 19.—Capture of the Russian town of Pottegan, 18 miles northeast of Pilsit, is announced today in the official report from the German General Staff. It also claims other successes in the eastern theatre of war, as well as in the western, where hill No. 600 in the Vosges was taken by storm.

According to the official report the Germans attempted to resume their offensive in the Champagne district of France, but their attempts relaxed under the fire of the artillery.

Opinions

Carrying Children to School.

At least 43 States authorize the transportation of pupils to public schools at the expense of school districts, according to a bulletine by A. C. Monahan of the United States Bureau of Education. In certain States transportation at public expense is permissive only, in others obligatory. Ohio, for example, requires transportation for children two miles or more from the school, while other States require transportation when the distance is 1½ miles or more. In several of the States the school authorities may pay parents or guardians a fixed amount per day for transportation while Maine, Vermont, Minnesota, South Dakota and Oregon permit payment for room and board for pupils in homes convenient to the schools where the cost of so doing does not exceed the cost of transportation.

As to the means of transportation, the bulletin says sentiment seems to favor the school wagon where properly managed; yet while the wagon is the usual form of conveyance furnished, many children are transported by steam railroads, electric cars, automobiles and even by gasoline launches Competent drivers are essential in any plan for transportation. The character of the driver is so important that State legislation in some instances, for example Wisconsin, requires that each driver contracted with must be of excellent moral character, trustworthy and responsible, and must furnish a safe team with suitable conveyance. The kind of wagons used is regarded as so important that many States purchase their own wagons and hire only drivers and teams. The best wagons are those where the driver sits inside with the children, and where there are glass sides instead of curtains. In cold weather rugs and lap-robes are used and sometimes wagons are heated by means of oil stoves.

The cost per pupil for transportation, as given by the bulletin, ranges from 10 to 18 cents per day. The average expense for the school year is about $23 per pupil.

The Value of the Mayor's Bread Letter.

The letter of Mayor Mitchel to President Wilson on the bread question, which was considered at the Cabinet meeting in Washington yesterday, will serve two good purposes. It will tend to hasten a comprehensive investigation of the foodstuffs situation in this country, and it may also discourage an artificial advance in the price of wheat.
